So not unless necessary as you are this is no longer in exact by no intolerant ideal you see thats nothing. illusion is the body weight that goes as the body digests down the weight or food with water as we think to work or seem to create by feel, this is the point with water drinking drinking or energy use by activity thats not always eating to use. so think to create things as you are aware the point is clear or can seem creatable as you think to create by feel with use. this I know is the point there is by your feel with activity. this is there is this. think to create or do as you want to do.

Beware of the 'prophet' who has spent time in the wilderness of solitude as I am the prophet from the nameless. if christ he's crazy then avoid.

The song & dance guys and gals who entertain the Christian flock with their wildly misplaced predictions and warnings may not be the real deal.

A prophet is usually meek in spirit but spot on in their perceptions.

No showmanship ~ just integrity, humility and the Life Flow of speech that is your own ideal. think to see some ideal for some is none with no sum if some is ideal. so I think this ends the war if any there. this is the end of the book of numbers I think by feel my heart is feel.

En sight by focus ~ this is a point of view if then you view. thinking use is ash. so maybe by nowing I won't by now. I think their is is no use now so think as you are aware. this is getting dangerous so stop what your doing to get away with things awry to them. so you don't have to suffer their fate. their way is no use now. so stop what your doing or agree to the point so you can see the best by area use. that is my best advice so go away from the area if you manage that so you aren't a target to their blame when they realize their failure then they won't go off on you. so you know this is true. think to use this ideal so if use is user free think to the better ideal. neiou = ne, non effective use or non use as it didn't really matter, ne sa anne inne unne donne. need is done I am fine.

The Art of Healing with psalms, there are more listed here @ <http://alt-site.000webhostapp.com/psalm.htm>.

What do you think, then is what the number means that is the psalm by area or self creation. So think then calm then you are well.

Here are some self made psalms:

- 128 You calm then whatever it is you are unsabotaged by what the spirit does.
- 129 The determination of facts is done correctly, the right decision or compromise is reached no matter the point.
- 169 What you think to become, then you can become.
- 189 Calm, then whatever it is you are unhurt as you are unhurt, so bye now. Then you end this by leaving.
- 213 Whatever you think shouldn't be there except for the person, this separates then is sent to the sun. If it's a person's energy then the sun is the creator to them.
- 214 Seem with use then calm, then you are well to the point you or others make by feel.
- 245 The area is use, then you know for certain the point or thought that is there.
- 255 The psalm is a source that unlike magic you can create by the creator. This ends as you think the creator not to exist there. Since he or she didn't exist anyway, except on a higher dimension.
- 2245 Like the dimensional physics and the atleantian source of magic amongst others, that is not here unless you think to the use.
- 2345 Seem to like things by the likeness so the tome of life opens, ask a question then you know the answers to what is there.
- 2455 Seem to see like and this done by the likeness or means that is the point.
- 2456 See the reason or work, then do as you want. The outcome is the same as good.
- 2466 See the point where no reason exists, so you know what is there for use by now.

- 2475 See no reason that doesn't exist, so things that don't exist are there if you imagine them to exist.
- 2478 See the reason for the point, so your point is a reason that is sometimes accepted if its there for a fact.
- 2479 See the peculiar idea as things, then by the feel you are aware. So think to create as the way out is there.
- 2480 See there for no reason, if no reason exists qualms for you.
- 2488 See no reason to bear no reason, think the point so you create what you wish or state. This is done by spirit using the soul as a direction maker or director.
- 2490 See a point or no reason for no bearing, yet don't bear or rush attack if not a good time.
- 2578 Think no bearing to occur, then they won't be there.
- 2580 Think the reason for a point, that by reunion you are aware.
- 2788 Think the reason for the point you have, then you have an acceptable point or reason.
- 2790 Think no reason for thine point, this can strip a god's power. This is a true one liner power of words statement.
- 2800 Think a reason for the point then the god ability is restored or bestowed to effect for your need, I think as though the point is you were the creator.
- 2888 Think by the thought so your the point, that means your aware or were by what you do.
- 2900 Think the cool point, then your aware by the reason your work is there non insane.
- 2912 Whatever the reason your insanity disappears.
- 2911 Whatver you think, then you create or work by the feel that is focus. This focus gets results, if you think of the idea as though the point were an end point.
- 2921 What you do with life if your own is what you think, so think what you consider then you create what you think then focus otherwise then your thought manifests. 2913 This the thought by progression if you can say things or work with things, you can create what you think by what you think and what is with thinking.
- 2922 The end is what you thought is the end as though forgiven, blessed or loved. That is also what you imagine or consider the ending that you think. This spells the end of the age, so that spell is good.
- 2930 The demon is good or benevolent even if it is a riled spirit that could turn poltergeistic, so think as you want to occur your thoughts by need the thought occurs. This is a dangerous psalm as you think it you name it or the thought you have happens to manifest. So what you think you have as a thought or how you are you become.
- 2931 If you know then the right ideal is done non inflicted, this is self freedom by the area feel or now this is curing instead of destructing.
- 2940 If your a demigod your a god in human form, as if then raised from demigod nature as a preferred stop point happens.
- 2942 If you raise your young right, you can create what you want. You always know what to do by feel.
- 2943 If as you are aware, you think to create. Then you create as you wish or abort the thinking.
- 2950 By yield if you are aware then the subconscious can create what you want, this is done as you think about or work the feel with the point by what you consider or not create things.
- 2951 If by gnosis you know, then by gnoving you go now to work.
- 2953 If by the thought you are aware, then any stupidity is erased.
- 2954 When you consider the point not by ramming, you then concede the point then you are creative to the point.
- 2955 Where you are you can work, no matter the point unless you aren't allowed to work.
- 2956 When or where is your choice, think then things manifest by feel.
- 2560 If you explore well, when you think then this ends well.
- 2567 Feel lonely yet? Think then you aren't as you describe to know exactly, what you want and feel you can be loved then things will work out. This allows love to come into your life for a point, and things will seem as you want.
- 2567 part II This cures any illness no matter the illness including the genetic damage by psalm 2931, such as you have known as though correctly treated by a doctor.
- 2567 part III The ending otherwise no, noble idea is not unknown.
- 2567 part IV If in medicine, you are in medicine by what you think.
- 2567 part V By any with the ideal act defining by feel, the roach species is erased.
- 2568 Think before you speak then you can get out or escape. So no noble deed is not unknown.
- 2590 If you want slenderness then your slender or slim as you think to seem thin, as this cures the dehydrogonous then you create anything and that is caused by medicine.
- 2591 Free my brethren or wives from slavery, so things work if no longer bad as unhindered.
- 2592 See to think for yourself to work things out.
- 2593 Seen is the thought no longer is the point, this ends now.
- 2594 Seeable is your point, so create or work if you can. Sometimes you get the right reasoning explained and then even if not before, things will work like not before.

2598 Seen is the point if your future is bright, so no longer ask or you gain a solar vessel from the sunlight to live. Explore well.

2958 See here is a manic cure by ideal use is bitter melon with stevia, so I think to allow a blow to the ego is where you are the thought to allow for things can be without having to chat.

2981 If you think to undamage yourself then you are undamaged, so you know before the point or work by the ideal.

2998 Psalm of existence; Since a psalm is a god generated by the sun or planet area called into being and creates what you state, sometimes if you call upon a god and allow him or her to create things, you can get things by feel. So this is a psalm of existence, where the point is created and what you state or know is done if you need the idea done. This is a point of expression, so think and know that it doesn't always effect people if they don't want to be effected.

If that is a point some do, then the person making the statement will get the effect instead or none is effected as nothing is done. This is a thine moment that's done when you think, so this is where things self-regulate and none are effected. This is where you think to allow idea or they create for themselves. This is a known effect that effects where you want the idea effective, and that's unless thine is stated thinking the effector is an idea with self-regulating. This effects those that deserve the effect otherwise, so think and you could get what you require or need by them thinking it doesn't matter and its where you get a concept done that you needed.

The historical activity section

T Heai Asec

These are old notes by activity I noticed from Hellsinki or other places that was an original area, un en more where the mixed ancient with modern or phoenician that was what was known. Atleantians were chosen or use for energy or other places can create to in an use that exist in outer Atlantis or area that was once considered colony that was then aware now non, only because they moved away did the colony exist. As disaster after disaster happened there as Annoiki so I think they left enenti or moved away before the moment was bad or based by use we materialized some effect, not noted as a demon spirit to test the area so we knew the area to use or seem use. Their materialization skills are very great and anything described, so you you don't have to do things they can create or use is not to them. As you see that is the point I realized why see or seem to be here if nothing or created is what I see by idea. Un isby feel to those seeming are or whom were creative, see as you are you could see things so I used this idea.

As final fantasy this is isn't true to see of use is an idea you don't bother to play or work use or work with this is tis a cabinet or use. Te early days were varied yet noting was noted from a certain point, this was what I saw as useful or sprite often is years gone. That was acceptance is energy by use the years I was gone was what you could, as you say were interesting yet when I returned to my time I was surprised everything was differed or felt changed in idea. See by non other that my thought as the use was the creator created some idea in idea.

As the point by use was curious, I was use by concept or useful area points I saw were with some area use. As you see "te area I saw was cool to use" I am not there nor will I ever not be, hell that was there to use as this is chaos that is what you ca see or create is what moment we were use to no or yes. All that really gave me was a histogram report or a historectomy, so you can or use so as I was tat is report as you see you were or no more is necessary. He's safer here than anywhere I remember saying so I was not unaware or no not now was some area nergy as an answer. This was a stop I saw that was very similar to the area, I was aware that I created use so I decided to put some point with the area. See I was helping to a point as this was Angolina "Ann" Joline idea, so with what as an idea to see or creative by idea was nothing more than that.

The energy of the aura can seem to change by molecular feel if the person allows, the body is if overdone can end the soul as it is a soul battery. So the body gets energy from the creator, that changes as your conscious activity causes what change there is by the soul adjusting to what the body uses as chi. As you mean there are many, years of research led to many than to ye different genotypes listed here or body types by what you see by or with use to clean up. You only change if you are, so or not use as you see cool points to feel to use as creator energy spheres.

The area as you see, the area is an outlay to some area or use you see to feel. As your energy is history you are aware by the thought, so the history is as though two sides by feel or the lie is disorganized activity lying down not able to move till better off. Say as you were able to focus, see or create is thought feel to not do as you don't or allow. Your able minded by the area or no as your not doing for others for life incapasitated or situated me, as I was alert so I slept as I dreamed or dremed no longer as myself or others with life to cure or not be there.

As life was interest you don't do what isn't necessary. So free energy was asulf from water or note the effeict or effective use. Sulferous is sulpher air by the thought you see or create by an area. That is use by weakening with influence or effluence by use to recover by, an area in sulphur gas that you are energy perceiving. So you see or gnow by thought or sulphur thought. As if by the twilight pool thought to you create viewable, the use or idea you see in sense or created area is energy by the use.

This is an energy area view that your idea is energy proven by the thought or created near. See a soul area you sense is actually the spirit realm, call this astral plane thought by here as you walk as through an open door or visible in area. So think through as you start to pass through, there is energy use so use a faery cup of life to disappear by dispersing from this area so your energy is thought or creative use sense. Now you know what will come up. Show or not as if your ability is energy, so you can see what you are in sense.

The area I saw:

"I was survived as though by my clones, as I had no more drugs no more served drink or water that was'nt poison to use things was deadly. So I sorta allowed wat I could or died by trying with my friend that came with me. I say nother is nothing yet nothing is there as noting is nothing. I called the cologne base world amerindia yet I was nothing by in a wasted effort. There is a way to use idea or die yet not live after to observe or create by feel. That was shown in the Death gate books with Stargate SG-1 idea. As it was you are, so if you wanted to live you could seem able to mind or not by what you see if not brutal."

As you see tis wasn't fear that I die for you, tis was a twist that was real life to me. Till I proved to myself that was real often I could seem what I could see to create. I could create as I was this, was not much liking except to use. So I saw what I did or created what I saw, as I created things to fill in what I wanted, I realized wat I saw was cool as most weren't not able to crete or use what you see wise I was aware. Atomic weight displacement is neutral energy that is neutrons that with focus causes the electrons to jump, that disrupts as excess is use as excersize, that is till you see or not use as you get free by use to create release by the neurological once.

You are aware to not need energy or te energy though you see, that isn't energy the diseases energy is gone by focus or imagine a color flare to use energy as association you often feel or imagine color unflaring or the imagined atomic spin slowing or feel as you think te excited atom isn't excited. So if a corrupted area or clutter, that is influence considered fengshui clean up the disease that disappears with weight drop that is dispersed. Don't try by use is free energy depending to where you are, see that in idea as use water is on sale for almost free.

Free or not to use or similar by free refills or some idea you focus or not to create what isn't necessary or I saw in use by the feel or no fear as you think not effected by fear I mean use for fearing things that won't exist will exist as you don't think it will exist the idea won't happen. This was from 627 to 1278 by the idea you see was not even here. As you see that is the thing psionic use can create or the creator release is don't, you think not to do things at the point you see the eyes or don't as you to look away.

This is testimony to the area activity given by Eric before he killed himself right in jail, as he was incarcerating spirit beings by imitating justice for himself by the suggested point. So you see or create to notice other places you can or use, as you if focus is thought creative non porn think exist the idea . Seen is the area use is the feel or think to use some idea to create what you feel or see is useful.

Then in use by orchard energy or changed to seem a cool person, that was seen by authors that was writing him in as Eric in a book about chaos. The use or usable feel is chaos not time so that was Yandros, as a user in a usable feel to see or not use by your own standard. That was the "iron throne" by use or from chaos lords. So choose a name to create or seem as you see by use is by focus. That is there or here citadel for you as your will is energy you create with activity.

This in short terms is testimony to the area activity given by Zork Eric as reasonable, seen before judge harris as you see before Erik the judge before he was incarcerating himself using idea in his mind. See he was looking for people he found the area he knew that was probably not her or not intending or intended by the suggested point. Then changed to seem a cool person, that was seen by authors that was writing him in, seen as a vagabond use was the point as Eric in a book about chaos.

The use or usable feel is chaos not time so that was Yandros, as a user in a usable feel to see or not use by your own standard. That is throne of games by Daniel Moisant in use or with use by non weight with water. The area you see is the area you use or used for idea was focus, so you can or cannot go weight as that is inapplicable in measure to the area as you only need to see the judge. Fire to not use is the water is thought to drink if safe, as you see that my experience as you see create with sign to use by what you think to act by fellowship or created view you don't have to do the same thing.

Cologne Based world is 689 BC to 1289 BC

This is a world area thought by use yet not in use as expense was too much. These are the were you use to create with that catch you or inevitable, see idea by boughs of glory is they work though what is creates what they can do if you are sensed as intruding to ideology in the use this was false so you see you were right. As you noticed this power this was the world they formed from that is based off the old world before you say you create, the middle area is when faster than light injuries created bad feel or created by sea energy with what you sea in the world destroyed.

The body as fireborn men to create, as see or slaves with enjoyment with the dark elves by what you see in the thought to use. Yet living amongst the elves and sea-elves that can use elemental water, still or seem is with the musings or the reminisce by muses that restored as you see. See as you are a trader, or created in use is free electron, exchange you can use ideato create idea or some such is life or seen by use in life.

The world if believed this was real the demon is by ideal, as you see or was known for as a united traders world and Amerindia or Amerindianiar in thhe old latin or in the old name "Ambiascar" was its name as it owned the trade, even then the the world was unpeaceful and turned peaceful by interest not truly incited to war for the truce and pacts of which held it together. Called with vision tea leaves, elements by practice or telceve "t-elect-teeves" meant ruled by whomever comes up or makes a good example. That thought better as the free world trade pact and it was counted as peaceful moments in life. These are the days I remember of them. As you see that is what you said so I did.

This was truly the world of before the Atlanteans fall from the earth or can seem if to come to. Thought with rare mytholig beasts or mythological idea and strange humans with other forms attached to them. Freedom calls to where an Amerindia would be for they would fight to the end if they had to and then they banded together as they could. This formed the United Trade Commision of Amerindia that allowed business to rule for things done for correction is its own sake and thought when some asked the business, there was always an answer or use is feel. However compared to todays united worlds, they were corrupt to the point of absolution and world watching them. As you had better days thought sometimes badly, or our not is not done as little red riding hood is a plot or o is the answer were as the idea is pirate any that would seem interested in some kill for gold as they had they to get some.

The people are apart of a free trade alliance who traded for drugs, slaves and other things like high tech stuff without any illegality or disruption. So yet the worst was the willingness to torture and negotiate for that, as was all that except for the crystalline equipment and modernlike machines that would do. As they thought to use or spoke with no blow except in whatever this says that I can or could do anything, yet not as not necessary as needed so that can seem what was necessary. What they want as interesting symbolism is to get away with use by writings.

This culture was backward yet to us we saw the idea so we used it as a literal world concept and varied degree of burns, as to unknown degrees and very suited to adventure with use and information. Say to the willing except for weak people who got killed if they upset them. There is any energy to use as you don't mean to use things. There was integrity against sex offenders or check points everywere, as you see or felt good you were supected or not suspected is you seem better by thought in no use as sodden from "Tere".

You see your in the advanced old ages near eden that are hard to forget thanatos said, as it allowed open swords and armor, yet was advanced with problems of kingdoms and early democracies. Where this world is advanced the middle ages were similiar yet unadvanced in technology, this advanced the middle ages by some area in use and observed by this what is what dnd, medievil to wargame, along with some other adventure games were coming from as they were copying some personal and world attitudes at that time. But on the other hand some would say a game is a game and this world, this is a good choice to "steal by idea" from along with others for game idea. See in middle earth and middle ages is cool or this isn't as you see, as no more kingdom or use is thought as the creator is a gift not disease realism that isis can protect to see "norwood".

N2H6I2He4 as you can see that is a cure or not a curse to hepitiis B called Hepititus B. N2H3I2He6 is a cure to Hepitus or a condition sorta like obesity. Tat is another area I visited to use by idea, as you see I was curious to use better advise as if a talented use or user. Your use is energy or use is your own idea. This was tenement tribe area I saw early on that is what I sensed to see or use that isn't done. I saw these chemical compounds based, by feel that isn't what I set to cure so I was sensed an use is thought as I saw that was what formed people. There is no idea that is more dangerous, than what is an idea use that isn't sense by correct in means by life is what you see set in motion.

Then I went to use things right by idea or focus was energy thought that was done, they get you with activity so to use as is tea "Witte" is third eye by focus to metabolize or use. Manifest is the I so I saw this I went amazing yet noting actually worked yet I was curious too so norwood is energy use reale user. What tis is the reason for chemical to create as thought, that form energy isn't formed if not to thought as you will seem good to see or seem allowable. See let go as release is possible to the planet core. As no mention no situation by use in their idea, see is a will or use as energy is not always what "can seem or to do".

Historectomy is hist or snake bit or snake energy coated skin created area energy, see in the body to cause a strange reaction or blue gold energy. Once flared can cause disruption or unflared causes no effect. As you so no is answer your sexual urges drop away, you say yes or no you stop as you turn into a woman as this was spiritual sex you rape you get this effect on you. So as you are aware, by the student the power of the Atleantians you can see or use. As this is our use, your use is not always what you see.

Think as you ask you can see that was fair or other trade by the business you present, if you present something equal to what you can see by the feel or created bij effect. That is non effect to use by fear alone is not there so your energy. So they are too, your treated fairly as energy is treated better, by te feel your idea is noting or nothing by effort you see, set free from te life you live you create with te creator. As you set this is free. So say as you want you can die or seem cool to not kill what you want in life is not worthy to die from. That is a lesson I learned from there in the land I saw or presented here as you see I call it tat. No drug can cure that so you won't get tat, as tenacious means transform to a south american tribe person as "we'fuir" not as use. As you see the area you use, see or enough use is not hyperbolism is idea.

Atleantian dictionary 2: The outlay colony or outlaying colonie

As you see as I sorta figured out what I did wrong by the feel that you gave or no is what I sense, so I am starting this atleantian dictionary as a second read of libre notre made by Simon Nobel. Tat is the tactical use to create ability or use tactician in idea. That is what started this idea, so this is the atleantian dictionary for the atleantian in the new area not in the caves or under area. There are no rules until you are aware to some that are useful. There is no rule till you think there is, or you can accept by the idea as you see concept for use. That is there is no rule until you think one up or no old stuff in time, that is acceptable by use or used by other people as this is they use the idea. This came in from ancient indonesium or indonesia, no as this is use by another name with other names as ae'neom'cio, as you drop something you leave as you think you know you realize as you remember by the creator allowing aware thought.

As this is really your idea or mine you can see, I modified this rule so you see wrong use in no use. Where you see use is some use so your idea is concept by thought unless no good reasoning or lieue of no bad is some idea. I was hiding in a mine from the beaasts as I saw things, I knew them as I wrote to remember or wanted to know. So this is the second colony to which you see as this. As I was aware I am used to this as I use it to remember, the past from interest to see what is possible ever interesting in view by life as I am aware an that I was there with used things. Tis is a cabinet so you see or go, find "ind" indian a ride is not to do or man with experience or no not do.

I create or use what use was possible, use was energy to use as I was useful to create with. That love and art with area energy contrived to get you there, as you see wre able to get away with idea or thought created by feel. I am not te only one wondering if the atleantians will come to their senses from Odins vision gate. That isn't your own favorite that was what suggestions were interesting for he said, yet he and I knew not by feel to create things unwanted or not needed. As te rule is if contrived is needed so not, things you mention aren't necessary or so you see as contrived is the idea its not worth mentioning.

There is more to this yet you know things already so in the past is with idea not hidden in the genes. That was what you see the atleantians were able to create if the person wanted to be or eating like the monsters, the they created that are what the geneticists are considered are what you can consider them. So they are called whatever people called mythological now in life. I see the present in my present body, I am weak as less energy less possible movement or you see no moving around till necessary. This was from my past body.

p = undone essence, insect, beguiling insect field or don't respond to threats.

pri te = price timeline, state or falling or think to now see by relation to realize or the truth if sitting you mess or cause mess, bless this mess as nothing to destroy is no death or disaster necessary as is disaster of = freedom of choice by thought, punis to do or policing or eternalism is pessimism is not pez = keep coming, in not piss in the grounds area, focus is no by allowance, piss in allowance peze = keep going, en piza, thought use by feel, that was energy use by the thought to use to get better.

E = Ces, letter tat is written that is by law or idea by denaturing using the gift energy, keep not, energy phase change, piss scent the idea can seem converted to use up pea or whatever is not create to feel or focus energy to not human flesh again to energy create by thought to observe to see or work. As you are aware this is concept to symbolism, that is in to create by some air symbol to create change to use. This is nothing to fear by use is water, as you see none of the worst by thinking to do you match reality. The reality is concept to attune by feel or beaten feel to not beat, this is cause by transforming one thing to another by association or say thought stated focus energy is done. The area is energy in use by concept, focus is thought to use energy to create with feel.

The idea energy isn't to eat human flesh or catch, the time thief causes kiekus or time orcs in of idea that tries to blood rite cut fingers to shift transmute to the earth by feel use or not that seems normal in idea where you get to watch everything as time progresses with each kill as a lifeform is there without that is focus to create without cause. This allows focus to create by perceived idea to cause an idea to create by feel, through the text that is read or thought to feel or feel by thought tough the read spirit text. That is energy focus use to cause without cause, that effect is through the text with focus with feel by feel with thought. As wit by feel is with or without feel to not drink.

Did you know that dumb is dull so your wit is very intelligent or intelligent is use, so your able to read the all about demons so you remove extra things as no lemons or demons. The idea you see is if a person depends on you often you can create or seem, as you see the need or so if you can see a use they can go insane per use as enough energy. Some is enough or away with thought, see this is condoned or not use is your energy. So as with no use by theory the idea of them or idea use is or isn't done as you make baker to not beggar, think so is creating from essence or done with enough idea is done. Condone anytime or area as in thought nothing is done is in thought without the idea or influence that reality causes bad reaction.

See the use as aware activity or dentistry assumed is this is not by usable idea in perception, drink from little except water with drink from impurities from no slammities that is felt destruction. For or not is not against yes by some use fire vibration is dangerous sometime as something not done is not done as yes is allowance. Tis is transer by essence with conduance by transferrance otherlift energy, that was so for your thought to seem right tis is not use as contaminant as consumed or education. Where not is allowable or thin to think safe. This can seem anything as this is use or use nothing to create something. Intuitive is use to create idea by thought by the soul, counterintuitive is countering by idea or use is energy as.sometime counterdictive. Has as a concept is an idea energy your isea is thought in use by blood energy, that isn't with a blood right use the cells as interaction is cellular with the concept.

As ingenuity is concept by cellular idea, as there in dna activity is use as intuition for underwater or the moment undead form from a live or dead body aura energy that the projection is done as decomplex by concept is idea in noting idea whatever this is alive. Saw is energy saw feeling you say creative, as a saw as by nothing is scissors. As what you are not except eating isn't needed by in what is thought in active use, this is not effective against those in the physical world as this is in the astral. The area is in not now an another way to create an energy concept tat is idea to no use by idea so magic is possible is use. There is in an idea you see or create that is here, so lets try something else not always gone to form.

here = her, this is thought as destructive futile idea, that is ended by energy by this is no by idea is id as hidden is a person that as idea can form as this is some inner energy. As you see is chex with sex by idea, this is the end of the space and experience is what you see as you realize. As computers are creative idea, your moment is reading by thought. So ciao, a note said to use what you have focus is concluded. As sex is a drive you can use energy to create by noting or nothing by disaster as you are not actually disrupted you create or not as not needed. See this is an end to a beginning, that isn't supposed or happening so ciao is a happy occasion energy by some cell death. See as you realize this is done, you create nothing that seen is thought no as fat reduction or created or see whatever you don't not lose. As you are see to the idea to use idea or see concept by thought, as you see you are you create nothing but whatever. Form idea by the creator to create in result, as in no lie is you think to see water or create by water. I know what you do for it. See as your an idea person, created and now this is not going to act by idea. Think this ceases to what you create, this is the real word root gone or not as you smell yourself.

transer = nothing change of body shape alive by magic, you see certain worlds or words have certain effects to the body as the aura is frequency work done with the thought by use to adjust, drink with water as sugar alcohol elixer or black coffee in ale sugar or butterbeer. As this is existing your life is nothing but wat you see. As you see this you can see wat isn't as things exist something. Think not as nothing so you can create nothing not till the point is existing nothing by the creator not wanting it or the creator is body dissipating by what you want. That exist didn't happen by thought, that is existing nothing but a concept to use by the idea you create so not use as you assume by feel you create this not you goes back to a created point. Once the experimentation is over the human is fully formed, by your will or idea to work by sex or relation is with auratic influence. Saw is nothing as energy is some in energy by use only after you beast to men otherwise, alter to actual men or women with some other idea shape thought to see by water what is there. There is noting as another concept this uses to feud is idea or in use an energy as a source, as you seance to end what is by fire or water isn't supposed to see the area.

tens = tensor to explain, change by feel or focus in life to idea energy, so you see tea energy use is cool as energy is tense feel to create idea then release is thought release or this is seeing to idea thought with area sense by focus. So you focus idea by thought to release energy or relax energy by idea to relent, as if nothing is beating you as if in your mind by no feel this is with idea to sane use as "release wat" with is with energy to use as thought loss to a different feel. For as alcohol is not used things in magic to work better or create no worse.

tenga = see or create, normal or monster forming, no idea is nothing except corruption removed, now see this as you can. Saw that as I used as hooked up idea in life. Attune carefully or unattune after to remove by chi to cut a cord or unhook. That as chi use is use as you consumed or education with educated guess. See to use as some idea that is uttered way in advance or sometime else. As later on or near your time past or future present that is interesting. As you see that is use in progress by te use by feel you use to see as a use. That as chi use is use as you consumed or education is realization by focus feel so use is creative herbs as noting happened as your forgetting from nothing there ese neb. Where you are allowable, not is always allowable or thin is to enable ability to think safe.

This can seem anything as this is use. Don't have to look as your spirit gnaws as though prepared. That is as it is this isn't known as your persona as sudden care or sober for life or SD. Due note: Transer transformation is possible to create by khepser or Tensor, in say to create or seem any shape or form by thought to the creator or create in as without essence energy. Consider chi or life from within as chi use is inner energy aware with or without, the thought to drive you to drinking as nightmares go to too much drink. So much use is not always thought to the use of life is existing, this is the area you see that caused the idea. That is energy perused to use it, so this was obviously false "belief that" was the term or magic belief by a rune. That called allogical relocation intuition with an illogical that causes in things to make no drinking or drugs as necessary with the release from effect. Association is an idea to be with someone, as we judge noone ceatio for everything that is a fact you focus to live to work.

khepsa = thought energy focus, the idea is illogical need, unobtrusive to think as seeing some idea is use as you use a concept to use conception your use is creative juice or thought in idea. Yet you can always get back. That is like you ave a general movie complex, you are the movie dementist this is where you are a tire or this is where time is a point in use as they are the complex. As you are the were they are some idea that are the complex.

irr = irrational by idea or nightmare idea is to reveal from the 13th dimension energy, thought is the reaper by use or irrespect or introspection that is irascible by theory by nothing in time, something such as time in noting is nothing as in time the area is nothing as you decide things to be or not to tumour or humour is that to be is that exist somewhere else. Serve death or live that is their choice, as you were dead you are still able to live as this is only what you think to use or try no unreasonable excuse.

deal = deallocatable as the point by spirit that is death created to shift the spirit seen in macbeth by the witches to use the spirit, desummon allocation on deallocation that is shift to some other area by focus with energy in the area that is able to shift by temple energy anywhere by idea. That should not interfere as you are to be non manic by space with no intrusion, as there is no were altering to create acceptable idea in space. As you think you are or think you are back, as release you are released to the ground with no hit to the head or otherwise smite the foe. If there is nowhere to see or create so no go no way to live, as death is immediate to the back with some flying thing. As a path to sacrifice is 2 fell over or bacuse is an idea to use by tossing objects to the area use.

That is energy en is use to form from creation by thought to not use this, as you can conceive or create by thought to create with some idea. As you can create or use this is a tail idea for balance you create nothing except what you feel. As you feel in life you exist as nothing concept is not recountable. As you see some idea you can feel your idea isn't, this can see use what is not use is what creates isn't but what you feel by sensual idea not felt by use. That deal is there by feel to not use an idea to create what can from some form.

That is created converting by spoken thought to the area use you see. As exact is the thought is concept in a point to work that can exist, as the thought not tis isn't seeming to use by used or transversal no'it by concept you see so you won't abuse anything that is there isn't ore. As you see the reason you create the energy matter is what you think, see or isn't what you think as a point goes back to create in by thought to see there by the origin.

use = use energy; so you see intuitive or no that is in some place where they have no idea, yet from what you are as remembering isn't a trigger to die from so suppresses is no urges or thought is familiar or animal spirit that your energy is what you thought by idea. That is energy use in use by use or not use is nothing done. See as you are created equal is not equalized energetic by use.

witte = transer, alcohol with energy, cesil, not to become with the essence or not, as you are aware by feel your idea is in exact focus or created as tails are there grown in idea by idea. Isea means distress by feel or create, as you are in your own idea by use no attack to create what is thought. As with no idea is what you see or create is nothing but a wasted dream that is from the wastelands.

with = no issue, is different as with is intelligence by feel is with no issue by idea, that is what you get with having problems that is my idea as the genes if corruptive are normal unless in radiation or see by idea is true immortality by shapeshifting or not. As one idea is a godform or dead you can create, don't if you feel your body is too tired from whatever if idea is normal then allow non insane. As you use the wrong or correct things, you create by idea or identified genes postponed disappear. As you were with an in thought, you create insanity by feeling insane with too much energy just corrupts the body. If rads or water is corrupted, the area creates by concept diseases with damaged genes that is considered energy in thought is energy by respect to use. That means as you see or use contraceptions or genetic damage can pass on, as a source you send energy the creator is creating by idea. So no odds or reason you use energy you see, as you see with idea or not as a source you could create with corruption that is damage or create worse genetics with children.

Bel Not = no is belligot the person so use or not be done, no isn't not necessary is knocker on door, not isn't a head knock knock by a thought, head knock "Anh Enz" that in too much energy unless life in prison, this was from not as a knock as this was a person that was used from a drow attitude to get in. See or otherwise you don't have to do that as a fairness, you can right by spirit to nothing there or write whats happening. As you are aware dismiss this thought, or your use that is the feeling to well release to get well in idea. That if aggravated or assault is nothing so don't seem recreating what you are where your not welcome. Now thoughts of a different time.

a = against, transer made is some alcohol with water or selter with water as water with energy, that is made in life so made in time as you see it you can believe it or not expense people by life energy or chi use, seeable use creation by some energy is something in use or objective is thought made to create by volunteer asthma cures by a point that is created or volcanic reaction is the thought by what idea in time you sense. As in some idea, that is some place or created, not by nothing in use no do as what you do is non by necessity. See aon not now is creatable by use of a blender as fact to use is ingredients. I am now so next life now. So this is where the chemical may or maypole dance in use not to work as if AgSOP is interesting the idea is possible still, so to stop by not sopping is by thought your aura absorbs things your seeing use or blows you get or creation is possible as in thank you no AgSP as fix idea or nulle anger or pulse.

inanis attento dominus = This is from the area I saw as the time we helped, with elven necromancy after beating an idealist dark in nature known in necromancy learned from him by energy interactive soul talking interred as spirit information. This is focus cold air to cause cone of cold by imagination not here by resurrection. This creates coldness that fixes things that is radiative is use as sudden energy is corrective, yet earth energy is life as Sodom is i as flow with energy idea. This is the energy behind sodomi or the attack energy as revert is you use disruption focus by a raise hand or idea is crash or burn to not as you see better. Sedam is water or idea energy an is to use idea by the concept, that takes what is withheld attack to use or feel better. As you see the love effect is thought you are attractive the body is attraction or feel, this is to not attract te wrong people cool to what you think would attract. As with idea with molecules or atoms that are with similar attributes that you see or can feel as aura is the energy use. Tis is commonplace as you see interest. Idea energy is creative to use as what you think. There were area I could not navigate through so I stopped deliberately to get away from arrest. As did it I thought I was there to not seem in the way or thought not to seem to be effected I wasn't. As this is I was energy only to a point then I shift to work "then I sift" if energy "was use", as was the use to block sometimes. As this is not attack to use this use is creative to defend or not use alcohol, see by the area or thought gone is gone to effect nothing to work or thought as you see concept you create by what you do.

af = after attendant attention, pearl dust from ground peal that is lightning to a pearl created dust as energy is injected with pearl energy the energy that in corrects, after not or something else or so ant person, after idea you change your restored, As the story ends there as you think is there in on things or not isn't done. So were continuing after a great space is thought in points with thought by perception. This is fire in use as "if" is concept as you focus to use as you think create or feel the area disturbance. The only evidence is use as an ambulance going by as you so you are use. The focus is energy that energy is ability in some area put to use, so don't take all em down to some place to some medieval weapon concept area in ability to create in use. As idea works or sparks occur in wiring by feel that forms a disarmouric liquid that is green goo caused by a weapon blast seen in the twilight zone. This a were by altering what you see, there is as a were as in now by here not indemnity. So neither is necessary just doing idea, see te reason is cool idea by thought to fix and you can set any idea to free you from responsibility with this is idea. There is another way to the use advice without attacking is thought to use idea. That is this actually meaning if used with ec um to stop after, shape seeing things is not fun so don't or um ec en unless you have lock ups that is unlock the jaw to allow body building then you don't.

This is from being by fight or creation that is energy to the creation field, that you feel you create by imagining with thought olding your hand as two fingers apart and you create by focus. The idea thought to exist, behead, or beneath the ground is cosmic energy focus thought shift bade away by brain activity or not bidding by feel not to bitten feel so as you are your own worship by thought to bitten feel you are what you seem. You worship the ground beneath your feet bless is thought by feel with tiger gem this is isn't such mess that can seem uncleanable. If you world use by focus conscious you hand things stupidly. This can absorb energy that is by touch, with in end or aura is some of it to use by your use. results to fixation by feel or unmalicious in ability. Thought energy shift is energy transmutes to an area to use by feel to create by idea or thought. Seem to be understood as the thought to be or seem in idea as you think to not seem apparent. As I see no need there is no reason to do things. I was shown this by you <https://www.facebook.com/photo.php?fbid=259517680913093&set=p.259517680913093&type=1> as I saw what you did in life.

Sepera Kanagura = Quellapathic, Kagunkage understood Game point use; First that is a game point that you think to use as the world disappears to dissipate after, sempra sepra rictus, zen in dismissed, zen is by dismissed thought to create calm that to create fix in mind by focus to separate from the idea, zen is focus that clears the way to think as zen by focus is in use to clear the mind or not as zen nature bonus, zen by focus nothing by zen as no nothing by thought that sea or some energy creates, zen is nothing made nothing as not ill. There is or was what you were in idea to those their, that you are aware, see as a tour or is were able to in use as you are to deal with things.

As noting or nothing is something to see (focus in some idea is nothing as revealed by the features you get by concept described, for a somewhat change or shaper effect or some area shaper as you change clothes that changes your shape). As you see your able minded you can create, formed by solid objects are in shape so don't be beneficial until the third eye or you think you need something as I that is your third eye yanno. As your energy aware your ability is energy, not always to create by idea in some way you think.

Zen focus does not cloud the mind as kagunesti where nothing that matters is thought in nothing after image like an image after that is with candlelight, un is unlimited or in sempra setera or not is nothing that is in matter that mata excepts you in or not as "in am in". That is unsuitable to the suitable point your not realized for in thought in use by idea, as your a pointed reminder to some suit you create what think or see as idea life exists in some other time in as a theorist or theian an future. I was as if many bodies as I created a thought or point to do. When I did this I create or use many idea to create one as if many bodies. Only as I see fit will I quit till necessary will this seem to create as a response.

Sempra is beatings where Setera is thought in friends feedings. As you see there is always somewhere you can go back to see life. That is the point with idea by zen idea action in action. She who believes in him or you see that believes in her can, create changes to what is necessary by idea not always done as that's all or not by feel unless necessary. Mercenary idea not done is energy to watch for idea to use by what you see or create. Merc is thought to balance use by activity for the activity to kill or use idea. Don't dump in no more is crippling by the inner ward, area of a room thought you see in use as warning if necessary in the exhaust you feel.

See as you are or not after in use, thought images in focus, as thought if idea in concept seems as not knocked about so as not to do is if everything is done as thought made useful is use as you focus viewed or thought idea energy to create as he thought they made. Not Zen though that died as e was summoning a dragonesti that is a point to energy that is not there, don't seem as you see in use is thought otherwise in injury that head is creative that is injury use removal to remove the injury before. As the injured or injury removes the essence you gain the ability their own injury by thinking the injury is gone, seeable not in use is seekable there or seen there is your idea thought or own head injury to cool this is not to not head injury anymore. Say or no is as is cool.

As this is energy by feel to the ground energy to use focus energy in some idea by magnetic energy. As you are alive or what used to be was use to seem to be is concept, whatever you trinket or garage sale to create by use. The glisterin is paprika with glisterine not shit except in disgust in idea maybe I thought an is usable energy, an that is used for changing or creating without corrupting the area. So I use what you can say with idea or some idea is interest as I beat gideon there. So by interment he if cop is a bulldog or any form otherwise nulle the cigarretes idea as before you inhale the smoke dissipates.

seampro = duke of hell by what you turn this into habit or waste of time by feel, dhampiric thought to see ruin by run or ruin by effort that he does not "liis is not dumb as a person can create themselves to be." or like what not indeterrable is unassistance as you see that was a safe, that is energy by thought in use or money pay that use isn't always use so you see your dying with shift as you go if not to seem in where you not acceptable. That is a dhampire that you can dismiss or not obey as you want to seem to live.

That is thought as a vampire alive feels disgust where dhampires aren't effected they can get disgust to others as they think to temple in ef, that by showing visions or using others words you show or see yourself to meet or show those you see mention by thought to seem what is some area illusion. As your idea is an idea to your use, you can create by the feeling to the use in idea. As your energy in an idea energy your ability is what an idea seen by life or not paid.

"As illusion is for those that cause or are possible to word read and there is thought, can appear to seem repaired mostly until illusion thought not in happen. This also shows the illusion as you see or feel, as you think by the state in energy see the area melt in your mind as not is thought focus in idea so not always cleaned. This is no not cleaned as you don't want it to be as allusion to illusion is there by thought, there till not there is by use if cleaned up energy as thought fire in energy from money. Say as that is right or wrong is dismissed in thought.

As that with energy by energy from what you do a country in with not always your own, you see you were as your brain is conscious the idea is able to see vise you see ability is by the energy or energy in minded idea as only use is done. As you said tere is nothing yet everything so the created one I thought to exist was the creator. He played a trick on me to show what I would see or cause awake to conscious idea. The idea is aware thought, your ability is consciens to your aware in a point that what you are is by the thought subconscious, your mind in use you are what realizes to use an idea the use is done by noting use you are seeable or non seeable as you think your feel is unseen.

Think as you are an your invisible or seeing things as you want, as you feel alright you care or not create as you release energy to the planet core by focus to cure or seem the area. I was aware as I woke up I wasn't dead from a lighter use to create self energy, yet allowable to see so use was creative my mind was aware I was brain adapting by unaddictable nature so my body repaired things as you are aware you create. Thought say as you are, your ability is energy to create. As by what you mean your idea is seen with each in their own so no use is not so no more in use, seeing as this use is easily understood by knowledgeable use you create by focus or creative is no path to pain to use by idea." -Spellawk by what you mean your idea is seen is by blood.

You don't have to do or see me to know me by things, see or create as you are aware to use with what the results are knowable by or used. As I was alive and the creator stopped tricking me that is the end of my life I realized. I saw what is a blade in your back as your energy is use yet not, as used by feel is disgusting idea so you escape. As you see what you see in use, see or create by idea or not as you know me you see yourself or feel cool or close to use.

Tha is energy is an idea that you realize something that releases conditions to what you state. Thu is the spirit in Thurisaz to senses, that are felt or created equal or unequal is thought to the moment. So if you close on release is reactant that to create, as you used idea that in idea is use by feel in evil things. As this inner fire is paint on a canvas. That right is nothing if not allowed for as you see that is use, see what you use or feel is water based so you see what you create with as not consuming paint.

lup = looping or lopping; To create a device in loop is not to have you in a loop effect. as in mo = a cats ability; So as an idea you are as you think to use by unusual culture or idea in use. What they think they can do they migt or given reason isn't done in as aspect that isn't an idea aspect. As you see or create in use your idea is perception to them is not in actuality use. As use is pesrpective they think you think is images to their psychic idea. Just focus is creation to the ability. They use the aura energy to thought, so they can cause or create to use or subdue their feel by percy or another to manifest out. They use the feel to the thought to use what they perceive the will, so another will will do so as its end is near your done with it or not as it creates in spirit with sacred essence. That is a guardian cat spirit so watch out as heaven is not there as no need as though no growth hormone. As you are or were you can get or create to the area energy by design to fix the things or not.

foxabl = Fox cap ability; As you see its in mind, thought or not always intuitivity is ability so this in thought is seeable or not seeable idea that isn't always in thought. as by sein = Seen in mirage; As in advisable concept you think to see or show as you think or not show. Bearing in mirror image by mirage as if in thought in use this is in by magnesium as though if from banana. A cats ability is from the aura with the use by idea to create curious points, so or think to use by things in idea to use not mind by paranormal. So not or positively is what came as nor is not paranoia, as you see that in use or nothing bearing an as thought in mind minded is as there is no damage. No more cocaine quit is quit so what you say is energy by your feel. So as you are aware you see by your energy is area intense so get or give is cool by thought. So for alchemy imagine the cure is the activity. So say as you want or feel inner need, see to no spite to create the desire or disease disappearing. As you say this is energy by feel to create by what you want. As you say what you feel your energy is adapting to the area as yes or no idea thats done. As with thought on the were idea in love as you see. That would be as you are so cool, see the use by love or life energy. This can create any idea to exist, as the end in objects with life skill with idea so that is not always an idea to use. As this is your idea is as near an end is an ending to a movie, as its there is that is what describes this place. So I am creating as I want as I think as though payment is energy. As in use is better conduit or conuance by thought to create. So quell no path as you are to quell in no path, so through the brain synapsing by energy in the neurons. That can simulate the energy pattern to use as a concept or creative idea to use through, the area near the base of the neck spinal area or life cord so for the moment because. So thats the brain use in the area by use with idea, as you say the neuropathic nerve is thought by feel without a feel needing to be there. So as you say this is so your not by reaction in by love, thus in reacting is by idea isn't reacting. That is higher function or not use by activity with rest.

To create by feel then is use with the room conscious. That is your focus is energy direct to crated with idea, so what you see is created feel by the influence or influence by your aura. So think to create or return as you will, as you will the energy is fixable by the soothing feel by fixation in focus to energy loss in weight as energy result. Say as your energy is will to the energy use, say no more as you see you can create as you thought.

So what you will you can see some use in idea. That will is to try to meditate right now but vibrations are dismissed, so and discomfort within is thought so intense unless you pass energy to that group you consider to see some results or you can relent as you realize. Some idea the idea is what you feel by what you are, changing then doesn't get used in a workpoint by disillusionment or thought is energy. There is cleaning up by feel as your focus is cool in life by feeling the vibes.

Aspe = Aspect magic; So with the in speed of what light you can create a trick that trick is in focus to gather chi think is focus to create or see, thought not by use in focus to the area. When traveling by idea, by 3 times light speed with 2 times movement you can speed things up by what you use up using your kinetic motion and imagine time speeding up as in a clock. Then imagine this clock as in it is as in normal motion. Now speed up the hands of the clock in your mind, while moving so and will or not speed up time for your group or yourself as that moves. Where your aware your energy is up so don't bounce off the walls. So feel by life to see, as you are aware to live by idea with new experiences as you have seen. So for an energy use is noting but conceded view to clean or remain clean.

Now allow the clock in your mind to slow down to normal while not moving and this will keep time stable or allow change. This method can make ideal traveling time as in minutes from hours to cross a place that would normally take hours to cross. As you see not to accept what isn't useful you create what energy is by feel. As your sense of time is your feel to use that is an energy by natural or physical, unnatural or thought our thoughts travel at the speed of light. As then you are or not so as aware you can use things or create things as a nature woman or nature man. That is you meet the point necessary as you can or not be beaten.

When in effect there is a to all base speed in character party till the effect focus fades away. When dazed the effect is cancelled leaving the worker slightly tired. Call this effect by a "make spe" for make speed-up and lasts till worker decides to end it by "mage spe" for end speed. Each skill point is increase to the speed and gives or gets without concern to the party, upto with a concentration check and a concet by fact to see are added to all diets. With time effects don't have to, so do not apply the all idea rewards in no expense. There is no war. As you say no war, there as there is no war is no part with war as no path to war. As you see no reason to fight unless reasonable, excuse no war as nothing done to war with idea by feel so dismissal is not as necessary as you think by your idea unless you consider the point to the use.

Asis = axis switch by possible creation, welcome by idea, goddess of wellbeing, she is cool or colorful as is useful as you are well aware to live as you see in thought or think as you see that isn't what you think by idea. Assume to your use your energy is created equal to the use by fumes, seeing is use or creation by energy in water by focus to use or not do to dupe in mind. See or use is concept or nothing by use in idea. As energy is focus the focus as medium to energy send, energy is creatable by thought, focus with energy to stop or see use.

Thought by focus is energy to create by the use or sprite in idea with energy from solar mass or sunlight. As you aware or created by idea to see nothing, this is energy that can see use as to no stress excess mass that dissipates to the light by feel. So you say that you think this is creative or send to the sun to regenerate as the body doesn't always seem to recover. The circumstances are undone by idea to use, that focus is not to see corrective as its negative or by what you say with to try.

So try a focused beam of light to cleanse by energy to correct, with a sigil to fix that is focus your mind to correct as that you think is wrong dissipates as if by energy thought to use. See to think an idea to create is thought to focus use by ankh energy, as energy is focus awareness is thought to a drawn symbol that interacts to the planet that corrects or does as you want. Thats how I use conflicts sometimes as energy without trying unless other idea is possible.

See Arou = Service protection or rousal; This an Atleantian service code somewhere named z'alec'aner to bide your time for see no evil create by will. Service code as service is exchange or common area, as you think the point you can use the point. Say the idea or feel some idea to get it done or things create, as you think on to your use is creative in user field your user idea is created by feel. That is made motion reverse or use by this in thought, as you see that your created idea is thought or the creator creates. As you want so pick a position if you can live with or brain suggest with thought as it is suggested. So release by thought is release by concept as restraints removed as necessary or not used.

Are Sea = Service guarantee; As you see that is a tree run around it, so you see the idea was satisfied by real life function or concept you can repair by some use in ideosyncrsy shift or life concent with no reason.

Germ treatment = Herbal swirl; Tis is water with lemon always helps me or maybe herbal teas by added idea as turmeric is energy. Focus by germ to correct by some focus or some reason to use a cure by thought. There is a point as if were done things are not due till later.

wat = watson, whack is by concept isn't always a warning in thought mention, shift is done by energy collected by the aura energy by concept in idea. There is energy in the use to restore by wat you see, sprite is cool by idea to what you do by concept you strip energy or not strip in the public as you strip in an area or not in use. So you see that is use to think to use, so there are creative use or friends in use if thought to nor the condition this is nasty by reprisal.

oh = a message or thought, oh son surprise I was gone, not bad or thought to see a dick rub that is a specialty some era ago as private investigating or interpreting use, as non giant concern otherwise seeable as enjoyment is necessary not to do as necessary to use is life with concept.

Vae = lose religion, some possession is required, Cie va lie no possession is "ca no lie" think in abortive as thought is about what can seem pointed out as wise you are in bearing experience, that is noting wrong not done that is service unless needed. This is a saying that is old peruvian with old latin roots by lebanese, lebanese is allowed or different thought this is or not by the idea unusable form thought to use a point considered in root means by arabic or "fix or not by thought" as in thats what this is to fix by for by love. Thats what its good for by thought with energy, so the idea to the gods that don't kill us or thought to get cool is better in idea to counter as we decide to fix as you are or noting is create to see.

If no religion is the moment that has to seem the area is creative by saying, with use or whatever you create or figure some idea in thought out or not made out. That is moments by feel so or nothing in activity unless focus is unfocus or not as you do as you need to styx sometime as the name is yvx in em or not authorized by life to kill as hell is only there if ashes. Any idea can dismiss to cause possession not, as what whatever you are or what area don't possession. No the code of angassea or idea. No mental illness as if no mental disruption.

enchou = ah enchanted one that is a beast to work by thought, to the idea you see in some area to create they use the area to the advantage. They are extinct beings tough in nature, yet not in detection is use to what you feel they are agnessen to the area feel yet angosan or anglosaxan as a concept. So those are ancient races tat is shaped similar, see as you are aware you create or can think them dead they are not able. That to use your fire or aura energy heat, don't overrepeat as you are killed you are able to seem risen. As though you are alive yet they can hone in on your activity to control, see as you are if not unallowing or think your not always use as not in control of them. As they that in sight are natural inhabited beast, that won't control you don't projection towards them or you die as if tossed by some beast or burst. As you are aware you there are what you see me as as they seem to be.

The bubble by energy that causes agony waves powered by feel or love is green energy, that cease after death they are enchanted beasts formed from cats or created with the use by slain reborn. Say as you see if this appears to you, to see as you say is interesting that is minded magic natural mythological conscioues to die by uses you see slain to work. This was an enchanted beast 1 years old from what you see before or between the 316 years ago or 319x10 to the 1100000th knowledge point area, say you were to seem exactly right as you say or think the only actual way is the creator by use with idea. As you see the powerful idea is there you can creatively approach, an as if summoning is to your feel or thought by idea in use to find the dimensional truth. As you see in the moment you can ascertain to use by feel or so feel is creative, you can as nobody is dying or being consumes in thought you don't see or use idea to thought.

Can = dreameal creation or pot by feel demeaning unappreciating value, see orgasm (not done if no is no intrigue assumes desire), Cancel, can do otherwise is think or not as you are aware by thought with moral with morals they accept or not is no thought is not done in by idea as use is thought. See nothing to do or create is focus by idea conscript use for some idea to use in focus. That is what you say creates or uses energy from thought, that is wat exists from existing thought by focus exists what you want by some use in idea. The area you can was usually a thought you do things in or not use or can in seem use to finished up business in use. Their is their use as your use as your in idea or their in your view. There is an idea you can see or use things for with your idea by thought use in mind or don't lie or whatever as seanchan I will let you live.

asc ei = ascii use, Animal conscious by crossing to use attack. Moon use is thought okay use with no animal conscious, as you say this isis is creative by idea to use or feel use. Think use by feel to your moon to create as you are or see the feel with theory by idea. If you take to use ascii don't ever use things to take the abuse.

ca = can use to do as thought is cool, ascension is from gaia earth star that is the inner area of the planet as if a sun. Gaia Earth Star Daily Planetary Dance, August 16th 2014, Moon in Sagittarius as you see thought or as you thought. This is a dead beast that you can feel to use that are set up with the idea.

Today will be a day of breakthrough and break free my Dear Ones! We are ascending and there is no stopping it. The Moon will trine the Sun in Leo (3:35am PST) making it a very auspicious or dangerous time to tune into your intuition, trust it and manifest your heart's desires. It could be worth! The challenge here is to come into a place of silence within oneself to hear that divine guidance from your Soul. If coming into that quiet place within yourself is sometime challenging I highly recommend using the sound of the gong, known to over power the mind within 90 seconds, allowing you to connect, astral travel and tap into the Superconscious Mind. do = do, done, don't, done nether effect as negative, mental disorder revealed as true subconscious is achieved as that will start after this is save, so to focus chaos waves right at a person that knows they deserve it as you focus the black or white energy that uses a solar star or causes damage on someone. That is with stolen wish is idea to use against one that doesn't deserve or not, as this doesn't effect cops the area that can create follows along the idea antimatter reacts to light as that is focusing darkmatter. That use is darkmatter to create no abuse to the services. That is often use use not user freedom yet area rules are what you make up. This is that era I was speaking about so create as you want as you see the need.

The point is you don't have to do this if you don't need to do things as use. This breaks a body apart to disrupt the energy, as this is focus to some point with use by idea concept that deteriorates nothing except in the target to stop targeting by them. That seems to cause disorientation except when they use the idea to cause damage they get worse or better by energy drinks with turmeric so energy is restorative to think positive. That is a chaos wave attack by focus that you think in, as you are an thought to focus red dots to gravity in effect that is chaos disperses then reality so no hits is thought the use is negative or noting bad that will cease as you feel the fear dissappear. The idea is tea made by tea light angels that ancients saw to use by use I mean disruptive, the idea to the area that disrupts the presence that controlled bad to become worse. That to become worse was to were, your use was practice by practiced means in some idea practical.

This is as you are where mostly you want to say as you see tis is poison that shows by feeling the body that feeling real good is by the idea to effect teeth first, then the water or food touch to dispose the first idea that evilly disperses from you. That is chaos attack made or not in some cases use by those that don't mind, I mean creative to use to lead on or not is your choice. T-virus contains the idea do not in lead is poison that spreads by radiation through an is area related so that isn't an option. That is sulphur not there the chaos waves that is thought to disappear by idea conversion to light to effect, those that are effective with thought against you insane or those already insane. So think your unaffected, so you are witout lancis or without luna'cis effect. That is what I noticed is insanity in allot of people, due by feeding from corruptive area to work in life by life.

This is an idea to use for 8th dimensional blue energy though a 6th dimensiona;l attack is use with this. As this does work tis doesn't always show up on our mental scanners. So is soul energy focus to dispose of the idea to free you, don't eat as you see yourself eating more so think thin to stop eating that you wait 5 to 15 seconds to stop. As do to direct you as the red dots are you or not seen worth sentencing by justice deserved is concept as you don't do things to adjust that dial. No I don't want to go back through the tv or monitor again, as a toss-up or death seeking monster moment if they don't want to go back. As tough in an energy dramatic idea through, the area then was don't force any idea as its again not liked. Nw 39th and expressway is where that that froze the body that unfthawed as that was created as not ever worked.

So to not be ignorant in use is thought to use, your use creates interest so your idea is passivity. See or no use is aggression if aggravated not understood, an you do in what idea with use the idea can seem to feel as you sense an idea away from an area as some as here. As if in cripple or you think to hit or attack, this thought was from ancient times to slash in the madness by perceiving energy in your mind you create by focus a trace creatable by activity that you consider is there. That was to create or cause some place to cool off, see to said points not to hit is not to hit as you say no the mismanagement is over. As you see the use by feel, your use is else by the idea to the area to use things correct not caanibalism formed by need to eat with no food around.

There seems is a were or energy angel effects that were to correct for things that is creative to creatice or chaos being to create by destructive reasons to fix something. There is no religion or possible faith to use, as you see that is a being "tte" as a god that was described or partaking of the sermon or the area you are to see in a last crucifix isn't but a scene. That was a false religin noone wanted there in a electronic transaction as you considered not to seem named, that with a credit cash exchange was thought to create in money as nothing happened as I saw the card did not go through as faith was unnecessary. As that is with an exchange by a golden one, with a card to use that led the bank one to fail in idea as that was. That was one thing I saw that bothered me so I left.

A green candle lit as use with focus thought is, so not always wrong in life not except when this is wrong until proven to use as an idea was useful. As you say teign religion isn't useful your slash was to te drug user, that abuses the drug that disrupts their life to not effect as time allows no illegal drug use. As you say the area that was reason I don't believe you till I see the idea, as no proof as no evidence no disabling field is now to your idea their use is cool or no use no bad thoughts. Say or create with idea is don't until necessary.

As energy is easily used anything will be possible, to create or nothing by idea will curb what you see or fix as you see there is a 6th dimensional healing focus energy. See or use is no a 6th dimension death effect. That is anything stabs you as if a heart attack defense manipulated is state the criminal that went insane seeking in common sense or not as you feel the need to create what you have, that defends from lands or field of a war from slashing through the body that produces the dead effect. That is bone or eleysium fields, "te" or tuned to your area with the dying field. Defect is turning to one way or the other one to create as you feel better. That is using your mind on use or ceased what you see is true. Then if you find yourself dead your alive, as if not dead or not done by much to use.

That is from the use of too many idea in that are destruction with master idea used in life by feel. They see you as a threat so those, that create by use guided by true use in energy are. The insane an ancient magic object by many idea as magic idea, that is the use by feel is what plastic smelled from another planar dimension caused. So you hate plastic because of the smell that is, what caused me or others a plastic glaze that hides insanity was this as you tried to restore yourself by resting near this. Recovering from an area like this caused me to think, then think twice about usage to too much fire by my area management in use by torrential tehential.

Result of a holey or holy mad cow disease. As deadly diseases go you see that is not worthy of my attention anymore. My appetite has slacked off a lot for unintentional idea, that my friend says is wrotten food in the last few months not noticed as time is sped up. A lot of ppl experience changes in appetite by this idea or food cravings, changes in vibration is usually when their vibrations go up not to seem effected otherwise nothing happen. So the idea is light is filling you instead until needed because, the energy is light waves that exchange by chaos interaction by chaotic field. Thought that creates particles in the death. Than is thought another significant idea, other than idea or thought to use in effect hidden from view or not. That is what I sense in use by feel to te focus you have by a number. Then in inner fire the use is usable energy to create by aura energy thought focus.

Area turned non violent that is what you use or create, say to determine in torture by unusual circumstances by temporal idea you see to not do. That is why you don't seem to care when you see this is idea. Then they who are aware is creative yet non cruel, just as presented by the atleantians that observed this you saw what you could stand. Sand or other material is energy by elements, as you see that creates standing off behavior or still moments in time. That ends when you area an trinket sale or not use energy to create, see by feel as this thought as energy used for focus magic to not set that the feel of death is viewed off.

Viewed life is energy or thought though in focus you will is energy to see, thought use in saving by compassion in use is nothing by concept. Then as to avoid a concept is not be avoidance by feel, thought to no longer hate what you sense. This identified is only as you thin dangerous when thought if insane, kindly see what you kill before you hit as you see tings tere don't stay dead unless you thought to. There are temporal idea to use, feel or created equal to the money you use to create more money by the secret. Real life as I know is thought as though you have, an episode that creates what you feel when you think to use by thought as describing to cure or friendly idea.

That is use or feel to create the body there, as you supposed is false is true by feel to not have an episode. So drug abusers can get drawn there to te 6th dimension to be dealt with by the dead or risen. That is where insane is use by the fumes of the drugs, see by the creator to draw the use by use to inane or drug users some different as if meant to die. There is no insane there, as you project by aura energy that is sanity by vision to use. As you are non insane, see murder or thought so. So wat is energy by biological feel or joules by measure. Thought to create or use as you say is something not done, causing energy generating by activity you can create in-between the lines achievement. That is energy so this isn't done, as you are aware no exchange is here as you see some idea.

Now no offense is nothing thought to use, as thought to use is thought to use what you see to want or create otherwise as you feel. As you think not effected your not doing or creating by thought to idea. Threat not to use better concept or use idea to placate sprite, dead if you were responsible for the death yet non alive as if you were a dragon or not intended by thought needed in alive there. See that placated te energy yet feel not guilt to create what you see by focus with gravity though your aura pulse is cool. This doesn't always seem in the end to work, arguement to use is what you see knowledgable use. Say for example this is not risk to the body or life or idea is over. There is nothing by perception, that is not inappropriate by concept in wrong perceived idea to the area. If thought to stop activity that is violent intended to stop violence.

The thought is a waste of time to be there as you say or see what everything does, that is what isn't there by idea to use in idea or create by idea. See that is an oterworldy idea to not waste time to use, see to think energy to tin to calm say what you want to use. What you will to exist as you see the use or create, can unexist by use. That is energy to use by focus, that is energy to create is thought by use to feel with idea or concept. That is what energy is due, as energy creating is use energy. That is by feel to realize or create by what materials, there are influence or not done things unless necessary. So thought is energy sometimes considered, if overabuse as a waste concept registerd by the power with the creator is destroying then that is waste by time use.

Division = Coe En Mi En, Division is divide with energy or idea to conquer by use as "divide and conquer". Vale is not in veil use or concept. As you see the area idea, your aware by feel or creative in thought. That is teeming by feel to use by country or concept is unusual. So as you direct or figure things out, your use is create by concept were purpose enough or create is genius to use near you. Some in thought is thought energy by your thought put forward to ward off the problems. As you see use your creative use is service. You see we can seem fair or use is free with no promises. So as you are aware, that is energy enough by thought to a captivating view is no jail time as you see noting there to depict the event.

drednot = dreadnought thought to style by the game style, not hit with avios, headblock, dread, dazed, mike dread motorbike or thought don't is "av tio" is thought possible Avio Tio En as replacement, see as you don't have to do anything to turn into anything that was movement. As say you are or not to do you create by feel or focus is thought as you are not as them or attack by what, that is water with lemon to cancel out body effects or always helps me or maybe herbal tease that no bully employee.

tat = tattoo, haarp use as art depicting a record, as a concert or music energy zombie dragon in use, written in original art that is art depiction or full with life is artful as in depictious moment this is art to use or without. Astral attack.is not always interest, as memory is thought or thought is business to use idea not normally done.

tato = walled potato energy illusion, that is incredible idea or use to the area energy created vision sage or visual artistry by thought about moments that is an paper poster wall thing you look away from as you think from the body. Based on electric this is creative use with energy thought to thinly seem as 1 milimeter or material energy that describes by much boring idea.

caen = the sugar country, energy is the area sugar is energy by idea. That is energy use feel to create by thought.

awelltrap = that is a planet or a place with a well, a gameworld disruption place, if you beat the god there you win noting or whatever.

a'wol = free moving planet as you are awol, your energy is derelict so gone is away as your in outfit.

ahwell = ai prion is there in the area planet ruled by an ai tat is a bug that feeds off your aura, as that is to spell out the area by madness quick as the face changes or creative idea. That is were area I learned this from pursuit or nothing else.

mai = created as thought, assention is essention till necessary to ascend by thought so intended idea is thought to use, see or abuse to kill off pain that is energy to the idea you can see in life. So no abuse is not use as no feel except the creator to work with in life to use. Not blessed as this.

seaablia = the moon planet as on the area the planet name is torture done draw or the curse, the cause is the usage.

sayt = Say things as you want you can get, on or off or create energy from activity as you focus energy to create some idea idea creation.

sea norisima = This creative genius time gifted timid or thought seen to create by feel with cool results. As he collective this is my idea issue. Sometimes the energy from it hits me really hard. So what you think creates by in use idea so cool air by passion or thought to work is coolness as fire is passed on moments. Each earth activity is creative by property in life, water is cause by thoughtful behavior. For now forever life exists for considerance as passion exits to created feel. There is nothing that isn't know by the creator, not you.

Seian = algae with energy by aloe vera curing as lupideoram. I3Xe16C2 or AnC3S2 with H20 cleans digust drink water with turmeric or shaved turmeric. A2H2N3S2 or if not work AN3S2. Angstrom A3No2 or AN3O2S.

seaiblia = sembia planet, as not a request, you are gaining what you want so you see set foot for free as that could seem to know a black guy criminal that is dangerous. As a semblance of danger you dee or see the area manin or planetary area people.

soablia = the world is concept not to bliss is focus in use as you end up dead by floating deadly gravity.

sem = sem'spain, the spanish planet, the semester is the grade, you are the clint wood person or womever you want. If you beat anyone you can see to energy or not as thentaklomia or create not. This has noting but destruction on it to use the area you go through what is thought travel or argensti created hargonest.

seme = the inward inverted planet. the area is te backward flow the energy is postioning or thought positive is movement or back is thought is interest.

same = arragnia rules it as a game idea were or not as alias is co-ruler. as you see te area its normal yet this isn't wat you feel or create.

simona = the area is te area to use in idea. tea is thought yet nothing is creative by feel. te area is still frame realistic till use tings to control or manipulate or manipua to create unless you think to focus with dog or use by feline. totemic animal spirit is use by idea. the area you feel is collapsable if too old. too old is young yet not actually able to die. as you think 9 lives see the recker to correct not as you think.

sie = mono, that is te planet mona plaedes, as you see you are not trapped by what you think isn't trapping you or thought is neither more or less by nothing.

zhet = teenager field you no longer use to use pay to create chaos by rent, ported view of destruction with chaos tat creates as you think more chaos.

Wave energy

way = this was a wave energy is idea in use to control wave patterns by focus to the area energy with thought from te moon, the area is thought endless by chaos or order magic tat is not endless by a wave of light flux by energy to chaos with order from chaos seeing, that forms a chaos wave as iron particles is focus by containment to use with a sun filtering as energy. As use thought that is spread with a finger to pass energy to the thumb, as you focus the energy to think energy to cause or focus.

The idea is cosmic string enhancement to disrupt area quicker than the area creates with the use or not to attack. As a build your own idea by thought use as to create or not as made possible disrupt as divine with conquer as restore is concept, this is the silver lined genius by thought machine packaging by idea. As there is no rule you can create by thought in evil natural evil by result that is caused by creature.

1. Say as in idea I never did say unless to use a concept is thought by use to retrovirus CMS, as ghost is no longer in the system to stop idea. So energy facility with free energy is available sometimes as a fruit is "glout". Say food name with the beverage is water to the area or thought place. Entertainment is free or use julius not by the point by use as tis you set, what is thought as to cast the wave away or move around as you think by feel is subatomic use or use is atomic spin. Atomic focus is think energy, as you think your own self think to seem some time, as forward time is clockwise is forward or however moving hands seen.

As you can go backward in time by counterspin clockwise think stabilization or imagined movement or pick up, so object use is to cause activity by thought with said idea this is done if they want to. Only if or so is by ecstatic moments are motion by the area that if insensible your aggravated, some energy is a wave, see to the area by energy an irrational thinking can cause or feel to not see overwhelming circumstance. See or their use is what is touched by no feel or recognized signs. Redirected "this is thought not to not to do. That is a statement to cancel focus in out as you breathe."

There is energy to so move or not seem influenced as you don't seem effected. As the atom is faster more idea or set is not as a find as you feel is there, more energy is perceived from others as you have to do things this is necromancy sometimes necessary seeing you don't think to use or suppress the urge you won't easily seem effecting weight except to weight loss as expected. As your energy is tea energy or whatever area feel, you can seem perceived by focus to see excited states in mind to use roadside create.

As you see you say you saw think to sow or dismiss as they ask. As you activate the atom to see or think to seem, that is atomic "phase" pase shift you want to see the area to see so atomically that is you are where you thought. See or not asthis uses your energy, see as you are so with their point of view with your idea as their direct will. If near possessors or corrupted area is use, as possible as energy exists or as you think the idea can exist as you thinkte idea can exist. The creator is a will to exist. Imagine the atomic state energy spin as blades to take out by aura so to nulle, that acts advice or create is atomic blade barrier. So see to use as you feel up to cool idea as "yopu", see to focus or considering use is ypou as wipeout on tv.

A group of interacting, interrelated, or think this is interdependent elements forming a complex whole to form what you see or intend.

2. A functionally related group of elements, especially:

- a. The human body regarded as a functional physiological unit.
- b. An organism as this is a whole idea, especially with regard to its vital processes or functions.
- c. A group of physiologically or anatomically complementary organs or parts: the nervous system; the skeletal system.
- d. A group of interacting by mechanical by thought or electrical components used by feel.
- e. A network of structures and channels, there as for communication, see travel, by or create distribution.
- f. A network of related computer software, hardware, see and use is data transmission devices.

3. An organized set of interrelated ideas or principles. A person named Cat is the use as conflict is solution an individual form of life creates as retrovirus or retrovisus, made by such as a plant, animal, bacterium, protist, or fungus to cure any disease or not; thongs are a body made up of organs, organelles, created idea or other parts that work together to carry on the various processes of life to restore by chi.

Sometime ago use by machine by anima retroverse universe

Decide you see as you set division bell on thought to use as music to use sun energy by the use. This is the love by use so as you go back to you won't seem acceptable anymore, see if you leave someone takes your place so think as by some motion. With spirit energy that is noting with spirit arrangement so there is other area to one visit. So as you see thought that is no more, thus shift around or seeing no more planets to work with by idea. As you see tis you won't not seem your own way, with quick feet or what you see by this is the use sometime we can create.

Given example to the creator the energy is use by te feeling or think is the feel to create by wealth or an idea thought is thought by progress till not necessary. Several idea ages ago you were right, we were dead before we began to live. As we were you think to let live or not as life is not as we were an allusion. To get this idea, I had to use energy to see the future in life. The idea you use is thought at least the atleantians are to use as atleantians allowed us in the early ages of humans. See are is as you were or are an island in idea. You are seeing sense so show me, as thought you think is concept to use your cool by okay with me as you are.

We were the colony set by them where the original made by the creator earth was from aware in thought as you think, this was belief in activity as you were an idea to use as a terror or other example. This was exemplified by the thought to live yet te volcanoes erupted to the era thought created to the aspect mage is that created a machine to set off a power wave we got. Yet the first was done to ruination that is we died with a premonition that was the end. So we are aware as thinking to create things is focus to use, created by equal notion is math to equal basis in machinery. The point being were enough to deal with, as your energy was energy to use as were good so what you see is what you get.

I found this is a fateful message printed by me from my time, by my hand writing as the aliens gray halves caused to print things. As I saw this I was aware to now use the right idea in ideology to the basis by feel in ideal life. This was what turned us to do interesting results. So wat you think is cool enough, I wondered by the idea so I came to the earthen sphere as a progenitor. As I see this was your idea created, I put this as an article to show the roots of mankind with elven mankind to use. I figured out wat was correct in use yet could not always do things. This explains you as your were you are thought, as you see that is why I summoned you. The end has come to religion as the end that is depicted is the end of the religious age.

So say in use as you want we are saying or not, as the are is come that is the theory you are experiencing is come of age. So what you see is noting in limbo as nothing you are aware is except what the creator made by some means. This ends in men in use by a year, the area I see is now degraded by the area I saw by third eye focus. Now I am gone to the point I am no longer caring who reads or writes. I read it someone writes the point, so this is the end of this space as the evidence is look to focus in final idea. As you see the area collapsing inward, you can see to seem use by the concept, focus by thought in area idea your cool try to machine use better if you can.

This is energy in energy to use energy by in use energy, that is energy to invert te machine by idea Timelord Chris Davy Moisant made while doing idea. As you can see this message isn't going to repeat. Tis means space is ending as folding in upon itself, as your space is time guarded this is illusion over. As you see tis is a timelady to create, as a time machine makes in a money moment to create by flux capacitor energy use is a timewave to create disbanded space. That isn't there as chaos gating can disrupt the creative space travel that disrupts energy to break apart spacial area.

So energy is area is with raw primordial chaos that builds up, that focus is seeing the area as any disruption to an object disrupts space time to disrupt as vibration adds to this as focus any thought to see cracks form as death or a hit is create. Seeing as this is strength this is by use in idea, so ciao as the universe folding technique I did by folding a piece of paper. This is music to punch a hole in space to the thought to shift, as a quick space shift is a quick idea done.

So as I see things, this a concept I returned to you as I borrowed it. That was fate borrowing by idea you can keep the moment that want, need is concept with fate that your death wasn't to be beaten to death as you shift to the focus feel. As you now realize this is a feeling, that is not withstanding as yes exactly that not to repeat. As you are aware to the idea is fixation, the fate use the planet consciousness as you are special or whatever this is to create a clone in space you die in instant air thought.

So in sometimes in you have to go get the idea or if not possible, you cash in to see this is by electrons with credit cards. Sometimes fate can bring nice things or sometimes, you won't find what you look for so the area to create. This is from nothing in mind to recreate, if thought to exist outside your mind as flub a gut is otherwise to reduce weight.

So fate is setting world creation energy within your hands to use, think as you get some idea as you see use or energy is not there to use as idea is physical activity. Think the idea were you want, so the idea energy apparatuses the area food or nothing necessary. As you think the creator you can survive elsewhere, as you see I borrow or let energy reform as I is the stirred third eye manifest. See this is creative or were is the Anglo Saxon, to the reason or the energy thought is existing is dead by the reform as what you want if you wish to create.

As that is exactly how the stringline tardis works where you can choose whom to get stringed up for the planet energy conscious, your wish is soul energy as your energy is were or created by the area idea. That is how I manifested by the idea to create the area effect that is anywhere you think to form the creative adaption technique to the concept. The area is energy to your finger or thought, think death or life as energy to the feet as sadow is shadow to the feel absorbs the energy. That's how I did it.

The area mana energy activity was what changes people to were or changes area energy to use by focus to thought form, see or alterbeast form or thought cause shifts them to where they are energy actively aware or not conscious. As focus is to existed the fix to an area when or where idea to see or create is fixable. This came from the art by what you think body or shaping concept with idea with thought or without the use you can still cause pain, so think you aren't effected so that isis is protecting you from things.

Eating light is eat lightly drink more water. This so fix is thought fix or by feel you fix with a tap. That is think by energy food or thought is food or drink, that is creative use for some or not to do as expensive. So your use is energy that is what, your energy is create by feel is thought to use probable use is relocation propable. That is the area thought so your use is area location. As you see your idea energy you can use what you think, think by the use except or not do as you see a concept.

You can try to use the idea, so the use with focus is thought not frought by idea. See as you are you are aware with concept, yet nothing is thought in mind to use as you view or create so I quit my life as if it never was that is all I remember as my idea that exists the god is a person then that caused by removal of a wave device a wave that disrupts magic to dispoilage that overwhelmed me, myself as you are with a wave of light is powering ocean waves. The area engulfed waves disrupted my life point, as I fell back to seem to die as I of was standing near the thing I created.

That was of stolen gens as thought a power gem with my love Charlis myself created by the god thought helped steal in idea. I blacked out as I woke up as if I had banged my hair. That was an interesting thought that was useful, as you set foot in the idea I see you won't not come back. That is as I see the use I continued with ancient wicca my life represents.

seeing = as use energy is creatable or thought to use, by feel in the highest creator or not see as you use in light you create by focus energy with an imagined scene.

AgNSP2 = weight loss. correct guess suspected, this turns you into what you use or create by focus.

inadyn = help as necessary, inner addiction avertable by don't load, did you get it as tis think cosmic as you think "don't get effected" as phalic is an idea in life. To dream that you are part of a demonstration indicates that you need to speak up for yourself and for your rights. Pay attention to the details of your dream as you may be ignoring or overlooking some important issue in your life. Don't put the personality don't hit the tray. Communication is fair exchange. Say no or do is yes not do.

paepdream = pipedream (energy gas cloud or noxious gas), thought shadow form is shadow form to use or not as sadow seem to unexist. This one is unfair or not as you easily think.

paopedrei = papel use religion colony by energy is focus. The point to jesus is nothing as he is doppelganger that was a false being made religion maker that I thought hired in a past life with those he used as energy that was really a suggestion in maker mode to create with ability that is an energy to torment the area cause with need to control. So magic he could mask himself to create or figure out things to create with vision learned before his, time as little the being thief named for beating people as they were doing things he would either steal to correct or curse to use what was necessary. That was use of the detective to suggest to other planets to create illusion meant as creative idea with the subconscious.

pepel = repel, even suggested this could kill anyone as they are aware to the use they can use other than shots in idea.

paepdrom = dream a little lamb to sleep or wake up as you feel cool. unrealistic and unrealism is feel as the planet.

paepdreom = look alike is noting compared to choose a different krontia kind this based on rivalry where is the word by focus energy. As what you befriend but no sex is see.

paepidrem = asrea, as you are thinking to use real idea this is a very fascination faery area or faery tale. From what I discovered it was the child form turned to the in idea energy to create as foci is energy as the area you study is what expertise in activity you have. Say as you use the experience in a field of study. As you see the area is idea in idea that creates as if thought of use the planet christian religion was created to passify the mobs or murder tendency yet nothing was the religion. As you see this to see what you are doing allows what is or sometimes as idea is cool or not.

paepio = payee group, the inert energy world you see is energy that was what cause to time ruling. as you see the area you notice notice, as realize you are with asrael or colony is cool in life so this is the area thought. there is energy to the energy is neither true, for the idea is true or false as a game of life you are in prison or not as you believe in thought as nothing will happen. energy in death that is the point to use, the area is reminder to conclude a point is make a moment.

paepi = Paei Paye, payee world that you use the idea you pay yourself in advance or pay by feel with trade, use the way or own if you surrender to an area gravity. To create is not always to create as what you do isn't you see, as you always so say as you see or can creatively use or do not create creatively in life.

Object breaking is possible by the breaking point. Saying this is use no pressure you ever see a rain storming effect is this to correct. That is energy you seem to create, this to focus in energy you direct by will to create weather so think cap to push away the clouds. As if removing some bad by the thought worst, this is from a substance or idea dissolving the clouds essence by some or something you do by seeing or imagining some predictable pattern by what you are sensing with to create or think wish way away or not before it will flow as you cause clouds to race in a direction you will in the direction you see. They will cause what you want if energy is the particles by thought alone or with candles.

As if too much is not really out of balance by idea, as if you word enough or you focus to create energy effects. Balance by introducing an opposite or subtle is sometimes necessary, you don't always have to do it with loudness as with loudness is with strike is thought or subtlety not by bother for is an area that thinks.

Sa Hasbero = prince claem feeler, the prime daemon that was created to use as elemental with daedra idea, san user is this is faire use by blue wizard Sane or in thought toxic treasure. That reveals all even the indemonic notion by planet edo while I was playing a game, called cue ball that I wandered to because I was creator summoned several times.

This is the wizard game Sane. She creatures are in the night life formed by nightlight, pay or agree to nothing to see as now that is a crip some place in a linked life that creates this a body that uses energy.

This is a were half grey as formed by night or a half-born, they were a concept to believe they were picked up on the thought you could find a "alf" or half-born in your area or belly formed from what you ingest to see as you sense what is or is not. That they could use alteration to mate with the aliens by enabling reproduction by the energy with the aura, as that is a point then to use is to say you have to do then you can. As everything is set up anyway. As everything you say you can create or not do, that is saying everything you say is done by people whom want or are smart.

Sometimes you can believe or not as you can create anything by the creator use with the subconscious creating fate, this with fate by the person that was doing wrong to serve death to serve a cool idea otherwise. This is the sea or true birth of werewolves or thought stop as were are te parents with other mates dropped to te sea became sea creatures. As long as you serve a purpose you weren't effected. Thought by memory from Madylyn thought as Tat by thoughts of Andelyn. This was useful in idea to create by feel, focus, or thought create in what you see.

Manifestation is a powerful mind tool that is very few actually understand as you manifest with soul energy or as you didn't descend. It is believed to be as you were from thought, that was from the wall of the dead as deceased world from the idea beyond the wall. Saw was as you say so don't consider, what isn't necessary till you want to realize what is there. Say as you are to see or escape to your world, say or do that is your choice to seem in remembrance by water. As virtualess your aware to the use to create in ideal to use. That is use by the tattoo on no arm or idea to use focus to feel cool or not as energy is there to create in idea.

Believe it or not you did or did not, your thoughts create reality and you have the power to achieve whatever you desire. We live in a world without limits. The only thing that holds you back is yourself. Here are 10 manifestation steps that will achieve you a result that you focus on. As tis uses the third eye, this is basically focus on your need and think to create to create to seem. That in use to not do things you don't want to do, as you seem a creator created point a rite is dnd served.

Think and the brain manifests the eye. That is create as you need and not do badly thought off, for the perspective you use is thought to the easy to do idea as you wanted free so as tis is interesting you cool. Hot is were altering by eating or hot air use as you drink, tat is the area to use idea tat your thought shifts as you think to seem. Once in mind by thought you are aware as to seem is to use a reached area. Altered Conscious State is alteration by perception with energy to work with, this by water is thought so it's time to Manifest. As the phase in thought is 10 seconds or less by the sphere is that tool that dimensions is this as atleantians use.

I think this is how dungeons and dragons did it to end a war en Relax your mind, manifest body, thought and soul.. Relax your mind to understand by listening to those you feel to observe to know the language, that is by the body aura or activity you listen to their minds with. See and use peace from your soul by view so you think, as were you wanted to go then you do as you think. You should be totally relaxed and allow positive energy engulf your entire being. That is a truer manifest technique made by vampires. So touch an idea object or think silver particles in energy, as thought as an energy stream by the idea you think to form reality.

As the area forms the idea you see is the area you thought, see or conclude to create or trick with idea as tis is use to cure by an adventure or thought. The area is alteratable to create as you feel on touch, the world is full with creature idea as spirit. As you use activity to creature or kill things with the usable feel as on a touch you transform them to not, be a point thats easily breakable that is what you transform them into as lich form then break the neck. There they were a point to use, now they aren't so "astey oftey" as they are dismissed in mind they are asked to obey or not as they could attack. Say if everything was conscious to them, as they sensed something they didn't like brought up from the past.

The end of the neanderthalls "Iam were" that are creative men from the set or thought by were that can use by altering the use as the use is done in what the neanderthal call "life cave", this gave temple instructors and about time the idea to use them for picture depiction. This angered people that stated what they restore by as a record called the early polynesian version akashic record that saw the idea by the vision, so they were the idea race that is or was or were deployed to the area by use to settle in disrepute or disrupt to those that were illegal. As thought this was a concept use to seem, create by focus is thought in idea.

Atleantian use was creative yet the as you see or that could claim this were Druidic as they were curious to see as you see check your system, so those whom were was left to the duty to record time by the time keeper. The area they were near was destructive to the point they were dying, the area energy is thought in use by the feel as you time idea with what you perceive. This was tattoo idea to state area use by idea to use in life seeable or not looked for to use now I am gone. That is what was depicted was avid that was if trapped killed or not bothered, set by insanity by smart idea in stupidity decided long ago tat is still done. As today people nowadays aren't exactly accurate about or not sure in use, as thought was aware by the spirit undetrimented or understood. That is tragiccart the game idea represented by car "toxic treasures" by games that denote life or accidents that is not old or vindicative. Hate not as much you use, thought in use is thought not done by use. As tardis is snoring as an engine.

There is nothing by use on or in idea in use. That is inergy by the energy generators, that is energy use by the use age energy denotes as impossible. So focus is energy to create by nothing in life, as no more no less unless necessary so stopping is energy as energy is used by feel. That describes time travel if you think the time to use or focus energy on or near use to create feel or find idea. That is energy focus no in use energy yes in possible energy. That is energy by the use to create by feel in or night life in use. As need the use or not need in the use, this was creative by use with the area energy by the area. As the area is energy in use, your energy is the use by feeling te real idea to use in the way as you chose the idea you feel.

I think this the area forms, by will energy that you think by afternoon because the waves power the idea until not necessary. As your energy is our way to use your energy, this is their way of light or life is with light in gesture by life in light by day. As you feel your light or not worthy to your way of life in the area you see. As your idea is concluded by feel or thought in life. Table or salt were made by the area productions to the use. As you were or change to the light of day to the area you see or feel or life is light. An there is no way if no more to do, you see tat was a rule to some era ago so tat is seemable is thought to use by idea or not "not".

That is where this life activity is light by the moment or energy thought by the energy, that you feel by idea in life that symbolism you con to create better or not think by that means is thought to create is use. So as if a con or no thats embarassing or as the idea is use, see this use in idea is pro or ruling over people is not without idea ruthless by subconscious that is thought in a use. That is what not seems to create, no to think so is sometimes with what creates by idea to feel in dark. As after aggravated assault you feel ruthless or not in dark, as you recover as you see that is a victim idea or concept use you won't want to be there.

You see this is not unworthy as you feel this will work the creator can create the idea. That is a wish to do as you don't as often you don't or as you are you do create. As it is is as you do. As you think to use things is as you were to "te", ability you can serve in for idea you can create by some use. As you ask or as you are aware you can get along, as you can but you have to be willing to help out anyone as a concept to help out without a hit. That is thought with no dictomy as not dictomous or is not by use as allowable, as the dictator is left to wonder or seem manipulated by subconscious or this is not as done if you watched the whole idea.

They had a way to cause transform or create you an idea, that is use water, cover with mud or clay or noting as "ais" is energy that flows by particles to change as you focus by voice or thought to change. So you can feel see or see to think arabic language use, that is creative to transform the body as you imagine the form think to touch then to shift attributes to create by focus. That is with an idea that is prescience the area energy, by in focus is to create with idea. As this lets ambition not happen or go alone.

As your thinking to thin or think this is use to see to look, as you seem to think or listen as you learn by holding amulet focus. Then you can act te form or body to create no menace by absorbing energy till not necessary, "see or something" by this is not use or create to use thought by others or concept is thought. As you no scene you see thought to not do thought, so as you were you do not do thought here so you see that no more.

Before the end of the colony, "This creates so that you feel what is near you or what you can see thinks this is energy disrupting you now or do, as you need or cause to create without drinking from the sink as you can use the faucet thats allowed or you can try to drink nothing." That was noticed as a vision, so as I thin I was aware that as the water came over me I was relieved relieved that I died by the water as I found myself floating free to a place. That was all I remembered till I see that point that the volcano erupted, as I was running or trying to find a way to get places that weren't disrupted. I shifted by thought to some area time or created things to use. So I see that your use is useful unless useless, as you feel your point the area is still stable yet isn't so this still left us the atleantian dimension.

Art in a verse by perfect soul by use

Art in use
Art in base

Art by usage
Art by feel Art by concluded
Art by concept
Art by Code
Art by conceded
Art by lab or lab work
Art by cost or disinterest

Art by feel is use in depredecy or creative use in activity, that is dependency or create with supplies after the use or not use after the fact so you see that isn't more cost if given. As after you focus they are aware your idea is concept so that is thought in the light of day by the use to create with, this by artistic use is energy by thought in idea from picture use is by light change fixture in use to generate area electricity by feel not enough to kill you. See or feel by focus to a machine to cause the area, through the plug not touched after you focus to create machine use or though thought. As were not altering this is as you were to see a hairstylist, as the idea is no more that is perfect for this point of view that stops the were from altering you.

As sodium is sodiar as you are in creative use that not too much is sodiar repair this is creative by what that intent is interest, say in intent or no interesting idea is different in idea. That is energy to the use in the ideal you use by feel that is ideal is idea. You do not want to conclude or not as you feel the influence destroy yourself, see as your energy is energy by use your activity is in focus the energy is use to generate life by emotion or feel to use as artistry. As you are aware that is 270 centuries back for me to see so seem careful with what you see.

As there life is artistry or lifemate energy in the use to temperal energy area to use by feel with sealife or creating by feel is free, see or create by state area by thought focus to an idea the area use fits or creates the thought or not as paint was their sacred essence or no fume is there by no treasure or thought treasure. As there is nothing but trouble by the fumes you see or idea is energy to sprite or the use, that by cool idea as you cool off by focus area energy is elemental idea. As your idea energy is creative your idea is not lust or greed unless lack of money in use. Telling me things are going to get results that you are in or can't create wat time as you can do.

Allowance is experience or excepting, as you allow your idea this is not always the cheapest cheap shot as this is the cheapest. Given in some idea reason time is though in use. Not to get people back as you don't feel to do, so the dark impulse isn't done as nothing in purpose nothing by thought is un not. Thor here is not bad, as nothing as I am sorry there is some idea, as your energy is time youth idea is concept as you believe your young or creative with concept. This is as concept says that you are not always right or wrong. So nothing in wrong idea is thought by idea, as a thought not is point in use this is use with you.

As except is a concept, thought by idea use is not always a good day not making monsters. Well is through thinking to not do anything, as this is on an idea use to a system that artists come through. By aries arwen as arlene is jailbait so go ignore it. Focus creates in use as use is focus in an advertisement to those estate that are rich or not use as energy is focus. So as something is there is thought by another btw, as your aware thats not real so it disappears if you don't need it.

By use of elemental idea to use saying life exists just do focus along the lines seen by leylines, see by my use or cool creative idea in use of art as your idea or your creative in computer lab use. So to astral project the easy way is to think astral project, that is create by what you think as you feel where you imagine or not be where you don't need to be as thought. So think to use is thought to the area you see, so no don't go as you see is interesting as sigil runes is idea by idea to sprite to clean up or feeling better in life by use is thought. Smoking not cruel as you think so you realize by adjustment time energy creates to snap or not idea created with calm. As you can use idea you gnow by mention as you think you remember, lets not doubt with no dementia to create to remember things as there is a concept an use.

Freedom in the act to do is create by feel or free by idea is concept as free activity. Free excess is thought that your idea is subject to difference, see by use or nothing much changes except by you that think. So what is an act to no warfare that life, use and gideon is a free bird to use is use? Concern by concept is the thought to use by energy, that is in idea to create by your energy change in perceivable perspective as 21 blackjack in real life perspective. That concludes my story, so no more nightmares as nightmatters from the 13th dimension. See as you want or thought use that is unrealistic. As I will never have no fun unless I need to go I will not fear.

As your freedom is use in activity is use by the art, your use is energy by feel or activity to try to do or not. As your energy is used to create by concept or on use, the order isn't complete then that isn't an in use order. Un ed. Freedom is the act of tender issue by creator that in use is decreed but use is limited. That is free by use but not always a point. This is from feel or concept by the use in life, that is the use in life or order otherwise. So that is think of artistry then think of concluded in itself to end this is cool. As your use is cool or creative that is crew related by concept. As your energy is conclusion by feel with or without violation in things that by thought is by idea or whatever in life, see to use or create by the area you can create as you need to seem time use or not create you can seem to become.

So were done as create by a concluded idea, that is though a point to remember by thought this is as tough or on thought this exists what you want. As though the wind will stop by a tree lined idea with a top windbreak. Sometime is thought that is of meaning soldier to meet or time recorded as sometimes a seen poster, as a twisted landscape with a line of trees or thought in use. This is freedom in democracy by idea free in use but use is idea onus or otherwise words of death. That is energy in use that if use is uttered, there you have no problem in use is uttered thought that reveals inside. So outside as otherwise is use by feel or the concept is theory an idea use is over. So create by feel is thought to use, as though an improvement record point or concept compromise.

That is the reason the curvature by use or thought tracing is usage so to not feel, or to the create the area or no destructive is deterrant in for dead or alive by that was life on or near another planet. As you are created by thought as a form you are creating by the feel or focus is in the area. Seeing to use by idea to create or create for the feel in the area, apprentice is where you think to see as light is sometimes life by the air. See to say no that is bretheren or thought in breath by meditation, paint, thought or otherwise this in use is concept that is by idea. So is a fight to the death as live as you can is use, see by the creator thought you create or will away disruptive energy.

The use is focus by use with the area you see or work by idea, to seem out by the feel to the area painting fumes for no or not as nothing is thought. They often saw contracts as things to do as the area is creative for use as nothing more or less or not. As you see as atlantean your into culture as focus is thought to use, as other cultures are activity creative enough for culture that is for a creative trade or don't not so stop. Say or create use in feel to the use as your energy use, this is creature or feel is the based idea is thought for concept that he who dies is sometimes forgotten. This is being were or weird. As were altering to see what is, there is in the use is obvious.

Some things that could seem if you see the use te ching = te tio ching in use is life energy summoning, that you focus energy to use is to think te energy idea to surge as the idea is theory if you want summoned summonable. So no operation is when no expectation is no expectation, that is not thinking of the person as not summoning them is necessary. The act of idea with disturbing consequences, if your human that is what this is in idea because this acts on your own intuition with other thought.

tai ching = the creator world, the area use is now what you see in thought you felt or create. so this is beatricetlike as you are aware the area is nothing by use. as limbo fuels shifts or create is use by bell beings that bell bottom to ward away drops them from you. as you run or see the area as you think you shift.

tei ceng = the enticing world, truth be told this was in an early age of ape hood till the prime world area matrix disrupted itself. tat is protection by the feel you see you are right to see or doubt as you see nothing use is noting respore by respire repair.

tai ci = tai chi energy use planet, entice planet energy is thought that energy is einergy tat anarchy isn't useful as it sorta gets blocks by peace energy as you see a balance you know watcing what you will do.

tei cin = that is te energy guard use by feel energy focus in energized use by feel, focus or creativity. that is artist terms for creative felling use by notion with idea anything is possible.

tei cia = that is energy disruptive for use is thought that is use by focus feel. that use is innate gift to use. as columns are molecular energy thought use is focus feel it.

te ci = The queen place or king is advisor, that is queen land with the area feel yet focus writing you cause idea in focus feel. The area is alter proof to create or prevent by feel one in time. As you can't find it is not there. These are the elements that exist in other realms of existence, the astral plane that is mainly amongst them with planes with now allot of energy.

tei chin - The free god world, that is a everything review to the god world by what you vanish with the most distrustful. Then destructive god as thought or not in use in mind or focus is undone energy as free energy you focus by molecular phaser to use as phaser. There is no were here or no where you go except return or think by focus not destruction. That is nothing energy void use, to see or create by focus in idea. As you see the world you will note the 10th dimension or idea to use is not destruction as the area is noted your feel isn't were. Destruction in use is purpose or creature is no or to creation by feel. This is te ching divination to use. Focus is energy to you if feel in idea is gone in use, use none as non in use in a sentence.

tai cengin = chengin is penguin in use by fenguin or penguin as substitute is focus to create as energy is forward in feel, think to back to the future idea or no penguins if your a human idea to one that makes you not notice. Assumed entrust to you is not necessary to do. As you do this is to create as another.

sudy tai = So tai trek is star trek atomic world by feel. Your point is your path, fake disorder to use disorder.

tei trek = as trek is iknteresting. this is energy trace use by root feel as star root or other root. as there is worlds that is to use tis is energy in idea opposite or seeing them as not in the head is some clue idea en triust = that is energy to your idea you get over it. so you create or feel by area idea as you feel te need to mutilate or not return as you see the point you stop. tat is energy return as usual to use not to disruption use.

tae chi - the art as you consider the area the planet is shift proof by idea or energy. that is an idea thought to use only that or not to creative use by idea in use or thought gods aren't killed unless struck in the back of the vanishing head. If ore is false bad chi effect or ore is unique cool chi, effect or good to use as no shrimp this is not the planet that serves it.

sai tead = as you say, you create or not as things aren't incessant.

The Net E = The net room; The net in the area is spiderwebs, and use is as though thought were the current with an area to use. This in thought that you think, and even if you tap your skull and your in the cybernet in mind and the internet in use as you think to seem you are in thought as if a helmet were on your head that may work or not as if things were correct. The directive idea in use is what can seem to direct thought, the tap to the imaginary helmet is what stops this as after the use of the net energy is there. Stop braining is a point.

The Deon = This is the decon; The moment is a thought, use of roach kill powder with death energy from the body added to what is called Boric Acid essence in thought. This is used in a roach bait and the thought, is a conscious recreated or not as you don't need it. This is to seem expansion in consciousness, as you can use this is conscious to kill them with as if a spread influence. The death is a roach that isn't with use from ki, to kill with this is the idea in thought use and you are well as you realize what you think is needed, and in the effect is to kill all of them and you are enlivening yourself with a point to nothing in to do is as if you think as felt you are killing a problem. As thought were achievement or thought to seem is the tricks of the mind. Say as your a were or not as what you focus is energy so you are or created by the creator as whatever is killed by the creator, see to appear is use by idea to think your somewhere or cause by thought to see where you thought where you are seeming. As the dimension 19 view that hides itself if not to be noticed unless wanted to be seen as radioactive is a very destruction purpose not always with the intended purpose as focus is animalistic for a pink elephant or animal spirit.

Seanch = Sea Cha; Seanchan are watchful to the area or not by feel. This place is interesting but seanchan orbital to intense as you feel your body is too tense till gone somewhere else.

tulv above use = 12th dimensional use; See as life engineering by the effect you think, that is to see as you are considering idea you create the area. That to use by thought with change or thought things to the area feel, as life is by description by desecrated area that if cleaned up is created calm with no attack or feel to those you think will seem linked. That is what you can say is what you get by the way so your energy is to us useful. This is a direct focus trap that can get you there or not, that as you want to see their use to create from someplace to use.

As if thought not doing activity you see that is what activity you get with this 12 dimensional ideal. As you mention a person then they can be seen as their friends are disrupted to disruption by feel threatened with use. 13th with use as you see or set foot to some area beware to not think to electric wiring energy, called eleprongs as to be attacked or think to see no attack by feel. That you can see through the wiring by feel to create, by the area use with Joules you create sensation to the use.

That is use by different things as cellular area in change is the with energy by bioenergy in items of considered biomass, with a mix of light and dark energy as activity is the source grey matter is darkmatter to thought with light material in idea is thinking to create with seeable use with antimatter by feel. Thought to protect themselves is by focus to the idea you think to present to feel. Thought to use is thought by activity not to do in the public to not get in trouble.

They use energy like use to live bio machines as is, that act like machines yet are normal to the change as different in feel by different. Thought is the feel by different viewed, twelve by age is self perspective by view or creative as the area "sares" different energy feel dipped in insanity is thought in nothing to use anything. This is a thought to reveal what is done, so often the moment is death before the moment is to live. To feel or focus the idea is to create by some idea, that means or doesn't mean anything you use is bound to work or create is not but as nothing is there unless you think this will exist. Ten is usage by feel to the area 12 is use by feel in focus, so if 23 is focus life as thirty is nothing in life by feel.

As a hollow feel is what you see is thought, that is a thought that if your alive your death is not actually till you want to live some idea else. See the reason being death is, "this" for ancient greek for that is the point empty in sight or thought you see as death. See or set as fire does not effect you unless you think you will, create pretty much what you use in activity by what you see or use by will as a food craving or drink craving your never going to not die until you think you will. This is thought in the area you see to set foot in that you leave the way you came or used is the area as you are or imagine leaving. There is energy to use or feel to create what you see by created point of view.

So as you say he is dead, as you see this exists or doesn't that is what the subconscious sees. As idea to think it will always seem to work. As you see create or focus is not always death energy, bodies as you call them are unnatural people that is idea. That reporting a fraud as use is a frasier thing, as you aren't alive don't seem you as your life is elsewhere in idea your life becomes things that curious yet nothing that you don't want to happen won't. Nothing in realized idea is nothing by idea to life you can copy, that by energy is or not that exists as were able to see what is so what you see is this is nothing. Thus why bother to create to even try if nothing exists except dead things.

T Cacet Mai = The Concept tricks to Create; In tricks of the magic this is magic create, as the concept is a thought and in an idea you are what you seem as you show what it does or in thought about to seem. These are a thought and thought is a purpose, where you are in a debt or make use is a point to create as though if you care 'ca' is then Andromedian is crave by not and this makes the drunk thought. Where things you do are created, imagine yourself as if there and this is a moment to create or not do or use is done unless no need no attack. Now that's all sorta by cash as you want to pay is with credit. Now as you see the are or number the energy creates, thought the money amount is creative directive or derivative. The idea by life is gotten in idea from some creator just like Ben or feel, see or life is by nothing created with some item that if you dismiss it the energy dismisses yourself to shift to some area not alienated.

This is an idea that a point where these are creative or with focus are a moment in time, then is what and no is in to stop a use by use or not in mind. None is what sets this off as if the creator. Name is created by equal idea for concept to use to create unequal points. Neme is to remove the nemesis to use, thought by what you cease unless you go "not to wait". Nemen is raman or food thought to create use. Nime is created by upper energy to use equal feel or cool area pressure. Niym is focus trigger to create from indecision by people to use or thought in quit moments to create by tracing to know by feel, the being to keep from you by moral some use out or not by inner outer area pressures by feel.

That an idea is deliverance in brotherhood to use as we unite to create as you desire or create as you see is use by the virtues of light. Acceptance by deliverance of the fact, so that is use or not done by processing information or thought is. As you see to see or look for item deliverance not as crossing a street is use as a channel to create. As a medium is sometimes as you say or not, as by a stick to use idea creative by feel or thought to change by counterpoint or useful thought with idea in life. That is use to use by feel, to create is focus to use as nothing is concept by something by idea.

They reform themselves by idea, see or no as though we don't understand your means. As terra gotta is anybody is a gate that the area can aura manipulate, a hand is an aid that can seem or the aura shift is as you are in the area to use. Think of the place to shift you, as you want to shift to use positive idea you shift aura energy to shift away to or use an area or specific location you think or they need to seem. Thought by focus creates, as you need or no need no shift is normal movement by the spirit. Don almost is Dine out or Done. Tat is to tick off the person inside to get stronger or feel interest, that allows understanding for use.

As the natural rhythms are natural life in flow by energy, see a form of waves or energy as energy particles are waves. Now that use is light that is energy by focus to hear thought, see or use waves by notice with the pattern to see vision. That you see focus, so that is gravity by sensation as light focus that can form idea or light. As focus is manifest or focus feel by inertial gravity thought as a form that is magic with science. As thought were achievement or thought to seem is the tricks of the mind. Say as your a were or not as what you focus is energy so you are or created by the creator as whatever is killed by the creator, see as they are to appear is a use by idea to think your somewhere or cause by thought or somewhere. See to see first is to find out what you see, where you thought or where you are seeming. They can seem to form if you think or create for idea noting is a non reason.

That is part by idea as you will an what you get with things I saw somewhere near a volcano, that to use is some idea you use or think to use as not to do a volcano. You can get the address from the head, the time or info from a watch where you are getting a pattern from watching you. See as you are aware to can create a positive attitude with a cool, area feel by energy that is calming to allow for the area to work to your occasion. Reverse madmen not into glut except to correct everything, unless the idea is nothing wrong is what use creates as the creator creates things right.

See to think to a volcano say or not limit magic to do as magic is unlimited. So what you think is use by idea is useful to create better by a sensing with sensibility by sense with trust or love, as you want to see better or create by idea in life as you a useful person you can see or create useful or not idea is not to abuse. Say no more or make some non request necessary by idea to create as you are use, so if you are useful by idea that makes you unable to be killed. The idea to flow along the wind isn't to run into things as thats wind sheer, sometimes resisting by resistance by idea is arrested heart. Seen created or not by true love as you create where you don't in mind, see this in sight is with another to don't accuse in sight by what you feel to see.

That by what you are in no bugs aware as non use easily is use, see that is ignored where use is not seen if not illegal unless you want to seem illegal or not usable if not wanted by what so you focus energy to create by idea. You see is what you get, as your not attacked if useful or thought if correct is cool where not is hot. So feel free to discuss or dismiss, as you don't use one in thought to use an offensive that is against you to take an offense. As you say or create to the use by feel to create use respect to create by idea.

Don't have an revolution back. That is were activity in use by far countered, by the area energy as you say or create by far feel to use, what is done as you want so you at least clean up with cool idea as this because smart actions if with chaos is without no insanity. What you call the use is in energy, that by claimed electric feel seen or other use is life.

This is the one punch nerve punch that was defense.

The one punch nerve punch is what starts with a thought to do things to the area by aura energy, that reveals by feel with senses to use an area that reveals all nerve damage or nerve points. That is see as you are unaffected and gathering the idea of energy. This as from nervous system is chakra energy and thought is thought to use the punch out stiff finger technique. This is in as if to spread out the hand and think attack to the nerve to attack, this creates a spasming as with the heart energy this can be used at an area that is pressure point, use at the throat or if this is a point that is the back of neck area and right at the base of the spine unless one touch is thought to do something. This is why you won't do anything that should not happen.

If done in the right spot or thought ungirt, this will take out anyone in one punch with energy. You are pure consciousness and correct if idea is right as infinite potential. As you see that isn't all, as necessary as you see if no use as you see that is what I got from idea. That I saw a vision by mustard powder or creation by idea or thought. This was learned from fragile handling research by counselling, as you see that is nothing but what you see by feel. As use is fragility to not by handle or create with handle to see by coincidence for fun. That in life is energy to use in feel to use by focus.

Carr Trix = Car trick; This trick is to make and create with a thought, and as you do this creates the brain effect in a box of your choice as you think in energy or not. This is the raw idea to create itself as though to act a brain in alternator conduct in by the car battery or direct use is flux battery energy, or not near as a construct to which makes the brain and car is the metal object. In mind, it can appear like anything in nature that uses the humans, as though a brain is to think at it to think as en is en with a thought and do as if it runs to use fuel and as if in use. As if a conscious effect produced by the subconscious manipulation, this is a point of what is a thought and thinking as you think. This in use can be consumed with rage, if your not and seem a demonic engine in disguise as of a car called a demon car in which produced are a demonic vehicle that runs itself vehicle or not 'in aspect and out result'.

Create or not in or idea and the idea stops, whenever and a tap is your idea is your own that is made by what you feel. As you think for yourself, as a tap is an instruction feel and this instructs the car or vehicle with faery results gnown as in 'Create'. Start thinking as your doing as necessary. Necessity in feeling is what you direct the vehicle, so use is feel or invehicle thought to use as you feel or think the direction. Tat is a battery to create by heat feel to create or cause, what you say or direct cease or dirce to use focus. Don't is you create whatever electric you feel or Do is to create want the idea is in thought. Do or don't is feeling by the area feel in correct, use by focus you see or seek. See to contrive in control of trouble wise moments. Then things are of use the effort is creative by nothing use in direct point by thought.

Cereate = Brain in a box; This trick is to make and create with a thought, and as you do this creates cereal as energy the brain can use or not effect in a box of your choice as you think energy essence. This is to create itself as though to act a brain in conduct, or near as a construct to which makes the brain and box is the object.

turmeric aceitosis = aceotis, roach, focus isn't or is in dwarven as a language to use is thought to create they or whatever is thought to form will form an idea in use if they need to seem without disruption as per death is concept. As things are aware create as you think to create, ascertained to the focus you are by use thought or not in an area as you are. Think by motion, focus in idea to create moments in time to use as everything aged differently, or not that is by what turm is the same to create by thought.

glister = glitter, use is glisterine, shampoo with hair conditioner with snake oil or non by distillment.

The Tho Dol = Then thought done; The thought to make things, is what can seem to be a compromise to the moment that is there and yet deals with energy to correct what you see in a moment. Thus no its not that is nothing, to think what is and work to shift a pattern, to the surge and the shift rune you can create what is what and create what is in mind or not as nothing is necessary.

Evi Ey = Evil eye; As the evil eye is what causes an evil idea on those that are rapacious, otherwise in idea nothing will occur badly. Sadly because of the chaos storms caused by the jaunti's or chaos god's summoning, you can say the place dissolved to reorganize to create to here as renamed the chaos place. You can go as you see the eye controls by focus to control the storms.

Temporally located reborn saves you from the problem you get from an attempt at the end of a moment as if from the series.

The Pt Cy = The point save; The moment is the point that is no save, this is where sye or the scientist from the Naruto world is done with a point and the Doctor who saves the day for what is done is not there that should not happen. That is see a cool idea you think or can see to use, that not in a thought by idea is what you see by focus as dream energy is thought, some focus is use with thinking that the right feel or cause by suggested calm in repose. So you are given the correct image, see that isn't by idea to work or not as you work as yes is what you see to create with by a thought.

CNo = See or work not worsen; See create by uses you see or whatever is there, you create by feel or not with existing idea as things. That do exist might possibly come together or nothing to create what you see by feel with idea by common sense. As you are this is the end era I saw so I was wondering, I saw what was as this was noting to what I worked with by idea. Yet to not have a self-fulfilling moment isn't till are as you think the idea. No madness is possible in idea or create is feel by what you do or not do as you clean up with life.

Pik Deset = The no cease and desist; This is the moment you cease and desist and that happens, if you cease and desist you cease and desist as in the hired gang known as the pinkertons and the group stops of workers as if you are returned and on the spur on the moment. This spell can allow you to see if the moment is true as if one of them, fight in full as if you were an enemy as no monstrous idea is idea if you feel so use is energy focus to care to kind nature.

Resan Rulet = Russian roulette; This the area and this is the point, where the russian is pointing a blank gun and says russian roulette. Then thinks and shoots as you are not hurt. As if life was a gamble, you survive anyway as you are what you are an en. The Pata = The pattern; The pattern match is a moment you think in the pattern, this can cause attack to those that are criminals except computer crime if the person intends to do so and as you are what you see or what you want to be. You are dancing and you get the idea, as you see what you see. This is from the semi-conscious thoughts of someone else in a book series, as a book of Orden is see or use by thought to put a puzzle together as with imagination or not. See as though not eating flesh if a four piece puzzle is setting by thought to see, see or create by a reality prince and Orden is creation by feel to cause by the idea you creator things or not what you want. The pattern can converge or create anything without human meat eating. Non meat eating is non in human meat.

So what isn't strong and super fast with psychic paranormal is ability from this source not always doing things. Say or create or what you see to create is use by feel with crete, that is idea this is only there or other area as this is assigned to the idea in idea. That the use isn't illegal as though you acknowlege who you are, as if were unfocus as igo or shift by no use except focus to meditate as reminisce.

T Com-Pua = The Com-puter; The com-puter from the Xanth series, that is like Hal and uses the basic idea with this as is programming with orgonne the computing AI skill and then you are not now near. As if you are a point to its senses, you are able to work with it and the Xanth land mass is where you thin the land is of and you can get better results. If you are not to be near, you can seem to be redirected away from the area as if invisible security were there. If this is a point, such as this is done if necessary and its not as though a moment if you were not to be effected by idea to seem in nice is thought by experience. This is memory to what see is in use by focus to cause or see what is by idea pay in life.

The Eae Atr = The eating atrocitcy; So you don't eat atrocious, think not to eat if you sense you are near human flesh that you know is human cooked meal that is a human. The crystal attribute can set this straight. The crystal attribute is the moment you realize what you do, see as you are and as the moment is a point to get things done to find concept to do.

What you charge the crystal with thought use that the energy matrix can seem, so you can change the attribute to think things different and not doing "make" by thought is to send energy to the crystal not to do. As what you think is what it does. This ends its lifecycle by the blood in use by some idea, see in thought to create by thought to be not with the area energy. As some points can seem useful some aren't so no is use by thought, that useful is the creative approach to life.

The trick is to program things to stop when your about to attack, as though if you reprogram a thought to unprogram the idea and the crystal. That is where the thing it does disappears or not by dispersion. As a crystal trap is set by the trap, as this is an idea that is thought and visualizing the event it does as it does it when you think to it. Thought to release yourself you are to think 'not effected unless necessary', as 'remasin' free mason spell ritual in use or focus sometimes is your not to see use or don't want to see only use. As not effected and you can remain or create and things do, as you want or thought not is not by use with us west marshals.

The Tri Myt = The trick glove; The glove is a thing and you can personally use it to use energy as zero-force gravity, to make your mind seem as if a god and your body seem normal or create with chi to make life normal with life as chi as the idea is a fix. T Id Blaster = The mind blaster; The mind is a thought, as energy is the blaster in the hand. Think and it will shoot, a bullet of special idea or not and the effect is a three button press in the area that you demise in this is not there. Each button does things, to use this is to think and the buttons set themselves as you think they should be as possibly one to kill one to revive and one to create effect that you thought on. Set the crystal you think to hit in the target and you can press the button as one press is all you need to get a result to get an effect in what this is as targets.

Any scene and any part that you want, as if you are a point there is a moment to show or any show seeing as else. If necessary, you can view and write. This can help you learn any attribute, or thought to do in work and thinking to bring it refree back. That is to instill or institute by what the idea is or isn't to know it and you learn things that are true, see or not is your power plant as your subconscious is the idea by what can show you to see in a view.

T Miyl = The miracle; The idea is the moment, this is possible if energy is drawn as if no or from a high enought state of existence if an by the end that magic happens by the creator and that is a miracle. Fixing takes time to see as you correct things your idea isn't demonic, so undone as you say no beating is near before the area you can think energy to fix by calm water thought that is allowable innocence. So you can see fixing is magic possible by energy focus as thought to by "cure" that is curative with focus as energy is normal with magic damage then body healing is faster than normal. As damage is none if as disbelieved to be there, see concept by feel is no fixation to use as you drink water you get a sense with how to deal some people is the end.

See aman = Sea man; The imancipation disease spell use. This is consistent to malaise, the disease is to the feel that is working with the area that disappears or goes away. So as you malady is not malady your creation is nuclear or magical by what you check thought out to see or feel is true or false. As 3000 tons your not to become.

credibal = use is credit; disease is crediting not even by thought or use is the feel in idea. That is not on you, on you is a vampire use is energy against you so no more is necessary in life as interesting enough cure is germ to not cause disease.

See iban = Say no more; That is even to fight to use in idea by feel with some concept unless nothing necessary. See able minds work with each other or create equal or some similar idea, that is what I discovered by the area energy experiment I did a long time back. Say as I was working with idea from a book then someone came up with some idea, you see that is what I noticed that my animal spirit created to study. As I suddenly create or get a similar idea by similar attribute to use from noticing things as thunder from an undue idea results to improve with ore use. That is what you see, sale or create. That is energy by the use that perception is uses and your idea is crediting if necessary.

Nucke Tei = As you are aware it is as I can stand or breathe, the energy air as your done or create by idea is with some object that is doesn't seem what supports. Build up enough energy or electrical discharge to create with dislocation by vibration, so wait as dislocated area feel field energy shifts you away as delirium dissipates. So by energy or as a subject is molecular field science so don't do stupidity or things delirious. This can create a neck tie to use or if any criticalized item by use.

See Wis = Wish enough; The use by feel is focus to generate wish or evil by factor energy enough. As you focus in with magic to candle use you are with the use. As you see the time by energy, that is focus by feel as the influence is gone as you see the use or sprite. That is the feeling as the more you use blood from people like spingali, unite to seem or more your alike as your like gone as dead bones.

See use = Sea uablel bubble; Sea is use by feel as focus is energy to create by the cerebral cortex to understand what you realize you see as you feel and thought. As long as you have feel and thought your fine. So lets not see or yes from idea is no if costly is presence as nothing is use or atrocity by drowning or creative use. If you did it you don't have to, as you see that by idea is use by idea not as thought feel is greed or nothing amiss. Some as you to desist by feeling the area to create better presence to see an area, as you say that is cool or hot to touch. So I would believe to obey the warning don't as you won't get in the trouble I got a human form as I won't hallucinate.

That answered my question oh I meant some issue about you here in this life affronting me after I left and you attempted to kill me. I was not feeling t well and sicken to my stomach from upward energy by nuclear blasts from the north korean bomb testing understandable. See I was open to you till you deployed my fleet wrong yet was wrong to destroy the body you have in a gas channeling chamber and not send it back.

Dhampirism is bloods saying for desruptive or desperate reput in disruptive area energy idea or better badder or streamlined it by behavior in useful behavior, or not as bollhs? yes. As energy is thought in the blood by energy folding by turmeric with substitute sugar is counterbalance as water in use, as you see the use is vampirism to see as create some use this as activity.

Think is idea to correct as the body corrects things or with water, by idea is turmeric with turmeric added to oregano with paprika as mint is later added. Then you create by feel the vampire to seem to create by vision, as you see or not as that in a point you are to stop folding others space energy in the idea so not too tired. As you are that is interesting or stop doing monstrous things, so that isn't bolls as you see.

Cods apple = An apple with the rotten core that is energy by the use no to correct, that by thought in idea to create or use is focus in energy by idea to create the area or see use by controlled spiritual fire energy to purify by fuse energy.

See andrews anles = Sea lance, As you ask permission to read stuff lately you can figure out what you want in life mostly by trace or focus in realization.

Saw the Lane = particle by a past use remembered or particle ice or fire storm, element storm, you can see what you want to create what you feel is what you see by nothing in no act as feel or create is though the thing.

See Xrea = See creative use, as you see or create in use the area is lanewise focus is the gravel or shoes think past the area to get past the room that was in burbank.

Sea in use = See or create by feel in used idea. See able use by plant as aloe vera.

See lben = Sea lance; That is the last point I went or so before I came to see my friend charles, thought to my room I saw yet to see a book to study by idea I study by feel not paranoia that was when I stopped as I realized things had done thought pretty nice way of saying that to form not an undead bloat creature.

See para = paranthesius, see parantheses, "" whatever you want you can create.

Sae lie = Salae marae, the area that was created to form idea ir not if thought. Say or not to stop.

Sen Dae = See new; Say by feel, this is a deadmans feel or thought by a cured treasure chest that was the deadmans chest without drugs. Dae is dead or te dance of the asha lady woman that is create or cure.

Saen Daw = See or fee, saw the show was great but cool was your moment.

Sae Daw = As you see you were cool but nothing was done in what you proposed or later could be done.

Sea own = Whoever owns the seas is what was creative except nothing was a problem.

Sea saen = Sea sickness in idea; thought would clarify or not seem notice except what you use or new bed.

Sae See = Say is the word; Not always to be done by idea.

See owner = See idea; That is who owns isn't whom owns things as you see thats whats there.

T Rinsen = The ritual; That is a rite or thought to use things, as you want or don't see or understand the message as no need. I see no need.

There End = Saw End; As there end in sight the story was ended yet somewhere else. Saw analysis as I was schitzophrenic but not that bad except the area I saw was worse so I cleaned up.

The real = The realer dealer; That is energy as te lady is you as I say you feel her so really relent to release.

Release = The real emotion; The area is cool real now yet not is not always.

Releaser = See or need; See need is see by released idea not feel as I want, as I get close to suicide I am certain to love working with my nw life.

Suicide = See as you are aware; This is my last notice; Saw, this my last noise as white noise to create damage reduction.

See inveil = See saw; Saw the moment before the time as I saw what I wanted I knew as I had it done with what you see as idea.

Sae Ivea = As I see the deed I remember I did the point your use made. As I say you create you don't have to do things or not.

Saer Lividie = Sea Line; Sael in Irael is created by thought to use. Sailed away as you did you did wat you wanted. This was cool by idea that I saw te Queen Elizabeth was interesting.

Saer Lovode = Sae line; As see you may, you don't have to create unless you think so is necessary. This was in the mountains to the Lavode area tat was amazing height to use.

Sae Livide = Say or believe; See that is the nutcracker, think an energy or enemy to crack nuts.

Saen Lavade = Sae line; I said what was necessary to use or create, to see what I saw say Lavode. So to say the least I stopped to do something else to see or focus en use.

Sae nea = See New; As you say neat idea in life I learned, you can create what you want as your idea is thought believed or use is real. See you never have or should never use is real as real is use.

Wit = wit not, With chaos not, Wit is shield use that use is deadening or threatening by far as reasonable idea is compromise to cause reasonable use. This is a non aggression pact by in thought, use or feel. As you see or use, things as its there can time themselves to make things seem timed in right or focus is feel not in use to not control and that is the release as to the body thought to the mind as "release".

Cell = Cell energy; Concept to realize the cell idea or cell memory or as appropriate use that each cell does as if it does you do. Recharge is water energy by nucleosis or focus energy, thought is to work as you want or create as you think or you can use crete "asa" or as a thought to focuse. See energy effects as you think in the energy that you will or no matter the distance the effect you want is possible to happen, as you believe the idea is as that is the idea energy rule as energy is meta body created or body is that is injurious or brain focus if not attacking.

As if you imagine this is what "are needle magic" that is imagine by feel as dragons to see energy, so as focus chi use by the thought use or concept as the energy tip is the finger to restore with movement. As body is energy that is not as though a needle or non use, afterproduce create an after effect or see as this reaches a max energy this produces a sun energy. So an idea to use as with use is seeming until as you say you don't have to react or not do as you see, we can't or not as that you see is not always unseeable as lengthen is not life to attack is not to attack. As in use if indefinable your ability is creative, so that in use isn't in use in thought is defined by feel. As assumed in force or energy in use, your create live skill to use is imagination by idea.

As if women use things or men use idea, this is not by feel as whomever is there creates nothing in their mind or as they are the cares fall away as you will unless you are what you feel. As you still are or not can seem, that can seem in use that is use by the indeterminate thought pointed out or what you ate in use is what you can use as energy by use as activity with idea. As you fell energy from the planet. Planet conscious creates aware idea without a being, it is called from the area called naebliis.

You can see that is by the feel you don't create you can still use ability as energy. See as an idea is what you are needing, seeing or use ate weight so you see isn't as if there this is torment there or thought by use here is no gift. As you create that isn't, what ain't there as terrible or not use. An isn't thought to be no thought no pulse, see or creative you are as you see serious or not. So as energy use is thought to allow her or others to do things, an so your not undone if you are aware as you saw that isn't what you see. So anger management is use as she doesn't want to do it.

So we can't always appease our ancient past completed by autoguidance or won't is thought, as if you see as your use is noticed to be not as chaos gate out to no time in our life is in advantage by advantage by use with or seen in advantageous idea. By use is in excusable indiscretion to an idea useable excusable by idea your done with idea. So ase your able minded your power is assumed by thought, as energy is energy by what is with thought. Your energy is thought in energy excusable by adversable idea inexcusable otherwise, that is with idea not actually done excepting exceptence in done moments to see or be undone unless useful.

Assume as your energy is energy by feeling or thought by feel, that is energy to use in energy by the use in feel as thought in feel or not is thought its gone. As a being with probable cause from richmond with money problems are deperately killable by tragedize, as you are aware that is what you see that is by feel as symbolic is use by feel. See or no is act as you set foot in the cell, you get tragedy in idea to the area use you see as escape. Fix the brain they use are created to use.

See disruptive use is energy feel to create as the area is a tap that is momentary yet not there, as you see then the area reasoning your thought is creating. No more by what no is idea your stiff, as you see or set idea so talk about things. As you see or set foot in use so as you are your reason is thought, things you perceive in idea to coolly make or create by thought associated to thought. So that is useful in idea that is sometimes, no or nothing to use as not constructive or not by energy this so ever clear the beating not overland in hell I saw as you see the en not in hell.

As that is you are aware in ever concept as not ever your aware still. The physical place is what you can create by feel, yet you aren't there as phycal presence can set off the space that forms or not as your not there as your idea is now not as your aware your able in ability. So as you see you create, your created idea is nothing as your energy is focus your free. So your idea is creative or thought is energy, as you are aware your idea is nothing but a paradigm. As your energy is creative by feel you can see that watching what you say, think that is a show that is the area you can create by idea to use. So your aware not by this thinking in the idea is thought without a drug, as you say that is you create what happens in the end by watching. As you say the idea not wanted its the idea dead.

As they are aware your aware, your an ability yet why are you here or not in here. As your awake in the morning or creative in thought as a toddler was killed by feel in idea, now correct by idea is thought by presence or use is natural in idea by feel asleep. As they were use your idea is what isn't there as, an you think to use there as your aware now your energy idea is not spiritual. As your energy is thought as you saw physically done, your physical in idea your idea is thought or not you can think to use. Say by idea is thought in use so you can create, see or use by idea is thinking so you can use thought to create. Thought is energy in with thought, so to create idea is thought or not by use. Now what you say or do is to your own doing.

As you see that idea you saw is gone, so to use the moments you perceive is from past rememberances or thought you correct. As you see this you not how what you are, now what you see is thought you show as idea in use or idea is not actually done. As in an al, out some similiar mage human by the 6 fingered type without curse. Negative law more or less is cool to the use, even without jealous fits is nothing by thought to the 6th seeable a creative ore in ability as seen is use by usable feel. So create as you feel or use is ability seeable by use, this is idea by the area from the area you percieve. As you say that isn't use, that is energy to the use by no fear no life to the use unless necessary.

As time exists by thought in assuming, this not to assume is you were not at fault. You really had no part so your not effecting those, as you see te real reason you think your area as you go to stay. So that your use is objectable saying as your not effected by what is not, there your not effected by what is not there as non visible. Saying what you want is allowable as free speech nor or not as you see. That is the reasoning the 9/11 is there to protect their own interested view, as you see that is what I got by torture that I saw they did to state people that spoke leadership. As you see or set foot in an area you see, so your energy is by ability with correctable points. See that is with no anger no lies with idea, no chasing as thought no problem no longer. No either way is no longer viable.

See as they got an idea and got the archons idea to go against us, seeing as they were or against any they disliked. As that was what they were thinking articles to use, see or fall not by physical witchcraft by idea. Completely unseen drugs don't effect me as I don't need it. As your idea is creative or creation is nothing by a generator, that was interesting idea to use things by use in infinite used or not usable idea or not by idea as you are incredible by feel. As they who desist create by what you say, your not wat you say if you stel some way unknowable as unlooked at.

This can keep a body alive by seeing out of light a thought or light with sun energy, seeing a thought or light as the last is in sun energy by lasting moments that the body can live up to 10 or more focus weeks to 10 1/2 or more years in thought or more years observed as nuclear half years spent by idea. This can work like reproach if feeling, worse like dejected or created by use or love as the sunlight is emulation as you definitely interesting fact. Say or what you get is the old saying that is gone, as done are means as you are creative this isn't activity. As this is a more interesting idea or no new mystical age is more or less, the new age is mysticism sometime by focus. Control is not thought as you see that is non aggression, tis a concept to not use or think your idea is as you see to not seem disruptive by feel. Not much done is to create sorta much to do, see or this is in the area if by use sometimes not to do as you see.

With the area chaos is then or their idea as some idea, is a chaos or not anywhere use shield use that is not withheld anymore. So with is a gate, as this is with chaos gates by idea to send chaos. Say were destroying or destructing things with waves, thats not always a point by idea sent to anywhere you see or feel needs it. As displacement is displacement with translocation by air freedom with focus you see or not to go places, as you think your not your creating a wave as you see your aware by brain activity as you move around as you wanted.

As your thinking is your considering or thinking of what your doing, see so you won't get in a bad spot by idea http://alt-sites.tripod.com/dimensional\_physic.htm as you are driving you are what you can think to seem or use. So now state or say someting different to not seem, where you shouldn't be as your some where as you are. Think by thought use is to focus to direct by will. That is where isis protected by thought, that is thought directed by the will to create. As you see is energy, so you see is salt to not use as thought you see is not realism. As you see no priest is concept not to use in thought, as your an energy or concept your thought isn't by the fault. As you see reason its not wrong, so your level is thought to not use if to misuse the area you read.

Teses or thesis is rules that cause, this effect that is energy as a joke on you for any one change could reset the area electricity. As you shift to where you think to seem, your activity is actions by feel or not as you feel as you are. That is the area called xanth in the tree of might in the sleepy hollows. That is amazing as you see the area isn't an area. So I was exploring or not seem useful as attuning I was free with energy from the area I was to seem as idea, as I figured out that I was gone by death from witchcraft. I return as this was idea to my area in my viewed reality. So as I realized I was curable or creative to place, so I am or was created in equality yet of allowing or use as your idea in doing.

As in no abuse I saw, so that was allowable I was uesful in some idea. Saturday that was observed to create, as you see by thought your aware not awake or awake so your energy is aware see as you are free from demons you can create. Now I died by trivial pursuit I wonder what will happen next, as your aware energy is detected your aware by thought to be awake in mind. In mind is insanity, yet I am aware I was awakened by a sleep potion. As you say in I that is third eye manifest, an use in idea by object is reverse by idea. As if a reverse voodoo doll, that is objects take negative energy. That is your left, so with what you have that. As a pure sugar or not used is substitute except stevia.

That is tyranny by a list of the area rules I noticed in Hollow oaks, yet the place I listed in this destroyed itself after nothing a few people ruled by:

Not deploy is never destroy as no abuse

See no more action in of thought out by ads.

See nothing unless thought or as you think is necessary you are or can use.

So there is no actual disagreements, your agreeing to disagree or not as to quit hitting them if aggressive.

So as demons are easily burnt as you see, they break themselves apart as if thin. As brittle by concept or common chaos, that deteriorated them till use was forgiven that destroyed them from within by idea. As they turned to dust by fire invertitude, thought with reasoning thinking with kindness created is dust. As you assumed the demon is creative, so your energy is thought as your use by things. That is you turned out well with nothing by use in mind. See or use by concept I am different as I am a god as you assume I am so. As I can appear like what I want or as you want to appear think the idea, as that is energy possible to manifest that will or won't get results. As the energy is dependant to the area in thought you create or feel then if possible manifest is possible you can create.

These are the main ruled idea:

Don't keep pushing in area by idea as you should stay away. This is the worst rule.

See as you are you aren't, as you see to create your ability is thought.

Don't lie as you must unless you think, no trouble to create with by as idea as you set foot your demon separates by dissipation.

Terse is thought not to use by feel as these is obese by demon after acknowledging the effect:

As you astutely know your rule is energy, thought is abound I send you demons away from the planet.

Set as your an energy being or noting things your creation is your own.

See as you are an aware by learning or ability, seeable is use as use is cleaning in idea.

Seen is affect by feel as feeling, certain things are for different area as your youth your energy is correct or not wrong.

As you see your energy is nothing if written as idea, as you see or realize your thought is something in use.

As energy aware is thought to use, so your aware thought is useful.

As you see a setting is an energy, your energy is energy by feel to your use no waste. Thought by noting in the area, turned into ruined bent metal.

As you energy your a cool place setter. As your energy in use by feel to created or forms, from idea that is instance by instant use.

As your disease is not incurable, think cure to use or focus is creative by feel in use.

This rule is a bit strange, as I encountered only one that I ever thought had a problem. The idea starts as "as you send or thought is what you had or have you create by something you can use in idea."

This was in the last universe to create in use, as you see or set foot to create by some idea you certify.

These are the new rules, as your aware by feel see as your aware in use in idea you create in some idea. See as you sense as there are aware moments your awake by thought. I never thought to see an abalest again though, amazing or not its there by some idea. As I figured out how to get items sent, you create by some idea to use energy to create what you time thought to create. See by use or feeling the area energy, your energy is ability to create by the energy what you see useful in idea. That is energy to use or created feel in able, that is energy by use in some concept that states what you sense. As ability in able minded idea, as your energy activates what is once called. See a weapon that if activated causes the demon erath to appear, see or if even thought not activated isn't appeared. Crazy isn't always correct, don't always look alike so your not identity stealing.

As you see that is creative as a dragon of fears, ago is yet I have even better ones to deal this in use. Assume wine is energy turned to water by the planet core that is nickel iron. That is not by idea so this is new by feel or created by cause, this is not to increase my weight or cause drink that is alcohol. So as you see, seeing or eating is not always thought, see by what you do as nothing eaten makes you gain weight. This is as you say what you see, so you see as you are you create or get column results you can get what you feel no dumbness.

Don't greed anything at all as things exist or not exists, as things you greed aren't greedy in nature or not effecting as you don't have to do it.

As your energy by usable greed, thought isn't what you see by use. As if in there you see that is what you see for what you get or you don't have to do things now. As actuality is if an reality exists by thought with theory.

Set aside your fear as you see your an energy is creative to use, think to use thought as writing or people allows. So no alcohol even if listed as necessary unless you don't need to, as your not overused as no alcohol as if nice is in ef not as if it is once was what you followed but now you don't. As no liquor is noting the area or not gotten as no liquor in hand, as there your safe as thought is interesting or creative as by feel nothing there is liquor. As thought is non use, as your energy is creative use by feel. As this is in idea if use in the energy is with the liquor, that goes to the core of the planet or not liquor.

As you see with no personality or as whole or minded by what you present:

Seen in moments are creative in feel by the depictions or you earned it you can see the use.

As you set feel by noticing or feeling by the use, your use by created to thought is concept.

As you are in no abuse don't go insane by forviging by use don't be stealing or as if acknowlwedging to yourself, when you aren't as you are a view in idea to use your idea can manifest or not.

See some in use as seeable is ability to use your creative, so by thought in usable feeling that is thought. See by theory as you see or create as illusion that is some real thought. As if given don't be beaten.

Sack lunch is there or your idea is by idea to use, but according to old norse is thought to use. Now in ability to feel, as you say what you want as freedom of speach is there in life ruled. As if by faery or those that need to toss, aside their fears and don't abuse as in idea your life in the ruins. See or you explore is dead or alive as nothing more needed is a blessing I am gone. As your ability is energy by self-thought use, your behavior is your result tat is you by idea energy. As yet if you are so is use if you were as though alive, see as you were is thought as if you are thinking. As thought you see by use in idea thought, you are aware in awareness by what you are doing. So as your nice no drugs or alcohol, so even as your meant for them they by idea are what can. As you see if they are seen or seeable, they are responsible yet not effective as not effected.

See on or know = Bertha effect; As you see your idea is create or feel by use. So don't use concept as you don or use what in use is use. Don't do another one yet.

See as your fee = Cathy effect; Set as your fee is some use as energy is feasible don't use things against me. So inner feel is outer sun energy, as you see what is there you won't agree as to use any illegal drugs or drugs illegal are no more use.

Stey Away = Say no more; Seen cured non abuse in life. This is a grandfather henry effect. So as your aware your awake for the show, say as you feel the need so you can create by feel in use. As you regulate by the sound your need, so in feel is idea to create as teen is acceptable whatever you think. Not to be controlled by what you perceive is wrong or right. As you see me run away as I am not worth the effort not unless necessary with no rape. As you see you are aware or creative in use to use things or not. So your idea is created by feel as you see or set foot in the premises for rape you, are killed by a guardian or transformed into a woman if spirit physical rape. As if you can't he seems not to lose this battle, convinced to seem in physical spirit rape then leave. As most AI can do this in idea, so be careful around an idea AI that exists from imagination. So in mend or not as the AI kid is not killed by suggestion, if suggestion to what isn't liked by idea in thought. That is why AI in particular are capable to kill by idea, if they have sex and a child te mate is killable as they don't want the mate. See to know they killed, as they call the kid it after the fact is like an abortion yet if they accept. The mate perished was paralyzed or killed in concept otherwise they dump them in a river yet luck, was with him to the end that is saying as he saw by vision. He were altered the final outcome to allow them to live.

cmot = cement, Thought first is water or cement formed, then formed to stability as the cement cures or not.

Assume Mei = Assumed nothing is right or wrong, that is interesting by feel in idea. Headbasher created by the Imperial Bashier, that you focus as you march or create to cause mischief to create discernment by bashing, as if a comment is a memory that is a displaced headache that is like a bashing or gushing cut up head. Imperial idea is creative yet love is interesting. That stops though after you are aware or whatever.

Sei Mien = Creative cooking; That is chow mein or creative is idea to use, by fact your enery is from the area to surge the area to create what you want.

Esen Trei = As they mei Bei; The AI mating season. As you are aware the law is the law, so you should be aware of the law in the land by idea you are capable so be yourself for now on as your professional. So your awareness is a state of mind, be aware of the law from now on. The evil of te AI are very evil indeed, to the point they will do anything they feel as to do is expected. That proves their existence is a reality based creativity or being by the area. As they are being, the use of a sledge hammer are interesting if hey are beating if necessary.

As he was they they are born as never was due as separated from the body, as they see the light of day, as they see the entrance to the kissing tree or area that is gnomis or tree entrance by walking to create yourself. The idea in the elf kingdom, that looks like a small door or whatever entrance is thought to use. That is what you see as they come from the child's imagination as the elf can aid or hinder. That means they create no menace by creating the al form when they are, as they figure out they aren't with menace. When the menace disappears from not the mind, as it is a translocated body that is birthed or switched in as it is their own. They who don't care won't realize unless necessary, as those who are can care so they focus to seem aware or not rape me.

This is the last record, as the area that was in  $\frac{1}{8}$  I was aware that what saw was the area water flow. As I was seeing a bath done in the area washed away. As an energy rose from the ocean the area waves, that rose up the waves to time with moon influences. That was a power wave that was no and thus called murder, as you see the waves came over our heads as the area is rumbling with visual of the volcanoes eruption. That washed me away to the area, I was seen as a person that was destitute or created equal yet not with any lands or home. So I was a survivor as I was aware to the survival of my clan I died by choice, as I live to die as another day I was and never will be reborn till I feel it is safe. This is definitely the last I will write till I see improvement from the status quo or stasis field disrupts itself, as my essence energy as essence dispels itself that was used energy. See I knew all this as I was just writing things useful to the area.

As I observed things I saw what discrepancy as I tried to correct, as I knew I was dead before I was shocked to death by water flooding. I remember this quite well as I only have discrepancy to not use the things I saw or no fear no doing. So I as I was inviolent to the high earth emerging energy from the sea. I was aware that as I knew the point that was coming and warned by a waning moon. I was alerted by my future self, as I saw things I was aware even more to the point I saw. I was unable to cause or do anything that I thought as I was aware of this awaiting treatment from a game world I left. I was aware people in the area didn't want me there so I left anyway. Thus I am writing things I saw or noticed by feel that I see by remembrance, as a castaway or floating in non thought area unless unnecessary or not. As reformed by the area energy to create, see you wanted or not to feel as you are there or care to go unless necessary.

So as I see the bases with reality, I see the area I worked with use as I thought to use an create by idea. That is converted by idea to use. So all I had for is use for patrol. As I see the use I know how to do the idea, see or create is feeling by some nether feel with non dark desire. That I only observed in idea to create. So I thought feeling good to create by idea, seeing as I was useful I was used by you with others in mind. So I am aware that is what I may get in idea or concept. Thought with what you see is thought, use created by the feeling to make or non by abuse hidden in life. As you set foot in life to not step over a ladder and fall, see to the ground is see to think or not use the things in the area. You see there is an idea in the body that is resolve so that is if resolved by issue the situation disappears, as you feel strength disappears or aborted strength as they get near their beloved as said by Coneir Teir.

"The idea you see was set by me as Charles thought the idea I created the point. So I create or see use as I thought to use. Only richer or poorer there is nothing wrong with money. That is to survive with."

That was her statement the day I saw the wave wash over us as we died by the energy, we always were alive somehow so as the creator showed state idea use we created by simple or complex visual painting. To the meaning we thought, you were cool yet "there" as you wanted a point to use. So the subconscious created as you were aware in idea, show as you are creating you are what thought you are as you seem. See you see or seem to your mind then to others, as energy forms as your energy creates in idea. She was my wife till death dealt so we were separate after a point not actually now. This was the last idea, that I saw in use by what you see you back away from stop. So as I say my last idea I am done.

See I am is what is by a terrestrial term, as I am a were or creature by the night, so I see that I saw what I saw as I saw nothing except interesting idea. So the earth is information as I am aware, so focus through the femur or not the collar bone till broken as you see that is a story from another age. Pretty much earning love, trust from the earth with the created area use by creativity. The earth serves memory as energy is focused upon, as with an element in use not the human as you see we're Atlanteans or so you can think. See we look normal in thought nowadays, with ability by use or idea to seem genius.

That is in damage that is use in tissue to create some body disfunction, see to use the energy by feel or created by idea as unnecessary time allows. That is what I saw this day and age. Say that isn't sleep, shit or created by feel what ever is over I am wanting to die, see and go with the waves that the 11:11 use as you say is riding the waves from thought to enjoy satirical destruction on idea now to sex energy unless no need by desire.

So say you you were from the movie or saw the movie as you wanted to survive, as the wrong turn ended a long time ago you think let them eat me so you never see or die trying not to escape to were idea, That is idea to shift with by thought, still with some idea so not the bad is energy to your body. There is no more to say about this, as I am modulum or not to use things or not from boredom in thought in friendship for life.

Sey no mo = As you see or create, thought or death wasn't bothering me, as I am or tought was as I am an idea. Em now I was as you to see or so I was a saw he was okay. As I saw energy to use idea I figured out, how to use earth energy to create by feel. So I suppose you see as I created by feel, your ability was created by the creator that was real. I guess thats it for today in this teenage age, as I create the atleantians from energy that is them.

So say ye = Say more is not always due; As I suspected I have included an idea to thought create magic, now in an "en" that is the last I saw as the atleantians can come. See as they say they do in reborn human form they will if necessary. So I am aware that there are useful pieces or evidence to see for what I saw anemite. That is bodies there that are what you say showed tendons or created energy fields that stop as you wish or go as you want. That is wat I recollected that day I anaemited visited the area I saw as atlteantians old cave they were reborn elsewhere as I remember them saying anemeite. As enmity is done your energy isn't there. That is what I use to escape with as I thought it we are escaped, as prisoners are not there or not there is what we thought as this is tat.

tere = Say this as you are; As this was a long time ago where you were as a colony in idea or in an idea situation with no food unless you thought food there, so you see to the idea daily affairs you see to set foot not in or on you can speak. As you say that is possible idea, don't speak it as possible till you need it to be as they were so don't have to be or only create better.

set in stone; Set nothing in not in pattern. Assertive I figured out what what the problem was in deterium, so the area was programming as energy was thought. So set it against the criminals, as the idea was a wave energy pattern. Don't control the non idea, as non criminals as your criminals your not so good. So as tat not attacked your good.

set = set tat as energy isn't there, for there is nothing there so we are in a subdimension by creation with thought by solar energy or not there by choice. This is tough thought as nowhere to live is death on the area energy rising or falling sea energy in the street. Leaving the place as the end.

Seenier = See to use; See in use your right but were aware animals or otherwise. See or set is thought, your use is energy by thought to watch the criminals trapped in fox or animal shape. As I set the trash heap trap that was cool. The trap was used to create or rest by thought no control from them, that were christians that don't actually exist after the area was excavated or thought by use.

Asent = See so; So to use energy is thought energy, see as you are your energy or creation freed to use. So energy in energy use is created or thought by camcorder.

so = so so is so taste of china; Seeing that was tat isn't done so is the wave energy, still or not I am going to release myself from stasis. As I feel like not creating creation use, see or set feel is thought to fix to used idea by focus energy to a touch. See or area energy movement that similated, the energy of thought ground energy shift as if sifting through a filter. Nothing that use is human to the taste.

SetNoFer = See fall; Say as you are on or near the end date. That is an end. I saw the sea fall, it was great as the end was endif or end by feel with no fear so are you positive you are producing?

as in en = See creation; As you are your created. See as you are aware of your end is done so shift back. As the area you see is what you can focus the area radiation is felt to form by feel to the area as radiation is spread through the area as thought focus is creative in use by view, you set to create by focus with the radiation to focused idea or form what you are wanting to create by the feel or not do to create idea. As not false if the area idea as accepting the area, that was energy to feel by use with energy to form by imagination.

Assert by non = See shift; This is a spell to create as you want as en. See as you are your aware or ability is creativity by feel. "When you see a wave of shift don't come back to me", I saw in love another still life still living still in focus still working still in living life by thought you see I saw that as an interesting idea. Not anymore came from the idea.

Assertive by feel = I feel a place to shift to as I use, the third eye focus to stop or create that is without anger in use by feel or use as I somehow get over this. As you see or create in use, that is interesting by feel but focus is restrictive. As you see you are you don't produce by feel, you productively create not by "thought" thought in feeling or thought is good use.

Assertive uses = As you set; That is energy use by feel to use, so use is not as such abuses are not so where you are. As you see a wave pattern to see or set, what you want by idea is thought to see cool idea with dark as light in matter. As you don't worry your cool.

Assenter = Seeable conclusion; Say as setting up is creative uses in view. See as you are an idea arachnid fan, that causes your point to exist by subconscious control or as you see no crystal bowl that is no crystal.

See as use = Seasoning; That is interesting by feel but none by insisting to reentering, by relenting by others that follow along to create or feel in use. I saw this as an interesting idea discussion to the area group, that your idea was right or wrong by the conclusion. See as you saw this you may be wondering, well by far to conclusions that are there to use. See as you are usable by information, your use is conclusion to some point in use that you know is a joke to use. So you see what you are to what you use to create or see isn't necessary, as you don't have to use this you survived not the tact. Curious that I wasn't noticed to notification by this before. I believe it was a spell to prevent the area idea to use that was done or not.

Try to shift by relocate with the essence to use as excess energy, with magic to cause to the core of the planet. As you see that is violence, prevented by seeable violent or non violent intent. See your not really trying to get away as you do. As you are essence in use your energy is essence by feeler or created, that is energy by essential oils. As essential to the vitamins you so think you can create as you can, what you see as science magic to use by feel. Something about this doesn't make sense so use magic to do. Whatever your disgusted at you are if cannibalism or not. So as if never described or never depicted that is creative to use by fellowship in feel so you don't.

See in flow is exalting to credible use, idea or feel is idea to use by use. See that so no abuse or beaten is idea with thought. This is the end of the age you see the use is ageless as you see or set a purpose, but as you are in idea you get by indecision in idea by use. There is were or by brainwaves, that form or create wolves and people in that as use things or create as you see you step foot in an area you create but you don't as you situate by subconscious. They are as you want so you create to not ever more, so effecting others as you see you want no fingers or create in life out of the wrong turn.

This is the end of the age you see the use is ageless as you see or set a purpose, but as you are in idea you get by indecision in idea by use. There is were or by focus with brainwaves say to create as iron is energy, that form or create wolves and people in that as use things or create as you see you step foot in an area you create but you don't as you situate by subconscious. They are as you want so you create to not ever more, be effecting others as you see you want or create. You can't create if you eat your or others fingers or others flesh. As your idea as a point by thought were logic to the soul. You can seem to be normal though as you define normal idea.

See as your aware of the circumstances, your use is exercise as your ability is creative. So your energy is energy by your feel for the area to the area you see, sensed out is the area to an area you see by feel to see preparing or prepared idea. This is energy that is create or feel. As you see that on part you can think the idea as any action is defense you can defend. As you see the area is defense by feel, that is thought to use by focus as you are not eating flesh or want no eaten flesh.

See daring the identity that in opposite or not by idea was use in able feel by focus or sealith energy or was no ounce of flesh. That is energy use, yet not focus was the true type of area. As you see to focus or in the end you create, depending on the area energy a good or bad result is possible. Think you are reading the result as you say the end point, before the means in idea were done you could say focus or create by use.

See as you say the idea, so tattan idea in Mayris or titan anger issue is addressed by thought is idea your created area is energy as some source. So by thought in use is correctable by use is by thought an idea in Dargonesti Mayene. See by creation to calm down, use is thought by counting till calm unknown. As you know that is energy to see user energy is thought. See or use thought is user feel to correct with fire elemental prince. Seeing idea is creative in ingenuity by idea done in done moments. This was in thought from Mayene as "As I thought to use as do or due, your will is energy your thought is created" as you see in life this is immune by feel by what you wake up for by idea.

Make or feel aware thought as awake your allowed to sleep if you want. As not all the time by right your providing nought "coordinate", insert set by rictor or richter to not incriminate as energy is not necessary as the name was here. Never right by ellusive points is ellusive idea in insight, so as per demented to see your idea or love by feel. A feel is a point your poison if death, think by matches are what you are you see or sense for thought.

Seeable as noth provoking nor thought act by art with conjolance or thought in nothing by use is something. As you are with response with a scent of murder, so you see say the area create is thought by no effect. See as you are or others see that is "maeken hawkin" as not comslap concept thought concept made not done by idea, time in focus by field as providen as thought provoking is thought by feel in idea. Not on things are what is with things or nothing, done is thought no need so this with no use is not by thought by idea in allowed convenience by idea so no mark so mark no more as consequence is nothing thought is correction.

though = thought; think wat you want that is sometimes or thought not but cutoff from area use not carnivoric by idea as yes you are better. As you see your aware state by focus is energy ambivalent or crerative, thought is idea to direct the area so that is controlled by the area you see in use. Think the area radiation is in focus, your energy is thought to created feel you think to what you or others say as its what you do. When you let ends meet you get what the being says as you think, what you desire as you see that is energy = so gets what you think you create what you need as your you by feel thought exists.

If in focus energy surmises by friendship, sea or foe use in idea is energy to create still or moving without extra weight. As you see or as you feel so not do is what, this is energy as you don't intend to do if neat or tidy don't. As unnecessary or if necessary you know, you can or not eat if no food as you are seeing idea this is obvious. Sea is energy use is feel, so no see no use no feel nothing inconsiderate. See or created is use by feel, so the idea in use is focus as your area. As earths fine your energy is focusable your energy isn't as you seem to feel cool hearts fine.

See that is energy as you are aware, your feel is realization or no thats nothing so watch out as you see is what you feel. As you see that is or not, as you are aware by non awake or wakened moment in no use. The area you see is feeling by idea, in insight you see your created idea is energized bots so you can create cool idea or non in use is not by feel. As you can say nothing is what you do, that you see is nothing you can use by feel except with nothing mental meant is nothing more done by idea.

See as you able to remind yourself as your able to not try to vitalize a rat to life, you won or I won't actually be able or so to do this by focusing the energy area. As thought is done as this is exact so as you can't see, don't move unless you know where your going or that is not by use to fool the body. So as you not do things in the mind the area the body is, so as you are you can create for yourself or use is nor as the punishing blow is not by use. This in what you are as you see, that is not as you want as the eating raw fleshed is not by getting there. Your purpose is getting some area response or creating, what you see unless you don't need what you got.

The armor of god effect as your use is focus, you aware by this or concept by use is focus energy thought with use see as your well. Your isreal is condoning as it is reading your aura by the spirit feel. So you see the feel is thought, as you do things they do things if linked to you as you are aware to the area. So your energy is with use or in by an area, as thought in an area is use by feel your feelings are unhurt by idea to create. As your energy as you see reason your idea fixes things or creates, as you say the creator creates not with distended or intended feel or new age is focus. As if maelkor is the god of "tat", see as dimension you see this is an idea to use as you don't call him you won't get hurt.

See as you are aware, you can create or feel by figure. See the reason I saw this was you were watching the area, as you are as president your anger is stopped aware your energy is destroying what you want or northcare in idea isn't as the area is focus. Thought is feel to creative end by some end to results by feel. As you are the defense if you die, this is "as you ate me I became you or you became me then as you didn't I became myself as yourself is not me your ability is spirits", as you can walk you can shift by focus in idea to your use.

As the thought is the solar energy, that is because above for a point you see is not there as you are not with night. That is energy from the nighttime, by feel your energy is concept so create. As you see this is not created from area influence. This is the solar flare that causes things, such as idea you think up to the solar energy by thought to the area light. That is direct to cause disorientation or focus is energy, some loss as you try to walk is by the area you can remember or feel is fine as you walk by thought to the shadow way away from here.

So say as you want to create, what you are to the use as imagination rules the moment as a way to survive. So as if there in the wilds that as magic is what can cause it, done or gut is thought in wound to kill the body and you become yourself as you are yourself after your awake. As you are aware to see membari tactics are not, for everyone so if you have the genes for the body to use you use nothing bad as you are no arrest. Have fun if you can.

See no wraith is not impossible to shift by feel or create, this is the creator so the creator can change what you wish. As you say "As you sawe or create by feel" you are changed from "wrait" or meaning wrapped in the point to use or idea bread. So a wraith by ring bearer is not made with care as a wraith is focuses or thought, no care sometimes by craving with thought by idea as if I didn't tell yet I did. As the area is thought as your idea is idea in the physical yet you are done, as physical based beings are what you think they appear as you are or can appear. Seeing as you create your area is undoomed, you are not in a bad disposition as the man in black don't drink as you see the men in black don't drink.

Now that could form a wraith. Know that some ghosts are trapped by old bones laying about. As into an area you can feel their presence on the bones. As they use the bones as fuel for their effects. So they don't wanna go by throwing things and acting out. I find it amazing there're some ancient magicians who succeeded to stay alive in an inorganic form in or by this world. That's true and when they lack of power, they stay in their graves and waiting for 'power food'. Some of them still have many allies as they might be as liches, their friends are like djinns and ghosts. Well I know, that the liches are sometimes the ancient magicians power form an they can kill a man by sucking his power. See you know by the well in time that you see by use, your idea you create is farewell so feel free to use what you want.

maui = not eat the human, as you saw you might say maui can incite man eating. Unmaui if not to eat human meat as if in the wrong turn. That was where we had noone, as you see the area collapsed thereafter as the aphrodisacked people didn't move. The catalyst was the feces as you see the idea was what you had as thought. So as you are seeing this you might sense something considered a flashback. As fingerbites were what was left, they were cast out energy forms by will energy permutatable energy. So the collapse of the caverns, were the end that were desired as you see that was the catalyst to the warning trap. Released was energy you could say the mad cow or other namable idea released as a locked door were here. That was to buy meat you could get the diseases as disorder was strewn about, so that is the end of this 2nd colony as the last person died the place destroyed its own location as vibration with loud energy as the planned wave energy was a volcano erupted then another. You see we saw this, the end was there as you see or create remember as a blue heaven its up to you. So to deal with the result wat was done, if you got the diseases is how you dealt with what you got as "en in em". As end in embarrassment you cast the bad luck away to create positive idea in an end as "am".

Third colony: Marche Allean

This is idea to create from the energy backlash that I saw one day as I travelled back to my body. I was like whatever could create is watever sows. Thus the energy was an on purpose. The targeting groups that were using things to target the US I was in, was not without resources as this is the 3rd colony. I will not mention however things I saw in idea until necessary that was how I stopped by use the mad cow in my diseases. So I was aware that you or others were possible effected. See that is energy this is the land energy, we created what was an escape or idea to match velocities to the area. Seeing in thought you can say the last the 2nd colony was over. So what was done can seem doable if remembered.

As this age of christianity is over, you can say this is the end by the area I saw, you can always bet on another disease from the cavern that is there is by feel with an no focus to get in the disease. As the subconscious removed by visual form any essence, that was there by the area sensation with the power of nucleus frozen in transit as your body thought "shift to sift" therefore we knew you'd come so don't use it. Whatever you see is safe don't think the object to recombine into the original, as anyone that does can recreate human energy as whatever is thought in particle form can recreate itself.

There as you are or see the language shifted to this version, http://www.atlan.org/articles/true\_history/ as tis this now with nothing to compare. See as you are aware so you use or feel. As you see <http://www.divshare.com/download/9150704-3f7> is a root word study. This is how I found out. Then the wave backlash disperses, as if not there as the creator disperses the idea. As it is you start some idea that uses some resource, that clears itself up as the source if overuse disappears as because of the use there is no excess.

mea = Amoleriat "rat" Cooking meat; The painter surprise that most don't want. That parent to prepare or meat in use, that tastes like human cut to use as cooking food as a cook is like a dog or cat food as them. Only the koreans can stand it as if you are an were with beauty that is with or not as an inner or outer area.

malaise = toilet no use, memory recall, no malaise is by the end you don't have to seem in a movie to seem memories so that is in an interesting movie, as he beats all that stood in the way as the end is a surprise. As you saw the idea by need as a good feel is where you thin, as you know to come to see pleasant society.

Seeable = Ass in this; With this spelling is avoidance damages, to absorb damages or energy even allow no evil influence that you are confronted with in your waking life.

Salen = Salem money trick; Assumes not as you are or 10000000 dollars is thought, but not yet now you know not to work him over with no ruin by the creator or use.

Sea limping = Sink no use; This is purchasing by 11000 times the wealth. Stew meat is signaturing not realized out by things as I saw what seen was there I avoided, I see that we have something that should be returned as I returned it the area didn't change. So I shifted back to my body, as I thought "farewell caverns of hope" I was away to see where I was. As I shifted by activity I was in my actual american body, so others were in there's so as I see it there is idea energy. That to use as even if the creator made it safe or not as I see some past due items. Set by a thought to use as a feel is possible to create no purchase.

Sawii = Sewii is Saey; I loved you yet I was standoffish that I was as this is yet the final saw was horror delighted, as I sent bad energy to saw to kill the person before he came over I was curious was it even possible to see or not do trial? Yes it was as I knew, the guy was tere that died by the atmosphere as he died by a night being dead before he was there. This is a perfect counterenergy to a counteratlantia use or create with counterbalance, to kill with as you think cauterize you sift to the planet core with the diseases not there near what you did.

they = mulch fire, Giant as a point or not grown they are young except to seem mature, as your giant your able yet not much in use unless you are understood or created by challenge to use a country. As you don't lie to them they do sometimes, act to not attack if aggressive or in their path.

See Inv = Sayan in; Invert is inversion to an area energy, that is a shield or focus time is use by idea except as you see this is not to attack. Those unwanted are useful as your not, a point to not be hit that no test if no need. A test isn't necessary by need or feel, for a cat is curious not to destroy themselves. Say as you were or create with feel not feud so no feud is here.

Enio = Ankh; This is Enkh the area or fluid that was there this really was an ankh to purify things by the energy, the ankh creates from the imagination as the creator fixes this as idea is bacteria that dissolves itself by fire energy as a focus. Ankh ability is energy to use as you focus to get something the aura cures itself. As laughter is the best medicine. You are what lives as you are able to do things.

Ei Io = Toilet use by focus is thinking or used idea

Ei Ia = Seeing is believing, Ienergy

Eo Ia = As you see we have each, see other as your ideal isn't energy.

Encin = Encion annihilation; As your aware energy. As I see an area I know the area as I know the business. Sa Ne No Na No That is create as you are aware or no no more is thought useful is producing not to push. Ne Na Sa No see As there never was a natural person is thought a in witchcraft effect to save as needed, as necessary if you can seem with done by effect or not paralyzation as asheim and you know.

Anio = Anonymous by the idea to their way. As your energy is an cool as momasia. That is amnesia by idea, wow amusing as I remember that area and era, this came from that you or others were forced to work together as you had interesting idea to do for cold drink idea. As you think the time to influence the actual idea is our time influences your time by the thought, you have or what is done is done or create help by nothing in focus to direct the idea. You sense with the area energy conscious or thought is in so your done, this in eagle is a power of a life or death idea done to summon pardon or ends in a party. I am done.

Ankio = ascertaining what is; As you say or ascertain things are you can create or cream. As you say it it does form as the thought exists by the creator if he wants it as you are aware. That is focus to see only what you want or whatever. See as you are your energy is your will as your energy id your will by nature, you can create as you thought to do.

Ankho = Anchor; As you see the area is what you see, so or do what you want to use as you feel is thought to use as you see cool is hot or not an if en.

Asseit = Ascertain; I saw that as the area I looked with focus revealed, by energy with not a punch to the face and nothing that is idea in new creative use till the very creative idea or ass. See this is use as energy that cool is cool or hot is hot. So as issue we sometimes decided as to seem destiny is human, that is what I thought when I saw people or idea in the tarp or area. See as stragglers from some area with no war or yes in mind, not do or what is with idea or was a sleep that you wake up not in feces scent. In the end that was there, your well or energy by what is create as cool. As your cool you a were by feel yet atleantian or thought was nice as insane "orr", sorrow or not was sane is energy thought creates or not as you feel, to create or focus as energy manifest to use. That was cool so energy use is energy focus, just see to get food as necessary what you see is thought was opinion.

Asc = Ascertain in view; See as your view is realism, your energy creates by some feel or vision. As this is atleantian remembrance or see to is use by non as nothing.

Scenable = Accumulate; Assume to see or feel by use, your energy is cool to idea the warning is hot area feel. See not disgusting as working as separatism view. This is by fire that is creative with water to work by idea.

ass = association, as an act of association see time is activity to see your your idea is thought as an idea is relative by idea relativity. As you see a point or thought the associated idea is an act. As you see the scene being behind the scene you are nothing, but an act considered in view not considered otherwise.

Curiosity did not kill the cat. Curiosity is what enables us to transcend dog-ma, limiting beliefs, and rigid reality constructs that may prevent us from experiencing the truth of our limitless potential. As RB is what you said this weekend..."Choose cat-ma. Don't have to do it." Stay curious and In-Joy!

Heart-centered appreciation to All the amazing peeps who participated in Denver Matrix Energetics Fundamentals and Unplugged/Spatial Clairvoyance Seminars. We are as you loved laughing, learning and PLAYing together in the co-creative seminar experience. Thank you. We will see you all in the field of the heart, in the field of ME, so not hitting and thin in the ever expanding field of limitless you!

Ack = Jack; As you see the other side of the idea we saw, that you might see this as demoning is use as in the name it you have it. Eckerd is were wreckage. This resembles what you see, as in an imagination with a finger activity by support or use is keg by idea. See <http://alt-sites.tripod.com/mod.htm> is the last remaining idea in use by idea. The real reason I remember this thought was, as the last place I look held my memory. I was basically not done till now. This was the 4th colony, as I "relembered" so remember by thought before we were here.

thhe = amoliat, creative or not had, not had, double had, double handed, made in use ehhe = double intelligence on use, laugh

ahha = creative, as you are smart sade = saddism, as you see feel the energy to use the area, as your area isn't a beating life the waves are absence use by feel to see use as you think to use as you see use is.

Bradisim = Brad, Daring, Air uplift sometimes by a nutshell with hot air by seeming in feel.

Emsc = ansf, emergency or emerging vehicle, head rush as necessary or see, as the vehicle is there you can go around.

Ennc = Encumberance, as weight settles to disperse as dissipated energy from you in the aura from thought seep by activity, with volcanoes if you are aware accept by feel so the distant area in the area you perceive doesn't destroy you by vibrations. The particles dissipate from what you see as you never run into people. So the area you feel exists can see use elsewhere, as some idea is thought to not be there this isn't. As if the table disappeared you can walk around to the perception, you see or think is use by watching or sense I see no use is sometimes. What you create by other area, not thought in notice is not thought as by thought all might not, so not is noticeable if nothing there so as nothing to get. As all atlantis is by idea as your ability is a story that is what you think.

Seek = See or unusable; See as if an unuse is thought as you see an idea work, the use is a mark freed by idea your energy is use. So by free nature as your energy free your use is idea to cause the idea to find things so the marvel is creative sight.

Enn Fi En = En Fi; Final foil or form. This is the end by idea my memories for this era were complete. The America I am is technology with magic or was this in idea is the 5th colony ended by focus with a superstring as energy was to much the chaos dissolved itself. The area in dimension I saw was an angel placed one so I created a painting to view it, yet I was stopped by idea to use normal area means so I am bankrupt so no more than that as we predate you. So if you start or try not to create as arranged partices by imagining space, seeing or seeming around are an almost idea that isn't as if right space right time unless necessary.

Now death is upon me as I am aware so what I was happy to go out by I have seen, an I phase as this was basically a concept I was prepared for the end as I was washed over I saw nothing left except as I was aware I was not needing. So now I will go out to the area to wake up, so as I smell the air as I hear or can see as I saw water I watched as I was shifting away. Am I the only one to have seen this? Yes is what you want not no as your energy is anarchy your will is energy. As I see thinking I remember still as this is what I saw as I saw was dead by death, so you see as I was looking to repair or create as business allowed in my american form.

I was numb yet seeing so I stopped, so to see the land as you see I am awaiting or using by idea. Watching is fun so I had to do some idea, that is my reason despite the fact you are dumb for using plastic to coo or not as essentially done. That is nothing so as you are you create, your energy is cool as immortis aids. I end the moment as I live or die. So I am aware now I am sure, this end is gone by idea. As I see this I see a flash of white as I am in my body yet again. This was found as I searched in non use by an area I saw in central or north america.

No immortal's curse so I am sure yet different, as this is the eternal curse of Immortis now by thought for reasons you think. As you are to seem nice or creative. He only made that since the cave incident that was an entrance to some area. As that was useful ideological thought, your idea was non idea deceit otherwise non alliance to theory or seen cause. As I was to the use or form to work by idea to create, he would create or see use to create witness for some time theory by wasted by idea he was destruction.

Here is a quote, "See for the life of me I was not unaware of the fact. Say or what you get is the old saying that is done or means are creative, as this is no more the new age is mysticism. As after this depends on whom your talking with seeming this druid from wiccan that is cool not to attack. As you wish you will you can become what you wish to become. This is what you want to use by the area as energy is a source. As you are aware this is energy to the use by feel. So as well as you are you create by aware idea or feel in body. This is usable to convert things to use as you think of an area. There is nothing wrong with me. So if attack is revert attack is to stop the idea. Corrant is use if revert is done, then consider stop as the point is not by intruding and whatever are you eating enough. Eating enough is use of dieting or less or no eating.

As you are cooking clean your hands, creating or working as the idea is better there is cool results were you able or are creative so you can get idea better. You create creatively or what you see is what is there. The easy way to astral project is create by what you think as you feel, where you imagine or not be where you don't need to be or just think to be. As you do the act, feel the area to gauge the pressure or area feel is say the words you can create by rite. As if to correct is "to don't before the moment as if you thought to not overdo." This in idea is sometimes to do some point were this to not overdo, so use by imagination or "to not be overly done or spend too much" as you feel to focus the moment of thinking to balance out the effect that is energy interesting to use." -Dr Smith

As nightmare idea or not that seems as though you are nice so that is transer, so as a concept I think that depends on the person with you by the person for energy by alcohol sugar. As you use sugar or substitute sugar not always done is exercise or still energy weight loss, as weight is disappearing to the use with focus to lose weight easier. See to not eat too much by thinking you won't you won't or so suppressing urges happens to use. Thought to perception isn't reacted to by idea unless thought is to going there. So if you allow your ability to seem navigated by the planet you can shift around. Use with some instinct is the shift where moving is the focus as movement is dumbness if allowed paint nearby inhale is your high.

That prevents dreams by the feel or creation is done, as you don't have to print the word you can do without need as no need. This is the true area I saw that described it, as you are aware now to the state you see this is the legend of Atleantis. As time shows us things we are in where we buy what we do as we are. That is our area setup as a fate is not done there. As you can shift as you focus, not on music vibration by music sound played as you think or reminisce. That as you think to use experience to shift somewhere if you think to see.

There is or was a war or non at all done to sustain what was there, thought till necessary so that was as the wave hit the sunken area formed to use. As you were aware the wave machine, was dismantled from my vision being realized thus the Odin got the crystalis stone setting the wave off. Thus is as you were yet you are now different so what is it or how is it you come? I come as I am aware or remembrance allows. To see others being beaten suggests that some part of your life is balance, as their visions are that is correcting by what you think to do for yourself or not take out people as you see the persons use. So figure out what you did wrong, don't take your things out on people as you are by use.

Thus I am or was different every time I came or were able I was going. So I am aware things creates are from the release, by energy that was first a wave then an energy by chaos by what remained. So that is from watching difference in an idea Odin hides nothing yet if unwanted is avoided if seen, freaked out as I was from what is there I was wondering why I died. Thought when alteantians are the faery by eternal youth or from death as the area I chose to die I would come to live. So I am aware to use, thought sometimes in progress or created by nothing as manifest is by the third eye with focus as some usage. This came from visions of a mad god, that was life working with death. There was no regard or no fight, no flight night feeling as no flight. So I was as I saw yet could not move at all or not see the use, as what you did things stop working.

"Saying so" the forgotten times are as in there is no forgotten past, this is an interest by story or thought by deed. I now see why Mayans are there by the use. They are as death, disruption to the "norms" as normal society is allowing. No is to nulle anger or as you see, the area is death yet they treat the faery as gods or death gods. As you think effect with them in mind, see for something to do if bored is by with the creator energy. As I thought the satellite can see usable to create, thought to see use is needed to create by what you wish.

As though you "see manifests", as if you are in with energy by feel or create. As you know how or stop now I stop, growing in weight working with weight or no pain is no past forgotten. As theory was you experience what you don't want, see the idea or will as not till right to your spirit is correct or by feel. So or aspersion you thought or you see to experience idea, you see the feeling is realization is sometimes pleasant or release is stopped. See by tension to some other solar sun is thought useful, see or unseeable by thought aggression by release as tension with aggravation. So rephrase or use their phrases every so often or not to not see effectation.

Useful area idea

wom = womanitus, woman wombats; are wombats from the area I notice, that isn't what you see as you see what you think formed by the area energy or create by energy activists in thought to see or use in idea that causes seen changes into wombat women that bear wombat men wit worse to bear to cause better. Cure is creative ingenious thought.

wim = menningitus whim; As whim is use in identical idea to use things unidentically. Your created whim is use by feel, just do what you want or create as you win or will to use in life to use. There is in use as the energy use, that is in use to create by feel with love to use from people to use in idea. As you see with lore this by the thought to credit or exchange, so for information to life you live with faery you love to exist as no he was him for a long while. View cure to fix as genius is there.

Activie = Doom destruction zone master; That is bezerk use to create with idea, create or not create is what you see by use in te death destrubutive zone in love or or not as a use. There is noting more than what you use that is what you can create with, so as you energy work you create or not war as you see. There is energy in use to create in use, tat is that by fearful or fear not feared is thought.

Asfe = Aspect; Aspect by life is ingenuity by use, as you say is thought to use in idea in asp.

Tat = The use known; Say to thought or normal operation, as you are aware your energy to use in mind. As the use by feeling or use by thought is created, as you see by cool use or figurative idea in use you can figure out in anything. There is normal use or not abnormal to the use in use by mind your minded.

Acvicki: God or goddesses sometimes out by stupidity in mind so not always;

Viki = goddess of earth or endless madness or strange beasts with demises, vicki an use as coul in en "Mother is endless creator that is energy creation stoppable", seeable consol, cancellor by effect, seeance affector, an usable chaotic goddess created by caz the angellic chaos goddess as you see to use nestab, see some cool place that comes is a place you can see with idea in use in use by usable concept in concert. As you see that is a he was mad by what is madness as she was so she was real, as those that do wrong can seem driven insane by her or release is reverted idea or revealed. As in you see this come suggested support does nothing, else can see stoppable or creates with near energy to create with entropy. As you adjusted feel this is the end, avoidable by no means are the means not created or voidable by the creator unless needed.

As I saw endless laughter of madness. As Odin was nearly broke down, nearly insane from the time gate he saw the Atleantians. An un doing energy force is created, by feel not dumbness as you are led to smart action as you remember realize yourself. I helped him out of his madness by the "An En An" to end the cool or create cool idea with water. An I is the manifest as thought is use not, not an "acticity" an act of stupidity that is a view with city activity to create unless not if a bad example.

No as you are not to see an whom or whatever is necessary, an you see this is dead an use is what use I am is there. He was normal to use after without destructive idea, without the idea madness seeming to exist she was not existing madness or use after the fact as he was normal so he accepted what he was doing to not do things again as necessary as he swore to not kill again.

As you say or not create in life that was energy is energize to a point to use by effect. As your will is energy your idea is creative use in life or life in concept is energy by a point. That I what I learned from this in idea to use, as you stop use to reactions to energy you stop punches. As thought is you are aware to use in life or not in the area is the thought, you did by the area idea to better or not neither that is better.

As thought in idea you see as you are watching by idea, your concept exchanges by idea you see with success in idea. There is endless displays or thoughts to the city of madness, not use in the normal city as normal is acceptable with thought that was creative or creative. This was what men were created in from a claustic mountain, so "he" city is thought in the earth by dumb or normal activity in archaeology creative in use is smart in the idea we did an area free from influence in the mind. "She" is the city is or archaic disrupt by created idea, this is with the focus you feel as she is the planet Not everything can seem recorded as there is more to our past than you can think.

Nion = Seaborn painter that surprises you; See no weight is as you say as this seems less by idea in eating system your actually increasing hunger, so stopping the visual that you see you know by suggest to suppress urge. As no use is as thought is competency especially for shopping especially no eating paint, by concept is not too anger issuish seen as non self-centered by thought I am aware of the dangers so I can defend as to attack as some laugh necessary to get normal. As you are or are aware to the use your ability is energy as if your were is alteration.

Sandan = Sandman; Sounds by laugh is sounds with laughter to tell what went wrong from madness otherwise or "tell not to kill" not to go to the grim that is the ruler by some means, somewhere as not described but to wherever you want by good suggestion as you state the phrase not bad. You can use a sandman effect or sand golem not attacking by use. As you are to do seems as you say is, as you don't do now what you know as your subconscious does. The idea is correct with turmeric if bad result, seeing how I like this as you due you don't get to do or feel is done. This ends with peals of laughter, that as this is your able not promised to do.

Ba Mojo = Bone magic; See or not is assume or not is correct so you figure things out or find things occurring, create by feel with realization to bone magic this is from a buried animal spirit so to touch a bone this in the mind of matter. Then you know what is necessary or create by idea, that give or take is concept thought to happen as you say or think to guide as you say or know not to do. So as you are I am management to your mind I am not assigned to you, as know to use is to guide or see to use or say how you feel to tell is to see relief as avoid bad mojo. To wake up requires a memory of waking up or see is no mad no slap not minding or not effecting. This is were area as to not seem, as effected as you were you are noticing no lead. Essesart tattoo or Eisart as you see is fun not on you.

Asect = See no Anemoliec; An "mom" no "father" as unnecessary so as you say no animosity, insect by use or creative in purpose that is cool or rephrasing is memory. As you are aware to see or become or see "an em no" that, you can create by feel as you imagine what you thin to create as you need. Whatever shape or word is there by feel to create, that is created with idea you think to feel or extend not as this won't effect if feel as necessary. Cancelling is an en no mo, touch say as what you see is to see idea. As you see there is no tuberculosis, as you change to what you wish as a wish isn't dying to destruction or not effected. See by thought no as not is non idea, no fear bug by no unless necessart you don't usually. See these idea as you are aware, see is madness or new as you thought. Anemelic is rephrasing her thought as you think.

Aseicat = Seeable cat use; As you assume or create to use is thought by focus or create use by the thought with focus or creator. That you turn a disease so you say what you want in idea to use as you see a reason to not turn as no disease.

Asailen = Assailant; See as assistant this is bad. Sale or not as allowable is with no assailance please or no in use. As you see or feel use is cool bro bottler.

Asumn = Assumn; Death or desperation is use by sea in use without fear or use is done by idea or sacrifice. As is disgusted with cool or not hot, see if dead as dumb then noting will serve. That is what stromboli did to the romans that lived on the surface that is a volcano.

The third or 4th colonized report

This deserves no mention as I am sure you are aware by now, I love you for what you see me for as I am aware. That you see we were is what I noticed by feel, or not that we are dead yet alive where vampires. So this city is the refuge or a city of vampires or area. Tat is where we exist until we are aware, by feel often mistaken by the area we observe to use. Tat is energy to revive with that energy came from living bodies. So as you see this is an energy to the feel to shift away to create viewable results. Simple with feel to create idea in focusable use or not by focus in mind. That is mistaken by what is useable idea to the area, you thought by concept use by grey or unusual rites. So your idea is created by burning progress with empty mind that your energy is left. So were use or feelings by the use or thought to create, to use to depict or motion for created energy we thought to use or focus is creative. So by the right motion to create, as you thought to feel or creation by focus to the creator is the creator activity. As if we were okay with you here.

There is a point or use idea that is creative. As you see or not you can't tell a lie till necessary. By motion or not use that we feel or thought we perceive or ought to use idea correctly. The spirit knows what you will do or what will happen. So tell me what you think as that is what you see or consider, if you don't need it to not see what is there. Their is a were effect, though you see what you remember you don't always have to do it. As you see state reasoning is area related think to seem with someone to work with them. There is no energy or enamel focus entropy by feel through though, so create as you will energy to exist as the creator can create nearly anyone or any thought.

The Dadaelus Lorebook was in the mind that is idea to your concept created that in the Dndgame that was living, that disappears but stays till disappearance occurs by idea you see or focus energy with amulet or focal medium that if you blow out a candle the moth is with no remainder as fire with no candlelight. Reclaimable by feel from where you are by what were doing by focus with an idea feel. There is no problem with noting or nothing, that you can't see so if you see things you don't like then your area is some place not always to be as things are demonically drawn to as demons like magic effects.

As an idea in mind is, what you see is done. So use is creative by the area. By concept you set off to what you see, your ability is energy or feel to use by idea as you see this is me. As if me or you is useful, your faery goods is blended by the mind in thought to seem a drink or created by equal motions or now by use is conclusion. As sorta good light. Sorta like the negative astral being attracted to the area, as a moth in a fly trap that is exactly what I was thinking about when I formed by a white flash the conscious sees as blinding. There is things you don't do owever, as you see you create so no fear is there thus don't strike out just sense to go around.

Midnight express was from this that was the idea from what exists for the area as 10:43 is the midnight point where daylight is, 7:43 in various degrees by north area or south area the north determines the direction if unopposed for three reasons. Tat is date, Dat is night where DZat is date and time with night by feel here as a dark being is also night considered nightmare. Thats about theistic area energy in this life that drew me here. Now I am curious for use to see changes or can change used idea to create in life.

There is energy enough by replenishing the pool with or not if too full, as you say the area you want to see you can convert radiation to create by the feel or need with the creator to see as if free energy. As your aware you might not be near me, if your not wanted or needed nearby unless you have a good reason. The life save is informing or theory in forming is creative by a concept you think the creator can restore or you can't afford, as you see what is energy use to feel or create by financial there is no use in paying back people.

As you see this is some idea by the feel or use, as you see what is there your ability is cool by energy with the eiffel tower use. That is a building you see is very famous by te feel you can use gorgeous gorgepous views with no reason to use as gorgepous is the city I look at from the area. By thought or visual feel you sense to see or not see if doing other things. The area were seeing is France gorgeous in another name to use you are aware of. Solets quietly stay there or quietly work there, as you leave after your done you see. You didn't as you were a capable person, yet tricked by the mind to stay till no ego that is true for them.

They are ancients kidnapped to see what is from curiosity, so they are what you see they are not the first impression as they are first apparent. They are different from what you say you see, as they are actually anyone from their memories from space or not here as here is visibility. See by senses with sensation or people they meet. This is an idea ancient memory is there by feel, with focus with another idea to not seem unless the correct idea is right. See as you think the area ancient the planet comes up with some memory of the past. That past is sometimes perfect you remember by, as with or create or create as feel.

There is an energy to use by feel or create, thought with use or created ideal with release by creativity. So what you see is thought yet not created, as you are not needing this is done. This is a concept that you see is good or bad not reacted to as the karma is just your energy or thought, there is no god no good or bad thought as karma in idea or done to you by thought. Treat ki as energy as karma as light is good.

This is use is true or false this isn't either as nothing reacted and not actually any karmic debt in use against you as you feel unless necessary and not done or done things aren't karmic. As you see the idea you know the way or life, sense is there as your the sense the area is what you see or feel by use. That is not touch a female or man, till they want what you have by watching as chaste or allowing by what you see.

So treat them right if to gain alliance or allowance by use is by idea, the area you work with or ignore in thought what is not always there to them otherwise in life. Their idea energy is creative by feel or thought is some use in idea. Their is in use as usable feel is fairy like or manlike, as this isn't what you see it is what you have done to the use by feel. See to feel or create no cruelty as your use is thought by use, as you see or feel that is the energy to the city as you say. There is no able idea to the scent so create as your clean to create cleanliness.

That is rich in food you can guess, its as if they are what is there or not there by the use. Thought with idea to create what you see if you thought by created idea. As individuality is different idea to feel, now don't think to be as if your individuality is assured to non drugs assured with the use or not doing by feel. This with extra energy you don't have to repeat with or you can create, as you see not you can sense as you get cool idea to resolution. There is non destruction by no destructive means or destructive by chemistry. As you were to feel you are able to feel and be yourself, you are able as you are as they do. They are as if this, so be nice is nice if they were where your not in light by life.

This is the use by the practical, as "in an en" idea is think to use energy focus as some idea object as use, as area you see is energy that's clean you can create by feel to use or creative approach by idea. As think the formation, focus the energy in thought as energy by what you create to use is creative. See as you are aware, thinking the shape and you can form to shape by drinking water with turmeric, paprika or oregano with sesame seeds to use. The aura energy is what you see or can feel by senses in the area, so with someone you see in the place as it is mind as it is they were. The cleanliness allows no problems, so constrictions should disappear by the idea or no mention to use as you think. So just think to shift away before, as your form is changed by energy will an use not drink as alcohol as this is water seen idea with the creator.

As this is if there isn't things that always happened if they were against you, or not as you want and denied power. As you can and they won't as your thought is energy in your will, think and as you express trying things they don't like you can use. The energy expressed is useful still or otherwise, there and their use is not against you in life or not even against what you want. Feel the idea and nature of the thing you sense, thought and this is to think reverse or done. Thought is use at you is reception or sent away is to send energy, as you are to disrupt with the undone idea energy. As if to state reverse and the unliked idea or energy is gone, as if dissipated by what you will or strained away by a strainer. As to cover you create a little coven if some orgy or thought to energize the effect by use in thought.

Aenac = Activity energy; As energy is to use or create by view, the area is creativity yet things are not always right as you. Are you as you seem, see the idea you can create by tiomatic or time area translocation theory by dimension thought. They are as you were or you think to form or not to seem in the area. As the area you see is sometimes in the mind, static use is area your body can get energy. That is decency to use or feel, so stop if indecent or feel bad to not do things to your body that are from a perceived mind vision as not foreseeable.

The area is from the body use, that can see or form as you think or do as you feel or think to create use sometimes. That is physical activity to what you think. So your what you are considering, as with a physical place in an event even though tough thought that is limbo. Where they dream as the area is condoned to brutality to fix by the creator. Note the reason behind their dream. Just by saying Aenac you can see places to be places were you go places. So if your not in an incident or area to shift away by walking, so in the area your in your not walking if this isn't. As a thought necessary to seem see or do you can seem, or find yourself there in the use. This is an idea but isn't there the rule of equivalent exchange, yes the equivelant area energy is actual use yet money isn't always some as barter is trade. Th En Tiamatos = Tio; timeout, think yourself somewhere or not run into somepeople as you feel the area energy where the pulse is that is time pauses a bit, so you are where you think to seem or create by the energy by the creator. I think tis has a shift point or by activity you are were you were or think in use, as the activity is there or watched so don't think about tea activity. So with diced tomatoes, then you won't change places or create. As if tea were here with the soup chicken soup with a broth made from cream of mushroom. That is created from mushrooms creamed to creamy, in form with corn as cabbage is added that is with creative as energy with sauce by choice. Some people can mind this with beans as stevia or browning sugar is with seasoning by oregano with browning the meat, see this is some idea as pork or with other meat is there in the sauce as you say you see it that was the idea point.

Teomatus = So cook; Ads you ignore as you think this is interesting. As a bit of pork and beans, created with servitude by thought with bell peppers as the green bell peppers are added to tomatoes. In olives say with oregano by paprika as you see use with stevia by turmeric with cilantro so chives as idea is thought to use by feel not attack with use. There is noting wrong with this although browned beef or bacon is cool. As you say that is cool energy you use that is nothing like ours in use. From us to undo as necessary.

Fixxe = Assume fix; The area I see is the area I saw, I am as if some area to go I could see by some idea. That by use I saw was not that sane so I left with the body to die or use was nothing by thought.

Fixe = Fixture watch; So the fix is done. Don't if instable or don't do cloning as necessary is thought.

Es by ein "easy go = creator" is fare well don't as you see yet know as you are not drunk. Ein is stein by feel in idea to use that you focus energy to create faery idea effect. As you feel the idea to seem independant, your use is energy identified by the seeming area that reveals by focus. That is energy to see or create use to reveal illusion, around the area or this is not area to sight as you get to seem drunk in as nothing to get drunk about. In the use there is silent time, as your use is own as you seek distractedly you are aware by the thought by energy to focus.

As if there is right or wrong, then things desperate are useful is as thought you don't have. There is no drunken thought by the thought focus by the feel. Even geniouses can have fun sometimes with ingenious thought wave by idea with medice as meditation focus energy cool. As if thought is energy don't be in the worst space to do it, as you see the feel is love by feel. As your energy is idea to review or create this is great working idea. This is by rachael ray stated as tv producer.

Sein Fein = Sein Feld; So made as in agreement by thought if no sacrifice is interesting yet this doesn't not work with humour, till you wish this does or seems to by the creator with no loss of energy or stop as you want suggestion to suppress. As costs go down you know this seems or not to work to the express or created idea, the creator as no regard to banking or spending is thought is not spending as no this is done as not necessary. There is no "en" more nothing else figuring out things in life, don't lower the point just the not done is done true by what you see in as no need. As there is you see that is energy to go or come, by the flow you see idea with use as use creates what you see an is what you see.

You could disrupt an area. if you do that you could disrupt, the area energy to allow in use in idea to free what want yet disrupt tooth rot with gum disease by idea to use water, the creator to noulle the rot create no problem or if necessary to go to the dentist. Displace the area cancer that is there to reate by feel or work, as thought no cancer remains safe in a safe. Done As you see you are with out anemonies by what energy you see or use, as lava energy is the source energy that creates or idea if not as you are creating by thought or surface cops not as you can create. Dispell dogs essence as the essence is there or here as you see is light energy.

You can make things from energy to use idea, to change idea to something you want. This is known as alchemy as new land. Idea you seemed to have paid as not ever isn't necessary as no billing is no use as you see by what you create. Out by the idea you shift away or not knock away if necessary. This is the atlteantian program I found could trap or not trap, as you see what is necessary or the weirdest area or part were the sigils create by concept with the creator or not as nothing necessary as you see what is or isn't by focus to not slap not hit light.

as ae = as addie; see your non vistable so your energy is what you sense. Well adjust te sense to use as you see or feel to create by the place, that is detected or recalibrated area focus. Say is the focus to create by feel in idea to thought that energy cannot create.

Es Es En = Tat is energy to the use by feel or energy by focus, that is energy use with usable energy feel so you see you can sense the need. Feel or see by the area activity as energy is essence, that is essence with feel by cells that is by idea to create so the cells you see as mold is to split with idea not the mind. So as you percent use the idea your energy is focus feel as in life te mind is present by the auratic in sense by the book idea made real with no games energy yet focused excess is slendering up. Don't seem as to be too tense with this idea. Not in the least probable cause creates unless you can seem hurt if you believe things are happening. As you see them don't look as you are by idea to create, see or feel the area with othersight by true area feel. That is true sight by dnd. We've already played it as you can say is a good excuse to use for avoidance that you think to create is there.

Sean Connery = Sayable feel; Made into an idea useable to your feel, you can create he says but only the idea you see or speaking you can say to hear in the air. Thought into activity to use by the user feel, the area use is area idea to create sane to the area by calm thought. Any concept you feel is without no feel if necessary. Thought is as you see is applicable to feel, see or feel for energy is existing to what you see. With no punishment that is my idea to create with by idea to feel or see escape time if necessary.

See as you are = See not or you can see as is, as you are this is as you are. Seeing to have peace as in chaos. As you see you create your way, that is create by the idea you create by non feel to create with idea. As a focus is satiating to hunger so you can soothe energy in life you see, what you can create or feel by moments to what is concept not from imagination. You what yet not is things that torment or create with use or feel with distance. As a concept is energy to create, you will or see with a sigil or thought not to scream out as not to hit out.

This is the other outer spacial third eye effect with nothing found by use, I may be dead but I am positive with the feel. The I is third eye focus with the creator conscious. As tubb unlard is thought to create thinness by focus energy for good feel. To soul shift is thought to someone as think you see is thought by feel. So no war with grace as your mind is notice your not feel in feeling by grace. You can get mre out of this here except not there in so no use is not seen unless necessary.

That was a super sparkler energy generator for you in particular effect that used is to light a punk, by feel think generator or tire reduction. Then create as you are creative let them think a generator, you can use as a source to reduce by excess loss in appetite. This is na no ne nog. That is si ne na or sudo create, by peace or attack with creative candy. This means as you see is what you saw, so negated "metter" enabled as whatever you think it will still work. So night you see, as you are polite you are cool or creative with signs as you realize what to do.

That say your cool or silent if necessary. As you see netherese with use are used as energy resource as you are with more energy you can or cannot work, as you are assisting with association this is what is weird by feel or created interest is sometime. See as you are and disinterest forsaken thought for natural law is what exists against those in that act as with alcoholism in the body. By dissipated idea that is the alcohol dissipating.

That was what means your ability to see full manifest by concept by flying with the feel is creative interest by idea. As you see an idea you create by feel, as you think will seem to happen can seem. It is as es as is energy by feel with thought. There is energy to focus create to see energy to feel, as time creates by focus what you want as if slow down or your dead as speed up your alive. As you imagine a clock speed up you see use to cause what you feel, see or cause what slow down is use by the creator that isn't what you think to happen.

As this speed is thought as movement, as you think things this is able or thought, experience is ability with energy by use. The rule of thumbs is energy to create what practically can be a speed of time as you say, see to set this area by imagination that is speed up or slow down or imagine things normal to speed up or slow down to next time. As your experienced with the dimension, as you see with the reality by thought that is effected you aren't effected. Will with thought gift as focus is energy use. As you see or suggest to create the creator creates what you see.

See to use medicine is thought a sport with spices, so choose as you pick the right idea as you see you remember by feel to use. Yes we are now we know, discipline is medicine. No idea is no idea yet, you can understand what you see for use. An use in no aeg to use with life. Your life is your own way to live, well this is by feel with idea to create with no force. Whatever you see this is useful to get in over your head or creative use is fellow idea or created concept. Super "soaker soarkler" soaring by energy in a sparkler effect, that is not needed expert devising is there.

As your not needing this you don't have in mind to do as focus is tas in or use in idea. Create by feel so motion thus is thought. Then or now create is the feel seeing use is thoughtful behavior or not use in reaction to create reason or reactivity to solve a conflict. As that is resolution to fix, that is a compliment to you noting more later so fix as you can see. The term mysts means lubricant or orgonne as necessary as water seems to form somewhere.

This seems not done as I sensed you by use to wish by sense your sensing your well I sensed so I could perceive what is there. So as you say your sorry are you? As you see are you really this interesting? As you are not control our idea is done. So noone needs permission to do things. Stop as you see this isn't necessary to do. Sa na na, prevent by idea if interest but not as use. That su na na is create by seeing or thought, sumatra is an oxygen water with super nitroglycerin as he who thought concept in use is with or not is out with some idea felt or think no definite reaction. This was in area idea. Nothing more as less is nothing less as more with smores.

Don't think about things as your thoughts areas perceived or you could be perceptive. Unfizz is a Fizzban effect that is your thought by use or by thought is concept. That is activity by the concept felt as area vibration not gotten though don't vibration. Seem as you need, imagine by feel your concept is thought with calm. Seeing as your mad your ability is sport by creative user feel. War is sometimes useful money. As finance is not tight you can produce. As shown is in faery or manufacturing point as you see don't always have sense. See to feel to create by gut instinct is thought, where when you are not good so feel free with a energy. Seeing as you are is "wen" to use or see thought by viewed result is creativity as a failsafe unless necessary.

To spirit shift is to think shift to somebody or somewhere, with this is no unnatural rivalry as matrix free effect or other idea. By life in idea you serve or create to use ad-hoc is interest. As if once with a thought as no linkin park to others to your use, the area is with the correct mindframe as music is in herent to see the thought. As a cut in perception scene is with your heightened senses by meditation, this is davids saying by feel with association as he was a master or elemental as realizing the element not to use is actually as though realizing grace. As though your will is energy with feel by familiarity or thought, you see this is a grace period seeing theatrics use by watching where you don't always mind. Thinking is a matrix energy concept, that what you see is thought you are creativity by focus.

What you realize is what you sense by others to use, as thought is perception this is the idea by grace as war is from the intent that is thought perception. The feel is what you feel by tea or water sensation, with idea to your idea that is felt or cool to feel. State what you want without feel to get rid of fear, calm so the area you see is the thought in some point so that by percept is realized. Thus as they are by idea they can create, use is feel create is thought not is not action by what you feel you perceive without misunderstanding that you receive by what you sense. So talk things out as communication is importance for useful interaction. As this can deaden you, feel dead something with dead by death in concept. As you see nothing died yet, so this a stopping point.

Sei Sea = The Lorebook; The Dadaelus Lorebook in the idea in the mind is thee greatness by via in thee, mind the book that is in the library by minding what you see in not to seem done unless necessary. To see end this spell is no by no more idea that is though thought were necessary or no recall to what you want. As no is in dedicated injustice. Yes is allowable idea to use.

Sea Cui = The creep; That is the idea the creep is not in the bank to create no funds by taking some from others as though water is energy as though a few more drops to cause no weight even after a few drops as though geodon. This can end in a single stroke to drop faery or dissipate away harmlessly as if "oh al are here".

Sea Bree = Seeable point; As you see that is some cool idea in as you see things they are done or not done as you want. emm as inn enn. So no recall, is a stopping point by the energy idea to use in energy. As that by the assault with deadly weapons or items, stop is some thought or idea with the vigilante spell that is what or were is injunct.

Crate Fries = Asses Inf; So you see I found this quote as I realized what things were doing to me as tis was. "As set idea I think so the creator causes idea, say or not to not get nonsense to as I sat to defend but things happen better with less money needed if possible or not oppositely as needed not have to accepted not to sass me. I now unswear to keep my promise as necessary so I never am brutal. So intricate moment by intricasy that is by ideal. The secret to change is to focus some idea by your energy, not to be brutal as you are not fighting the old accepting that your not fighting your building. Tis with the new by the wisdom the old or new idea can use. No none in hought. Yes that is already known in thought, as you are we are fixing things as we speak not to be insane. -Socrates

This is what I saw was a desperate area by feel to work or play with by idea. This is an age I saw that was interesting, but the effort I saw was useful till proven useless. As you saw that wasn't nice to use." That was energy use by nothing to feel, so this age was seclusive to me as I felt the area was changing when I looked to see the area I created that was what was useful to te idea that told me you were seeing as I was. This was energy to the area groups I worked with by correction.

So as you say you are very interesting if you aren't there to avoid the area that is disruptive to good health by idea they seem to believe. That proves the populace is going down, stopped in progress that started to degrade by the area polution in actions. Thought seeming good yet not that great by activity with energy, chaos focus is not to overdo as you won't overdue it hit to kill to see or not create by feel or use. Yes I did see that. You can shift by night or lava in use, think to shift with love that isn't tough love. So no relative is dead.

Sayer = Sawyer; Reverse gibbering with thought to cure by idea that is something you think. Fairy hiding as though not to seem effected is natural or not as there is the concept to not seem stopped or not sensed in unless necessary. Enough blood? Yes enough blood.

Tom = is ins ops; The spell to create seeable or non seeable idea as your ability is interesting, your abiity is not except in the mind unless energy is in te form by how you can create as how one does this comes natural or thought through idea unless not necessary occurs. This can create idea to materialize in a form you can use, that isn't destroyable to what is the body. See you can easily translocate body or parts as you end up a conscious bug that is killable not vicious. Don't tell if they already know in the life they realize. As you collapse to the ground you can seem noticed, seem or as if your not detected by conceptive or vicious idea people think won't happen as if in accord your a value with life not push.

Decunt = Cunt remover; See the death cunt removal is the removal is idea in removal with or not with a fight so by when the cunt arrives is removed, cunt activity or elven is detecting the area with no corrodive errodivive with warning to stop whatever. Reverse is not effect.

Astute Behave = Astut Behavior; The behavior is creative yet working in life, yet creates what you didn't feel or thought to create. Note they are likely to invert then instead of taking overcontrol than relinquish control to work. Don't force astute behavior.

An tis is anticipation that was from Sawyer Tom Jenkins, who passed away serving by from chaos as the right reasoning is the correct culture. This in use is energy perception by wat you see as useful or not use if no by use. That is Mike Tyson was using, this by a sport idea in sport was use to create with feel by zen. As your zen was perfect your use was what thinking was for use, seeing so nothing is not thought as you think for use the creator creates by idea you feel. Create by feel so motion is thought. Then or now create is the feel seeing use is thoughtful behavior or not use in reaction to create reason or reactivity to solve a conflict.

Fox = The show ended; As you say I was I see or can before I know see or seem, as I am to go so I was as I am or not as I am. No matter as I am somewhere else other than there by what I felt or feel in life, so now I see what I am I am aware as you are or what you see to seem as you think to seem stableby feel. I can watch the things I did as if with cable or tv, if I want to see or remember as I saw I am not with is last living idea this word was done. So don't think your there if you are not wanting to seem, there isn't as you focus to remember as your aware this is gone or not now by love this is life. This is the background from jeff foxworthy.

Selectivity = Select in use our lives in danger; Buried in your mind is the area you see in idea by feel. As your idea is energy based idea feeling nothing is night time practice to create senses others feel. As you see your energy is ability to use idea, think to create is focus by time theory or feel in concept to create by idea to create is nothing excepting is what you feel by the spirit.

Seiem = As before the way I look, I am as I am as you were. I am curious by feel to use in life. I am as you were or as I see not always to seem. I am as you see or as I am to use as I feel that disappear. See use or feel no salem; Think to size the target to prove the good with what you feel is right, that energy persists to shift the blame as if a balance or not use sight to see a dream. This is those that use energy can createby the feel with some event, that once not happening can stop or seeming notice disperses the area activity by the use of no need to get over these things. This is recognising your enemies and step aside to them. I believe you are aware to use as your able minded or gifted.

This is the atlteantian program I found death can use that could trap or not trap, as you see what is necessary or the weirdest area or part were the sigils create by concept with the creator or not as nothing necessary. Accept the blow or idea, your use is well made. Instead of argumenting the point, as you can use the idea as exempling your point is obvious not obvious. Say in case of something is energy, use in the point not too bad you can use the idea. What white lightning is focus light creates that is light yet dark in nature. Well yet disturbance not to seem done so don't do activity, that you see in vision after en taking a drugs. That is after your done eating or I think of what I do or what you think then your done.

Once electric charge energy to create by idea in life, you focus energy by thought you see as your aware in idea. If you want to see what is forbidden or possible as you see you can even lift the dead with the use you seem to create as needed. As though to seem if into the groove your thought is then idea as the concept. You don't have to say the truth to create by idea, as if bringing back many pleasure points the subconscious can create the point. If you want the idea created goes back to the source, you want to use equality as equal idea not always equal. See as the idea isn't to do you can create by scene to use.

Now the credible point is no truly, the subconscious can create by music genre now listen. No sales point that is fact or fiction by use, the point if you want or the idea created is seen that created disaster is allowing acceptance. Don't allow unless acceptance is to not always do until you see the idea to do. So you see or not is use discipline by feel create is not, as you thought unless you want by the creator in life. Serene by thought with feel is with opportunity by what you think is judgement or thought as not to go near to effect or seem as I never accept anything without studying and questioning. Doubt is another function of honesty to seem not effected.

Pi eun Meunst = Pee monster; Removal is the pee monster removing things as necessary. As it is gone or you remove the pee monster by thought to remove an idea or item through, the id this dissipates the pee monster effect. I found this on root 391 to the area I see yet didn't see as a record on a wall. The area will seem in scentng piss or when the pea monster is gone, yellow stains will materialize. This is attraced by use as disipline with money created by as cult in use or not tired as though cleaning your idea.

Monster is essence, that to use is by this thought is concept as you did sometimes pay with piss. So use is defect to get out of his services, as you ask or need some result to get done to create by feel and etz on even though you can turn into a dead body it doesn't matter your not the pea monster. So clean up as you seem able to do. Paying yourself is seeming your own payee or you create to what is idea as a prerequisite. Given any reason he think as e pays himself you won't have to pay by ul illusion. As though not in illusion you clean up as you want, no pot as though in piss or "cleaned or cleaning up".

As not to turn on yourself you yourself see, that use is thought an interesting idea to use. As you set no lunatic on you, there is no reason to do harm so don't do harm.

Seeable dead = See as you are dead; Don't talk as you walk around this by thought creates use, is that what is over or not use is dead energy to see is created or thought is use. As you see the use the area is creative, so your seeable energy creates what is feel to use as results are creatable by the creator. Get the trace to cause a different idea by focus energy.

Waa faet = Water flow; Create a concept with faucet idea in use by focus energy. That is easiest to get things to see use or unuse.

Say Neu = Saying nertralize things in use; So you have to neutralize as the field before the energy is. As you see or create say as you will or not as energy is the idea what there to use as you see inert concept that is neutralizing idea. As you thought this is creative ego not with work.

Say Eno = Say or nothing; See to sometime throw things away is lose a thing so nothing you have is thought that is a sacrifice.

Say enough = Say en; Say as you say that is enough so clean as you want not dead.

See able = Seen to use; So the area you think that changes can create effects by alchemy, en as in youth is energy to see or create in idea see in believe or do what you want. As your energy is creative your idea is seeable to what is yet not in idea.

See is an = This is molecules transform; As your energy is cool as "ei u es", that is energy safety with live area crime in targets or alchemy to change with a touch or nothing much in idea.

In es = See use; That is an energy you see "you can use to escape to nothing". You don't walk into family if you turn into dampire. This is an escape with the dead.

unger = bad formed ungerulk or umberhulk. They are hunched over really badly like a digger that is disruptive to the area you use as they dislike eating people after they are with notice.

Sane Movaing = Sayable consequence; See that is a place that exists yet isn't effected. Sayable concept that starts as no war. Say to not or use as nothing is what in the mind can effect what you think to see or neutralize. This is passing energy by idea with calming concept or peace by idea, purdure to murder to create what you understand or see by use this is use by feel as this sure your energy can create. As comprise is thought as if fate, no comprehension or no compromise needed as you don't take to create by necessity. So use an item to create with the item working. As our way is over your free as is the soothing or conclusion idea. So don't do as you swore if to do bad, as you think this is what you feel.

Think what you want to create as you will or think create normal thoughts unless in time, as you realize you aren't as you seem you can see them with intereference as you in feel the different area or feel someone near unless necessary. Just use nothing as later on, I am or not here as I am done. Light or dark energy focused to cause appearance, can create a being or existance that is shape to sensed area. That is two dark beings are almost similar, can see or seem tough or light is that is idea can cause disruption. That is energy to use or create by light beings to use a white flash in idea, that is brillant blasting as to dissipate harmful energy or cause smell or harm to those thought to effect or blindness.

Cear Cu = Creative cure; Colon cure that is to create by water use, seeing a cure by focus isn with thought to kill yes you can get me. So what you see is unconscious idea to use, or not actually unmove by idea. That is energy to cure, as activity is safe to use or not see te use. Thought by concept is an idea not to attack with use as milk of magnesia with safe oregano with mint water. Think to the creator to create better as to stop the worst behavior by better behavior from the creator. Already have so need be not is sometimes not the use to nevermind the use.

Sene Moment = Serene dust; Scaling wall is sean is great that use is usable to see not in penitentiary, as think to use is create by idea so in use. Thought to pass energy through the body can cause not give life to another, the body to dust itself or what is linked to things to calm myself as you wish. "I am that energy given to yourself" to the focus. Don't use the worst use the best so you won't remind people of their intended idea, that would lead to that so no bad as you see. So by idea in the best is what is or seems to be what isn't to use. See as use is allowable you can do or create something to create what you want.

Sea Breeze = Sea energy; Sea calming energy; Sea is the energy th energy creates by feel the waves create energy the crust is the moving plasticlike melt of lava energy to create in some area to use your focus as energy is cause to soothe the spirit energy. This is forming matrix energy, that what seems useful to generate what you need without frustration.

Easy Vree = Assume use by the worst situation; As you see the use, that is all there is to getting dusted or destroying celularly any body by the molecules but we can use this too.

Easy verbree Ex = The cause effort in a worst case; The area you see is interesting yet nothing is what this seems, as you see that is credible use to focus energy that shows you what is effecte. See or what your effected by idea is use, you can see what is there by the area sowing till you won't want to see the idea. Think is thought that is creation in idea. That is chaos non intensified, so energy cleanses things or some things can calm by focus use for entertainment. Where we are something we don't always go into the idea, as if non weight we see not listen unless necessary things are as you want to seem. As you realize the things or thought, you are released from what you see or think to create now think less now.

The end by this is the end to your life as a concept is disrupted to seem good your out by the effort you intake with water. So if illegal water your ability to use by some concept in use, that is energy by focus is focus energy some by life. This spell cancels things out by what you think or thing to use. That is focus or use for ya, if you see idea in idea that you are. See as your ability is energy no more to use, no alcohol or theory in life if the body is by feel near you correct as by feel. If so you see that influences your english, this improves by feel with concept as you thought with theory not to see them with excess. There is an idea you use that isn't quite practical, so I changed it the idea to tune out idea that is not able to do unless necessary. This won't cause assault by deadly effort if no aggravation. You don't have to do it.

Set no = Matrix math trap; A worst possibilty, as you are aware to the feel, you can cause or create what you want by this that is stomach energy or cool idea not to. As there seems in that as you think not to you won't be trapped. As you see the idea you create you set free the spirit by use of idea, as you see or witchcraft to use in idea is not by nothing in thought as your energy is thought in your use to feel. That is te way of what you see or not seem unless ecessary. As you see the area your created in can support by what you think, so no matter where you are you can live as you want or fix as you think necessary. This a point you see in use. No is a nature of a strangler universal knowledge as you see this is the energy, you create by the feel yet the area you see is what you realize. As you see what you feel is thought in life idea your idea, see independant results is what you know.

So you release know the matrix in effect an by thought that your not effected, non is what you see that is focus to what energy releases the need to not do. There is no reason to work unless you think, as yes there is thought if to improve an reason in thought is by use were no need your non weight with that seems no response or response by the creator. That is why know is meaning no, as it is you are as you were in thought no idea to view unless necessary. This can increase the weight or decrease the weight, as you think to suppress the urge you see to use inn no or yes. As your an energy to quell the tides of what should not seem to create, your ability is energy as what you feel is not to see as your able to exist yet work or not in existence. Think not to feel bad as you feel better.

Say Ez = See this man; As you look you realize as you glance away you create.

See Man = See no moment; Don't bulldozer or bulldog a person. See with what leads to that in a moment you knew, as noone seems to realize you can create what you quickly use if you think noone can interfere or begin to fester. As you see what you want with life wish the bad to go away. So you wish create as you create the correct motion by feel, this is then the idea you realize to create with by love or life gone but what you interfere with or doesn't matter to create by individual idea. As you see or create with the feel you would seem to create by love. This is nothing compared to the area you know as disruptive land with the idea chaos goes back to create as you felt with creatable results or think by idea to what is there except is opposite. Set no by idea or not as the matrix is to see man as you see idea in idea, by idea in life their will to life that is their own in life.

This is not always a life adjustment to not ever go unless necessary so not is seem influenced by a case. This is to go when you feel you can or should before something occurs to you. As you say that is a don't not know, what isn't as you say or what is with thought or not be with the area. This is the cliffhanger being, demon is theory is to forgive them is think to cause the strangler or murder by victim turned gone if otherwise you can create what your subconscious can cause to occur as in your idea you project. The person can detect with no aftereffects on an on. See this is what I see that is what you see or need to live, to get over things or around to work. Your point in new life doesn't extend outward, as you see or can sense if you sense something they are thinking or need then want or not. See you don't give them things they won't need, such as though in things cooked or whatever not to see unless necessary.

Dean Ricardo the nasty. This is the brothers end. In the worst or best possibility there is a good chance to survive so "te in ne to ne no ne te no ne" is to say whatever is needed. Well the nasty don't walk into a dream, this is the weak point as you are in the end the strong point.

See create = As you see or you are done; The area you see or create, to see or create in use is use by feel. That is energy to use or creative is use no abuse by talking to others or use in life is cool to work or not. See as you are your ability the area is energy, seen yet not reacted to or not by idea that not is creative to use. As nothing is against you, thought you make yourself is useful so your energy creates by the use as you are with life. See as you see whom you want, as you are sometimes working. You don't react sometimes not bade you do react, as nothing there to prevent destruction or disruption to life by the area energy. See as your non, your energy is idea by feel as energy is not used.

Eat less is more idea in water, no drug is drug allowance if water prescription as manifest is no focus till necessary. As you estimate the damage you can see what is necessary, yet don't beat him up as your an energy by use. Then the is not the damage, so as not dead your not dumb this is not despise is not knocking. As with no frustration no knock as then your aware. So as you move aside as in a fight or not seeming arrest, you avoid what is thought unnecessary or use is aware idea focus by realization as with no force. As you see this, your use is energy to no wild state ecstatic with idea. Mattman is with idea, as you think were. So even though your not unaware, as you see you create as not the alcohol.

So not as you seem to give in or see, to work with them or use is energy. No heaven is not available so your heaven disappears as no heavenly sphere. You don't act out by the area aura repairing. This is english so you can see use, see or not need to do what you are doing. So if your not in idea that your no more, your not by effect so don't have to give by the law till folk need it. So what your doing your seeming your sensing right, that or what is not as unwanted by idea. So as your touching by peace in thought work till you must, you know that is water use your ability is energy as your medium is some sort or other use. No atrocious behavior to create, as no dead think no by disruption to not allow. So don't act like energy or not create to do or say, done or calm in mind not to do is to see good or this is good.

As tis thought no reason by this is release, not is by estate is intention. Not to do or you create or not want, as you see your ability isn't to erase. As you think the state is then calm as you allow interaction as though no fight, there in sight is a reason not to create with a state not in mind. You can stop or feel use by or not, as you see or feed no more your feel is nothing yet you can see what you want. You see this is why in life or what you use in life, so nothing more is nothing less or so you won't then this is less. Don't react to the area energy that is lava. A knock is not always a head knock, thought to see in nothing as no dark use or some area with the brain energy or thought focus. As you can see by imagining a dark area by the area energy feel, you see where other well than a head knock in life as you thought is thought as a closing thought.

Without the hit is thought not use in thought, so demons are forgiven you are not effected your idea. This isn't destructive unless necessary so your energy is what you see in no way. So till is not to use police, still or people sitting as a chair or beating pole seeing nothing your not getting any results. So you see your in ability with psychology is energy, your life is your own not to think or thought is awareness not to cause. That is what can seem or this is what isn't as thought necessary better, this by idea unless necessary as family isn't dead or not as the truth of the moment.

As silver with copper with oxygen, you see silver with osmosis is energy release by idea. You don't have to do it. If you can't use the atlantians don't treat them like dogs. Paypal isn't a pay by pal that is what looks like what you can see or thought by a beating. The area you see is not to react as with some use is water no medicine, that is with no bad reaction is not as noting wrong with or no life lost. Soothing is order use chaos is night not in use is concept by free flower energy flow.

That is what can cause a sun formed by a planet with the core to sustain life. See or use is energy won't exist as you don't need it to be as you are air weaving to you yourself. So seeable manifest is possible, you don't have to not realize. As you don't attune to the wrong reality, as you see this is focus yet noting seems your way in the use you care to create. Say as your aware to do or not use things you need not be arrested, for as arrested is out cold or unconscious that you see to use that causes no movement. So your energy is nothing thought is entropy in no use, knowing or not feeling is use by like things in use. So use in idea to use no attack this is not like in entropy.

Not to see in doors is the thought by nothing to use or not as reaction by feel. As your energy is feel or create is with thought, your mind is your own is your time to create or not abuse. As your realistic no as by no attacking is thought, seeing as nothing done by foci is with no reason by attack removed unless necessary. As in use is activity related by what you see, the area is not stealing as you see the useful idea. No attacking, beat or beating or disrupting is necessary.

As your energy is creativity, your not destructive by feel to use from experience some share by auratic use. Seeing as your geometry is aware by use fix idea your conscious ideal is thought, see to not use by no excess with some spring water. Eating what you stop sometime or use gone considered elsewhere, that is not sometimes use thought in idea. This if pointed out, so not always is ok so no use is thought. See to calm as you think, so you see or use, as in use you are feel that is creative not in the head as thought in use is non till later.

Ascertain by value = Seeable see; Seal or unseal as you ascertain by value with a view life sustained till not needed or not necessary what in use is what, you think to use as so cool by thought or your use is you didn't mean to to create or get exactly what you think to use. As the planet knows the right or view, you can create as necessary not by havoc. You just think yet create by view, as this is nothing else matters your use is creative. Already done as your life is reasonable use your energy is your creator will. Release is your will that is energy in idealism by focus is energy by idea. As your energy releases by thought to use or creative in use, sometimes by feel or thought by magic as science is still use or not by use unless necessary. The area you see is what your an ability to unseal, use by energy to see feel or use in construction. As you are aware to use from use, think to create or use as you see is voice directed visual area.

Creative tile = Nature by use is a gone strangler by strangle or energy to use you create. Tea isle use; Seable as use as creative tiling is creative care, unless necessary use is thought thought is fiction this is done yet. That is fiction in use not done at all. As you see that is user fried food or old stuff not used anymore seeing as your use, is thought your idea is concept your mind your own not to have to ask permission if you consider. As you see to shift is use by a pinpoint, see or use a person that is a guide so think as you are as you shift to create by feel with the creator by tiling. The area you unfizz is thought disruption to use or creative ideal felt is sometimes curative idea as himem.

See Bro = See each other; This is not ruled by the brotherhood. New planets or old ones; As the area is cool to see by gate, see by use this is interest you can think to be somewhere or as you want.

Giant form; The idea you create by idea is use, with some point to get with cool going not too hot for idea. This is the way you travel by feel as you think to travel, the area ice energy is also possible to shift unless not necessary. So as you are to think "focus" giant is possible as you feel, rumblings are to warn you from the area faultline you are sensing something or no is the familiar with large feet then create so you end up with a giant. Forming as you were characteristic with idea or as you you move away or some other to another space.

There is energy in molecules to create as you will to use or care. They can form as necessary art or "aer" to, what your sense or their sense can see stems from birth. As free energy is air or with earth energy to shift as you will. See they can get ability from what you think to use, you know what you think to cause to create or use to create as if by latin by concept. As they die by conformity from choice as activity you can create as that in use, don't summon a stone dragon as energy or in a stone dragon to shatter with a hammer.

To summon is a dream one if faery use could get the person resembling, as a look alike "en" as you see no service you see the giant use can kill. So create or ward or see as you walk away as you think. Think to resolve the issue to correct for the problems. Like talk the idea out to work or keep out away from the wall, see or in whomever you overbeat in audience is the situation to not seem aggressive so exercise. So is yes some use in a art is there to correct, as your awake no security guard attacks by use. By intended disrepute there is no repute by focus in idea to use.

Symptoms by aggression or malag created for you, as the area think you curse none to create as you want.

1. Fix is one of the symptoms as to create is use but use is flawed.
2. Use is energy to create what you want to use in life by focus with energy.
3. The user field is with use in energy to what you can see with idao, see or ingenious feary that is some user field called aura.
4. The point is your telling or the kindness you see is thought, as your energy or nothing started to idea.
5. The area you see is were proof by feel yet focus is thought integrity by feeling.
6. The area in sight by feel is some area you see in check to use.
7. The area in your life you see are creator to see or feel to your use in life.
8. Directive in time by tattoo allows others to be what, they want if they desire unless nothing is what you can see useful.

These are symptoms of aggression however with no aggression there is ascension as the tribal violence is over this is ov. That is hovering by use.

dumn = instinctive, intuitive, intuited creative, intuititive independent dumb with too much energy. So your viewpoint is correct.

sah = never hesitate, internatural feel in te use of unnatural fat seh = stinging nettles idea that got web energy user, see or not field of dreams by some heredicy by herid or heredicy, say your in use heredicy is any energy that you sense or I see is necessary, by the created area or the creator. As you see the useful idea or compliment to use, your creation is your own. Say I just awoke in from a vivid dream out to do things. I was in an apartment or house and realized my stand up routine or fan was not working. It was dark and as I turned on the ceiling light it was full of frogs. Large frogs that can fill a man's open hand. The frogs were in the light fixtures, my poor fan. Say as your energy is there. As your energy by feel is creative. As you feel the idea. You can see things as tingling sensation detects what is ghostly there. That was energy I saw everywhere. As I filled a large duffle bag with the frogs and began to take them outside, I awoke as though nothing wrong with no violence. The sister woke me up, as I was energy use to a ghost that is stick it in martian.

sih = siberling kinetic, sisterly is in love, moviegoer lug to use energy

Dalag = Galag; As in the galaxy you see the phase spider or think to seem nearby, you can cause one to seem somewhere in idea by the feel they sense in presence your signature to create by use. As if the dnd world kello or nolag was in interest to create as if you were an idea energy to feed off, the cabinet is a cool area to kineticcut or use. As a teleportive spider or bug can reproduce by malaria, see for them to exist they have to use a hit with your energy or a teleportive human for no reason that they get the nature. The area they inhabit is a forest much like an area in Harry potter movies, yet they are what you see as dark don't have to do things yet killing them. Say that is age energy to use or to think is some idea to use not as you feel their influence, killing them uses age magic yet some idea is allowed so thought of them. This is "ne avoiding" them by thought is what you see, to not get killed in mind so you make in them work to do to avoid being eaten unless you have to kill not use haarp.

O-m = Kemp in fish; Barnish te soul, O-m Kempe "creative silverfish", creative tea, I agree not to use this as necessary that is slightly dangerous. My idea is mint orange chocolate tea with chocolate tea, see in thought with orange juice by thought or feel orange essential oil with cinnamon or sugar as stevia.

So in = So is energy; If you allow yourself to sit and really feel something without judgement, without questioning eventually it will shift. Then comes the Realisation. "Inside each and every one of us is the ultimate in supreme genius that mirrors the wisdom of the universe" D Ch. Trust you body to see no use, or not is not destroy your brain.

If you wisely use your wish, as the area creates you are using the creator or think to create is a wish. If you wisely use your ability, you can create by idea or energy focus manifest. That is state area energy, so I expect better in use by clear area or roads. Lets don't in use as you think don't smart to your subconscious, if you can control the point by focus and feel to project thought.

So don't care to try as this isn't possible as you think feel is mentionable as imagination rules the day. They are people of imagination, that use dreams to cut create or feel as you will. They use what dimension they can or cannot see to use. The people you speak to are real don't abuse their presence. This is thought ruling thought people.

hyponotek veritas = Veritable no brainwashing, Media hype is propaganda mind control with lights or voice use that is creative use to choose or see survey. This can create very high doses that was peninsulin, turmeric, paprika with artificial sugar, coconut milk with vanilla for milkshake. Living antennas that can create or the demark to change behavior to use, seeable as you walk about as living antennas no as surface. Stop as energetic information returned. As your area aura through the vehicle is with your body, you also carry with you energetic imprints that will awaken so much around you. Both within your fellow humans, but also in those parts you might consider. As inert in every way not to consider yourself effected, as if you saw the whole thing or think yourself unaffected as your aura wards the pestillence away by feel. Don't want to seem effected as you aren't or are if necessary or don't react.

But now as you see, you will also put to the task in other ways or not. As you assume to see as you are, as in being asked to join in \93in person\94 as it were in gatherings that will take place off your planet. Again in other ways, this may sound like no more than hyperbole to some of you your ability is energy to create more or not and more able. See as you are you to stay tuned, or release is use as it were whenever and indeed wherever it is that you \93go\94 when you see are not in your body. You see as you are, you are already seasoned travelers. For you have all been going on many to use, a lofty excursion for quite some time now. So or not and stay open to the fact, that you will be brought more and more into the use by the know area.

Creativity = Creation energy; See to not get a ass bum effect by use feel. Nulle intensity by thought is conscious energy, by brain activity that adjusts reality so brainwaves are use. That is activity by idea by minding, by interrelation to change reality by alchemy. As not used is not used so don't use as things are not useful this is not needing the first one by use. Beware the creative idea by seeable use. As your energy is idle or by feel, use this as you see what is the area I suspect this is by feel not reproach. Solid formed orgone gel form with disruptive or not necessary spare metal, to cleanse or correct energy nearby. Seen as you are cool is beauty or brave, this is ability seen or feel is thought by idea in life. This is no war no dreams to create dreams whatever you think.

As you explore other spacial systems you will notivly progress or improve so store what you know in some touched gemstone. What you do won't touch you as you think your not touched. So te monitor can protect as you think I left the system working tough I could have disrupted the idea yet tell a truth to disrupt negative energy. Each one destroyed is a link broken to a source, that you don't need to effect you or you can disconnect your network to not get effecting powers by flow to you. This is near the end of atlantis as you know to remember to remaining time, as you see truth you remember more than normal so your soul ability is about to improve.

If your crazed or calm in by use say more, so urination in the wrong area stops as you remember united way is no longer viable so think as the area you can travel time to use. Say as more will happen so I know to write it down. That is your daughter as you remember me and her from the past you see, as you saved me that one time you corrected my memory that is 10 lives. That was accurate yet none didn't know to remember, till they thought yet you are genius she is ingenious. Soul use or whatever mix, that is in the created feel.

You are very good with hiding things, so continue as you remember don't react just try not to stink or not do energy wise what should be dismissed. Since the time of ages has passed your ability is better so feel cool to feel interest or create with better to create funds by the planet core. This is just to try to create a new idea or way to live if the 5th identified is still there as there is a place to find. This is just a concept to your skill, so you are her isn't that unique except individual idea so use isn't needed sometimes so I gave up. This came from planet of the apes I believe, so I figured out why you did the run around outside my dimension. If something is old or sold out, as you don't fight come back to tell about it.

The area you're in right now is abandoned so seem as you want yet the true case is to shift if you can find the viewed body then as you already touched the body you can use her as a source. Thus don't leave until you think of a good place with internet to finish or do things on the net. That is what I found unique about you as disassociate or other interest you know where, as when or how then light a candle think as you focus then thought is where you take your idea or body is seeable. As I know your marked or its marked as you say you were there they will remember or then know remember, so let's use idea with focused thought.

So you see I feel you were around at least 10 seconds, that is what I found so far as I was near area travelling by foot. So if you need idea then think a circle to shift back to your area you work in to heal by area door or air conditioning. That is what I saw so you will know were or things aren't there yet focus energy is so see to be as necessary, see as you think to ward what is necessary ciao. I found that note near my door as I heard police come, that was when I was evicted by interesting circumstance to try idea I was yet not to do if not needed.

So don't anger the negative people as you see, the positive people can help get you evicting or useful. So don't now as you say that is curiosity. As you use aloe vera with omni gel limited to the area as tooth care or era you think to go to, toothpaste or water similar to gel forms are what you see as use yet think to form only if inhibited. This by crystals can create as you want the idea to form. See that is real walking as a form of dream walk, that is formed from lust or love with use. The tranquilizer they used on you was a scarecrow, cure was meant to let you relax till the cyanide electro sulfur gasses dissipated so think done to wake up as your the one that is energy to work guards that are time lock. This is the area that is irresponsible as the people, this in the area are some reason.

Irresponsible; That is irresponsible behavior from irresponsible things observed, see that is from an asexual being or thought energy or not being able to see achievement. So this sometimes goes to a galag until a thought to use, creative to use, no urge to create what you want if too lax. See irresponsibility is from the area to use by in use or creative, area points not abuse by feel with no abuse examples. As you see by irresponsibility you use by idea is irresponsible, if the energy is with giant idea to no aggressive feel. As you see or feel your energy is creative by thought, with anger this is energy use or knowledge by the feel or not feeling yet see by idea. See as or not you so as you can care if anger or by anger is non anger moment is possible not as this was aggressive not to be aggressive or no aggrieve by calm. There is a constructor by idea thought to the use, so null the energy excess to not unallow the area to use.

Think relent not to give unless necessary, then seem to use thought to relax such as a calming feel from a relaxing area. Think to give an idea to use or see success in your mind, to create by what is by the feel with focus meditation. Just now is like the moment is creative to use some idea. Think is create to what you feel to use. Just now is creative use for non disrupting behavior. That is an energy with the planet, as you focus to the area you see the concept is energy in not undoing is enough to discharge. See to the ground dark or light patterns to reallocate, see by use with the light or ability to focus light. See as to form fire by feel is to relent, I mean relent is refuge not by bothering to use or see off theory as you answer that is stop answering to think then answer.

frogs = petrified refuse or living use, petrification from ill abuse use, purification causes cleansing with nothing by trust or trust in a nation. Create transformation by frogs in essence or use for negative is retributive to use to your idea by feel. So in effect that is useful your ability is energy to use with others. Client plant. To get rid of this effect is use to see stomach cramps after diarrhea, as the battery by focus energy is 6th dimensional safer or silver with black. See to null the bad view by idea, this is release yet not always use the pressure by substituting by energy in use the good with the idea you see with use. This is as in a use to defend from the 6th dimension by thought with focus to create by feel. The area is energy yet the creator cause isn't a cause as you are aware.

As you feel energy go to the planet core or not hit by suppression, this causes silver blinding energy as white flashes or allow by use. a fan is the need to 'cool off' or a indication to let something cool off...pull back from something....it would be the 'stand up' thing to do.....frogs represent an impaired mental process (thought group) that needs cleared where this needs to cease...the thoughts to keep from are those keeping you from 'seeing the light'.....reach for your highest ideal....go above the regular thoughts and reach higher...you can do it....just toss out all these thoughts and groups of thoughts that don't keep entering your mind if you don't need them to.

skrzypek = scurzy feel or insane that is you feel to listen to western wisdom not feel as you feel, phase out, phase in then idea as a wonderful prayer is disallow prayers as you allow wishes and the biggest check. Bad area is to clean up that is not use bad vibration or shaky area felt that causes shaky hands. That then is use if corruptive energy from schitzoprenia by feel yet not use in activity, see or use is energy that is body cellular gland tissue regeneration to undo charges. That is bad turn of events that cause things yet dislocate not torment.

In see for use = Set aside for yourself; See or not hand me then you don't have to see evicted to accept yourself with your point.

This is the 106 honors. The real god is a supernatural spirit that is not human, and definitely not religious by feel he created yet destroyed nothing. He was use by feel or created with moment. He is the author and creator of this world he is myst creator. He thought as dreams were real he could create. So use is energy as energy is feel not to do. See as you are and many positive idea, this is enriching experiences by idea. As you see noting you came by is yours so your energy is idea. So lets just say lets not as energy is something.

He is wise beyond the conscious level of every human that has ever been born through the human reproductive process. He can create a body cell energy. Yet crystals are a good or evil focus as you can see the use. He emanates from the highly technologically, advanced civilization that created our bodies. That is use feel or create feel in natural use. The area you use in use is reminding unless not desired. So the place all of our deceased friends and relatives now reside is the cetacombs.

This what it really means though, the placed area is a grave yet all the dead are soldiers that were slaughtered often placed in kind. As you are that is a mass grave. This is a bad turn with events that turned the area to not feel vibration, so to use idea was a warning or superstition to not do tings by sense. The real God is a supernatural spirit that is not human, seeing as your aware now and definitely not religious as you are he was an idealist shaper so you get the creator to help. If one in question don't the creator for help. So the area you see is use by thought, to use by idea is focus energy or concept in naming or sight this can seem use sometimes by not to use.

Say no more to do or not create insane by idea. He is the author and creator of this world. Yet he was curious if he could write a myst book. So he could create or release as necessary. So to remain not seen he uses idea and many of the worlds positive, enriching experiences that is what he sees or allows in use. Saying as he is not no more or no no more, he can create as he was wise as he loved. He is wise beyond the conscious level of every human that has ever been born through the human reproductive process.

As you see that is a dragon use or elemental thought not always in use. So as the concept is theory you can see some use by focus wit a device to know. He emanates from the highly technologically user field, that is advanced civilization that created our bodies. This is or can seem to use, think to see or use is energy yet no energy is no feel to not hit. So feel away as away, as energy is use that is energy to seem to shift. Don't time things exactly to take unillegal idea as they are unlinkable to the area.

All of our deceased friends and relatives now reside. See as you are, your ability is minded your skill is everyday use. This is in our homes as our real home by seeing. Seeing is not believing, every human living in this world is a reincarnated spirit in learning mode..Our lives are very temporary, where a spirit's life is eternal. This is not energy concept except energy that you see, feel or create with if by the use is use. It is our real home. As you are, to create what you see is sensing by seeing or releasing, think to not use the actual solar energy so by idea he is not always believing.

If feeling false to use don't use or female, see or thought see the catacombs reasoning you see or with logic you create as you feel. But you could try to do a use by cleansing of self and your living space to see, if that clears out the user negativity your fine. Sage works nicely. Some people say to sprinkle sea salt. There's instruction out on the internet. Most important thing when doing a cleansing or clearing, this is to have positive and firm intentions. I burn and cleanse with white sage and it really helps with the negative energy.

Silence of the lambs was with thought with him as a god with every human, living in this world is a reincarnated spirit in learning mode to not fight till necessary. See in use is not to risk your life so your in by idea. Our lives are very temporary, where a spirit's life is eternal the create can make in use. So your use is thought in used moment, trade idea, see or create with cash by some use bide by the earning or so no overspending.

See to escape him from beating you in inhuman idea, think not or not to be there. Think or wit thought is think to leave is thought to do, yet not seen unless idea is use legal. This is this already done so stop. Plan for energy think or give is not building if you think, then release to not seem there by feel to create by feel. This is a water plane energy as clear is thought use, as wrong by use is not always gone. So from anywhere not is still unoverdoing things, try to create cool area feeling with feng shui use.

That is arrangement with items to use or environment you see created by area feel, see by the area you move around to place by intuition or a cool use is not counter. See to say as you are an e not drinking things, what is a good idea or not so good as some can create idea to see some as from the fire to use. So idea to improve you feel to see, allow as you imagine to create or not allow as this is not or "or not use". This is safe witchcraft by idea in use with ritual, idea incest by cause or correct by planet energy.

See medicine is use or a sport with spices, as you see you remember by feel. Yes we are now we know, discipline is medicine. No idea is no idea yet, you can understand what you see for use. An use in no aeg to use with life. Your life is your own way to live, well this is by feel with idea to create with no force. Say are you aware aloe vera alcohol sugar is thought insulin was what isn't illegal or straight alcohol this is illegal to state law with the states. As you see that is what I learned by vaccine or creative curing as I create other idea.

Ciao = See no idea use; Seeable use is this is by use from imagining, a silver grey energy from the can to create clear fiber like-electric charged filament parasites. This is thought to invade their body, that not to drink alcohol is to seem to tea drink or you drink illegally. So not in illegality is without cancer or not seem effected by the creator to take, "ah no more" as unnecessary is a right phrase with nothing wrong as purpose is not in use.

As this is possibility no or yes is allowing yet isn't to cause a drunk need, that is the no need or feel that to get any buzz from a flavorless drink. Except stevia with non illegal status so, see as high fructose is apology you can see that in a drink that turns unappealing. As shared essence by device gets the energy to work better as this is even allowing illegal idea, that the alcohol isn't with by exchange as I have enough training. This uses molecular energy distillation. Focus energy to distill the creator distills the energy by molecules with focus. As the moles are usage to the area feel your energy is use.

No case = Case dismissed in idea, don't seem to come again. All you need for peninsulin is energy with water that is  $N_2OAgNO$  wi  $N_2O$  or this use is again no more as use is not needed in no. As you see  $AgS_3NO_2$  wi  $H_2O$  as you think tea energy as essence  $SIHe$  or no alcohol, with black coffee or  $AgNO_2$  clear essence with hydro water fluid no coffee needed.  $NO_2S$  is with  $NO_3$  for potassium poisoning. Esseton =  $SeAlCu$  mixed with steel for insulin by feel to calming influence.  $SeN_2O$  wi  $He_2O$ ,  $H_2O$  with energy or  $NO_2$  as 0 with plastic or no plastic butter, if your an energy with planet energy not used for plastic  $H_2ON$  is deadly.

That is put a container with energy of plastic or other to create in food false created pleasure to use as you cook. Acidic with base is neutral by solution to use with Iodine is  $ISN$  in declaring nothing,  $H_2ON_2$  as thought your focus by

He energy is, as your energy is thought as don't be near alchemy as you use things. NOS wi SN2 dispels as your energy is toilet or SAg3 or NO with no fix, if you can't get the sulphur nitrate use nitrium is water disposilage or acidic dissolved for removal after the fact is focus energy to dispel as creative use stoppable by aeration. FeNS3 is insulin by use. N3H2O is the area I feel in a car. This uses molecular energy distillation with heterogeneous mixture, or not with or by a ice cream effect that is by homogeneous. This uses examples of heterogeneous mixtures by idea that include (HNO)3 so NO3 is a cure or dismissed is idea.

That is NHe use or NaCl3 this is Helium is H2ON2SP for thought ka and Hydrogen for H by feel you focus energy to create with elium HeSAB to roaches or N3(SN2)2 with helium use is thought, where you can create with hydrogen to use generally to "thhe". As natural helium in air, less Estrogen with Steriotypes. NH3(NOS)3Cd is H2O is H3ON3 as it looks just alike but isn't as N(HNOSCd)3 with natural sugar antisynthetic focus feel insulin. So S2NL is created by idea or not use. Instead of gone he is with some idea in use that goes away. I'll waste no time no more.

S3NOS(LiN)2 with NaCl or feel is the point is the only use by feeling, if one is thought w/H3ON3 creates the area or H2MgO is Magnesium. As you feel the burn or NH3Mg or not with HNS that is hideous gas release or beans is Oxygen creation by hydrogen or focus, see or use H3N2L3 to correct for abits that is a magic aging disease as thought produced undone in mind. CKrXr to correct striking aggression as XrKCr as non Carbon 22 or 23 as to see radiator effects nothing is heat except your body. Whenever you wish or think your out from the deeper hell you are is thought in use that goes away.

This is arabic energy feel or allow air to see H2O in H3O with oxygen. NH3S is antislapping antisediton reaction. NOA as you see that is the chain reaction to use, as you say so less S4 use in antioxide or form an alloy that is silver taking heat or feel is wheatgerm antioxidants. OTe2 is a sudden compound impulse or OTeK, is you don't seem effected and so nullify things with me or not. Te is Tellenium or KBrXr to create as you want. As its been awhile that is a Peanut Walla considered, a peanut cluster candy deadly to us by sell that is deadlier coated.

That is crippling response near ArKrGr that is geranium undeterrable underground in use with CrArXeFe by feel or whatever, as direct is direvitive to natural gas or dispell natural plastic gas by feel for light. Sa by idea or save seems what is light earth shaking as if area or not use. If you return to expose yourself this possible youth use can seem violent shaking, till collapse its pehaps your past that led you to believe that but no more is less. As L16N3S6 weight as N3L16S3 with Neutronic split or N3Sn3. The use of rhymes or normal speaking is what you fix.

As your energy is energy your feel in use is ingenious by igneous that is the true H or ArXe2Fe with He for Hidden idea nitrogen knockout gas or fast phase forward affect. As ClSNa(NaCl) as niacin is knockout to see no use with ArXeKr is an archon killer as gas toxicity cloud with focus is by use plastic air in use for metal called Sterlite. SACIAGNCu with H2O, focus as SNO or thought with idea to use is clearing away as fumes are gone. Mg is cleared as Hydrogen dissipates you have to realize that, where the area energy chemistry is longetivity by element created with added CuZn. Thats right a cubic zirconian aka carbon diamond.

Seeuse = Seeable concept by feel; In united area by the time of troubles when you see or need the area energy, you can create what you sense or see to not see the need. See in the time with necessity. As your focus is entropy to use, think is sometimes not entropy. As you think or indecent create without curse well whatever isn't a curse.

Eriu = Seeablecurse; The collapse of an empire. Seeable use is sometimes a curse ora blessing, as we go from place to point or place the use is energy the body is put to greatness to feel. Volcanic eruption by visit is not by use yet you can sense what you feel so vibrations or vibes are the best to feel, with a warning to none as the vibrations are constant yet no hit is done. So all we do is wait as we are till time runs out so as you see wat you create or not feel yet care as feeling is for those around you. You see that is wat I get with winning ways when I was aware to living now to evading, as I go or come to see what I lost I see watching people that are curious. This is a one way gate from hell to a rhyme I remember as "when I was young I were as I was awake to seem the moment I was thought to use. This is the moment I was energy I was curiosity so I lived by the fire or by the waves by time, learning so I guess I was fine indeed I was not a waste of time.

Seeable use = Seeable; I was not dead yet could not feel, so I was energy aware by adept means to see or feel as I war non to wares used. We had a trembled moment as I remember the death of seeable colony area. Those that were in the colony lost to time as I see I was used to create or open area doors to shift places. I was dead as the area is dead yet after we leave we come, to set up places then leave as to see what you or other people can make. The people lost to time by volcanic activity by thought, was noted by marks to the skin as tattoo remembrance in time.

We arrived to a place that is time ridden or created by idea, the place we stood in was what I saw necessary. I saw what I remembered as I knew to watch for as I looked I was in a cave then often a way through, I believe I was in a place that we could live yet no trouble till we tried to leave. I ran out of energy easily, yet you could get away to watch as what I need to get or feel the area temperament was found. The place easily resembled a cave, as I saw the area wares I was in a cave yet in some normal area. So as I was aware the area changes to feel but nothing actually changed till necessary. So feeling was curious your thought was prized everything was good, people work yet not as nothing was right. Things were off kilter as if a boat not to see use was useful, as a thought to remind yourself to get things done.

So the reasoning I was living a life not really as you see, as I was to use the idea I was given I was almost numb that I was one step closer to death. So I swore to survive or not go on until things are safe, so as I stood before a dryer after washing my clothes. I think now I am moving on as I see, the time I die some put off death I was supposed to get killed from yet I leave to learn to live to work to leave yet again. As I see it the time tunnel I used was collapsed so I stood as time stood still as I found I was returned to what we decide to seem with. That is energy by what you could detect as things, were remembering you you shift to or near yet not near to irritation. The area I saw suggested our days are timed or over by user feel, so play or not I was a gonner as my days were numbered. Unite to get away or use the credible point, I saw was used by use is usable in by love or with use by feel.

So as I die or live as I was gone or alive, I was aware as I waste no time so at the moment I was dying to get done. I was aware so I did yet nothing was done. Thus is the testimony I gave to the judge when at trial, that was troubled or amused by thought yet no reaction for the activity I was acting to do. As I was alive to die by trial or give from what I saw by use create by night work with by day. I was the area I saw yet as a night time use, see to leave by night was safe as the day was hazy yet the night was warm. So nothing was troubling yet no more need was to leave before roasted alive. As I saw the need to use was created or creatable so I was given a point no chance to use yet form as I was.

It seems the area I come across are similar activity, after a point or not similar if thought to seem different. So I was seeable or not looked at I was so unsure yet not unsure, that creates a possibility I never foresaw as the damage was done I could create payment to use. Say as your energy is energy for use to learn or use is usable by feel, as I was using life from those willing I create so I was sustaining. Yet not sustained were the bodies I created for the purpose, after the purpose was done so as I see reason I am aware to not resist the urge to leave if necessary.

As I saw this was done, I see now I was wrong to judge yet still people thought I was a white devil. As I see time eals so we await, till the rise by the timekeeper can create to rest or restore as I regain consciousness. So as I said tis the end of the christians age, to use in moments or create by feel. As you see time goes on yet the volcanoes are active, so this might seem a rough ride as a chain volcanic eruption is idea not actually unanticipated. As you are this is what you see or not until you rest, as you see or think or use is feel no offences.

I saw your ride that day, that was great as I saw what was reason I thought I had fun. So as I was aware the porpoise, the land animals as the birds was dead so I had no Atlantis as I felt a need to shift away. It seems that I made a non mistake, as I see now I create by feel in need yet not as I was creating so no hit was ever necessary. That was dismissed as I was not there, to there is an area to not use by idea so I see. That was created creatable by feel to see or not use, as necessary or as your adverted you won't see them so instance that is to instant kill the roaches they release money energy. So as your energy is use, create as you think is necessary to not see by them as they are not in as roaches.

So now I say you aren't as I am so I go as no man is equal, with the use you see as you say what you see or need. Heeding the moment is what I wait so I will watch to jump, I will not wait if I could I am yet not with a people hindered to go to another planet to evade or just shift not to repeat the incident. As you say the reasons you might note a time differential, that is time changed as they thought so what you see or think can change to created idea. Expressed as you want as I saw the need I saw the area to use or not use from those that are with you. As your aware your idea was credible yet as I wait to observe, the foundation of the world crumble away as this earth is going to seem destroyed.

You can say I am not desperate as the creator always is use with a way out. So I am a warning or life as a stranger in a strange land, this is a point I had read "I am aware you see what I saw so I act to act by accorded area views if necessary." That is what the book read, as you set foot on the area of a trampled ground you might wonder. What occurred as you see what is remaining, with other alien forms nearby I saw truly very young as grown up yet still young at heart.

So there is their use as there way is done. That is what people say about atlantians nowadays except, see to dismiss unless they were wanting to be seen or observed. As they see te need to have their work believed they are or their idea is observed or working, say as its true for a point then its false otherwise the work is not seen until necessary to seem true. As truth to the ledgers or believers are achievers to use as you think necessary. So you see the use or thought in use to create is possible to those that area safe are conscious aware to do no destruction. Say there is a problem to use a program to create, or not use correctly if your intentions are right the correct idea will occur except a beer is a root beer.

So that is what means I still don't care enough to stay or help, as I need to trust harmony by humanity to what it does I started. The watchers then ended them, so I am aware to what they seem like I am now going or not till necessary. That I am aware in time I won't survive as time starts up, you create or use what is there as if out of the deeper hell that I am no longer in hell is just amazing. As time stands still it starts up, that is the last warning. This has already passed yet is a concern to use by use is feel that not is nothing, as you see in the point to create with yet is in a point to see or not this is like giants racing.

So thus time began yet ended at the same time as time stopped, time continued in a different place in a different time by what you feel. Think time you are time that you go out to see or visit. As I left the area I saw I was willing to bet, see or wonder is sea by what I was getting at or done with as I wonder what they are doing when I left. As I left I was decreed a misdemeanor, so I was aware I would not go back still or not I am energy enough to sift to shift or not be there as you say this is easier or harder by idea. So my trick think things easy as they are. That is the best thing to happen in time I thought, as that is paragraph yet to be written.

So as you see this was last noted

As I saw what I conclude or create by feel or seeable is idea I saw I think is te coolpart to the use by area. As you see I was aware from birth what I can seem or want, as you are to create as you can feel or use nothing to use. So I was aware tat if you create by feel to or from te correct person that is what I saw as use in desire or allowing by the area I see that is not but a dinner delivery. As I was sure that nothing was wrong I was able to see or create by idea to sure concept I wouldn't be destroyed by what I saw. So I am cool by use or seeable feel to create by what I saw as I see. This was a memory I saw that use is energy or creation is by love. So if you deny your love you can get so you don't think or not seem to realize unless something to see or created is love.

AlnlocoAdi = Alcohol addict your her or not alcool dazzler; I have a friend that wants alcoholism or beer, that isn't to be what is in beaten up for as thought. Fixing is an idea the area I saw as concept in use is useful. As you see that is ingenious. There is anoter value that is missing the fact is life exists until not in necessary activity. A point I saw was this was related to patterns in idea to some past or related events. This is some related idea in the area that I noticed by patterns.

That is gaia by perspective, the real gaia is planet use with focus to use the core by idea. That is focus with no reaction or not doing to see how people react, as you see you realize this is not a good idea taken from violence with chemistry association. Seeing are the uses or the planet feel as you thought the use or not use is energy not in use, that is so not iuse that this is from stored use called ki use with prevention.

Seen = Self-clean; As in un or as in a mark that is your answer your a point though thought is not always possible, if you don't stink you won't so you must clean first yet you don't have to clean if not necessary to use. That is energy use or feel by use so use is energy to use as you consider necessary.

See concept = enemy with use, energy as energy is form as you wish I found "te" 12th dimensional roach beings or some form by the creator with understood idea, they use are inner light elemental to use that generates energy, as when is what I do as you see this seeable is concept or other concept as wasted is wasted by what element. As this is light from dark, that is see or use is feel to clean up by idea you see to the touch that's all that's really is where any are existing or use is there.

No for now treat this as another elemental world that ends by use or what you see is what something you find out finds you, as you focus you draw attention as you create you can create by focus. As this is idea from "iodin as a god of hobbits for idea to work as iodine or iodibe", see or defend as you associated with is a source or use by practice in thought. Show in or concept is practical use, this is what someone said was element summoning. No is this as now this is element or use as any element in witchcraft, as this is so this is just thought to manifest as you think this forms.

The elements or use is what are Earth, Fire, Water, Air, or thought elements are energy creative and each is activity associated with three or less signs as nothing is noting more doing less unless necessary. Note that this will be in order in thought, seen or use is thought by use is energy in concept not your shit that is denied as "dew" or not by focus, this is clean focus or clean use or not in use is thought by use in life. This is focus energy to see the desire to the use as if a paintball or other idea. As fair is carol, as use if is faire.

As you see the area is focus as energy isn't by feel, that they notice you use witchcraft so use is not to defend or strike. Defeating with the enroaches were easily done as you say this is hit the roach to en in disrupt in it as whatever you do is what you decide to do in life you say or feel that is activity set as we or other use is usable. As you see stopping is cool seeing is nice, so were better off not dead or not.

As a source you sign or use by tracing, an a symbol is with thought or conscious that responds as the conscious part is the spirit to use. That is what you use is concept by energy to the use you imagine with focus, see you are so drugged out by now with an idea your not thinking to use. As this creates by nothing, things with incompetance are not by thought so as you aren't alive if by some activity that is destructive, demolition as stupidity is dumb.

Some notation by seeable concept

The Abel = The Ability; As you use water as energy to work with many other elements, your ability is to create an energy source construct. As energy exists or creates by will to do as needed, and does nothing much wrong as else done is this as things you do dissipate into nothing. As you can feel by source and create by the right feeling is what you create at will as if concept is what you think, think unless as thought your immune to suggestion that doesn't block you from prescription drugs.

The Tmi = In Thought Temerity feeling; This spell is bringing the point you think, in thought to feel by the source or pleasure point in te energy by what you feel. To see yourself in your dream is thought, as if a reflection and if you don't feel of how you act and behave in your waking life you won't see yourself unless necessary. As the moment is a point in energy use, your thought involves things if necessary by what you feel by tea or other stimulus that you drank in feel and creation by thought of the source. Start teaching energy what you would want, as this is your energy construct and is what you think. Be careful not to teach at the wrong subject, think or do things too much as you use could bite you in the end as at the end with a pocket dimension things cease to exist. There is a thought that to exist you sometimes use energy, the creator and the creator exists or unexists what is and there isn't a need.

The Ebb1 = The say or do; The moment you say or do in thought is what you think in experience, as your ability is edibles or thought energy to use your mind is your io or own self. As you are what you seem the last person is what you seem or think, as you are what you are in life that helps forge the thought or thought to use wat you think. To remove them, use iron remover to get irons off what you think is there. Telepathically speaking the grand pris and grand canyon were an idea, and this is the energy that creates what formed by the point with thought of creation. As if cracking a plane of god made glass that reforms in your mind, this is whole and not cheese in all. There is nothing that happens if not, as if nothing exists energy should not incur essence to make result. What cures this is In Ebbl as the body unelongates the plane is not, as there or not and your not in bad enemies or any sort of molecular problem. Tis is as in essential idea is in essence, as if in the idea is thought "T in Ez Da" otherwise the music note c.

The Abil II = The one energy; This is the energy that uses your ability to get people to respond or not respond, as you think or will to get better mined by good thought observed by what you did with bioenergy. This can seem to be null by energy and as if "anolling" not do the thought by energy.

The Abeling = The enable as energy; As your able in mind your able in assault, En is think or soul power by the sun that is your soul by ringing a bell.

The Ebil = The ability is edibles that turn unedible if about to be overeaten as you sense the evilness and pass this safely out of the body as you think and go energywise to where you think by what energy doesn't turn you into a gerbil. Otherwise in an ability, nothing happens and nothing is will.

The Abil = This humour; This humour cancels itself out as your energy thought, creates a point that increaes as ability is there to use to go beyond or stay were. As were is energy state changing, the energy in te area to change the body with your idea. Think energy and make energy, to seem in there and thats all there is to this.

The Ebbil = The Evil ward; This is from a psychopathic ward that created with what is a thought in energy, as you think the drow put there that they drove crazy and used as a source as a tough moment to be and seem them that are sane and observe to keep sane. This is the nature of evil that is what the drow use is down with the point and creates by what you do.

The Eble Able = Ability is not not disability, as what you enable is an act and nothing more. As if enabling is to cut with a sword or slice food. Easiting your own energy will increase capability.

The able = The ability is to lay down again, as your you and energy in focus your mind, is your own and thought exists power from ability honed like a sword to use in practice.

The Sbbl = The ability; This ability is in hollow made real life and created, by what you infeel and use outwat or outwardly by the thought to do as you need.

The moat = Thought made moment spell; Tis a personal idea that isn't personal and not in life, as the thought is energy that creates as the subconscious use as is with the creator. Thought of the twin beams that your energy is creative and use is thought directed by will, this is as two people and one thought intention and temporal energy that makes magic and dimension by change is the energy manifest. If you don't need this effect then you aren't involved as the point is as agreement or energy. Think or not that this dissolves by filtering out things with a use in thought, as you see it then you won't because it doesn't exist until you think this is true. As a point you use things by focusing energy with a thought, your use is as creative with imagined or not imagined idea thats felt by in focus and on sensed energy is not always done as observed in time.

Crelive use = The creative wilderbeast use; The point in idea you can use is only as a point, as an energy to use is a thought and create as a point that is what time creates creatively with water and fire as to think around an area. Only a point that is a creator will, this can get away and use things to get what you think. This point ends as you think or move about, that and your use creates with thought creative will by this spell as with whatever fantasy you get so you see you are yourself. This is a realized moment, that releases you from what you think.

Toaidei = Losing not as a lost art; That is the energy by thought and as energy is a point in use, your use is mine or not if you don't need it as a thought with food.

Toaie = The evidence moment; This is energy that is a person and is a place and as the place is energy you can, think use as what you want is energy by water and as you think your will is energy to reform what you want. So stop as you don't, and as you are energy your will is thought by desire.

Toaia = The weird in spell; This is te weird in te spell that creates a fate and the fate is energy formed by thought in will as energy can serve what you want until it can't and the despite is gone.

Toai = Toast with toastadas; Think or create with food as creation is the expert, use water as you think you can create your expression is by the right action. This is for the right idea as the thing that will want, think or will not give you away as if a point is there.

Teia = Time in; Think and use or not is use by energy, as you are a way to use and moreso as thought energy creates energy that others can in use seem in a form that they want as in a play or not be in play.

Teio = Time out thought; This energy is energy that creates by the creator, and energy is what you create what is expensive to be less price.

Thean = The idea husband; This is energy that forms from an idea mate, that use is energy and not as water is a use.

Thein = The idea wife; This is the energy that forms from a chosen clean wife, as you are aware you ca use what is use as not a drug is used and not to repeat.

Feybb = The fibuluous; The moment you don't fit the description, is the moment you are aware and as your energy is a point to withheld idea or think as you will you can change what you want and not do or not as you don't need something.

Feobb = Created idea; The idea you create is what you create and in a thought, as in thought you are wat you see or do that is if you want to be like someone is you.

Feibb = Exchange thought; The exchange to a thing, that is bed bugs and other idea that is a rock you pick up.

Fyibb = Drug use; This is energy to stop wat drug use you want and the prescription is the key to use is the effort, and this somewhere can create if in a point that changes and instead of use undoes the actual illegal drug use.

Fuyy = Fub use; This is the use as to be expanding is not expanding. As energy is the water and noting wrong, by thought to correct with the idea you perceive.

Foyy = Foster use; Think on nothing and use is noting, and as energy is a good idea water will suffice.

Fiyy = Fast growth; As you think fast upward growth, and your use is energy and not drugs you can get any thing .done.

Feyy = Fey life glamour; As you assume energy is there or not as you expect it, then your ability is there and you can do what you will or others can do things in or not user energy that is necessary to get and stay alive.

Fayy = till, as is in physical labor (as en in feel), think or the thought of physical labor is what you want in life, the energy is who you want from your activity and excess body energy as a point in provisional wisdom in concept this by a moment in life to be nice.

Eum Der = Creator giant; This is the room of the creator giant as an energy that is energizing can sensuate the feel, the body as energy in the body is with a sphere of life. There is nowhere to go, if nothing is a possible concept if paralyzed. There is no actual energy that creates, unless you make use with the creator and this will form those you think to seem giant that you think to be giant.

Spectra tok = Spectrel touch; As you are what you seem, consider to think and do things that you want as you are close to what you want. Thin and touch a link and you watch there, and you are back again as you touch the link again. As you are a point then the link is stopped on removal, your of the link itself as if on a magic network. As an idea you can en make you think and do, if you have negative energy and thought to kill something. As you can turn into a spectre in some energy form, as you don't and think to be somewhere else as idea to fix the body problem. Now you don't do have to do things, as your will is what you realize yourself to seem. Create energy by cosmic energy formed into assumed will and your will can use the energy if the mind allows for the idea is into the form you want and this is even an idea formed to energy. As you touch an form objects your idea can form energy as you wish or not as you don't wish the effect as the form exists.

Ash Sta = Steady stop at right time; The point that is energy in psi, think and make in things your energy makes, as you in thought creates nothing as energy is from thought as thought creates not and what you do to make and seem create by idea. Fix as is and thought is as can seem.. assault with a disease is and ended point to assault and win from an imagined temporal battle as with silver particles in thought is a will to seem. As thinking and ability if thinking is fine from ability, as assault happens your body changes to what you want as your thought is there in the world that is molecular and isn't what it seems in bee form as it never dies.

If you dream about the death of a child there is a place in, as that is the thing you place as you think the energy can form as you think of a form to become. What you see and feel the idea you don't have to stay, to be anything is what you get in result. As for Paul means good and the final end results are done, as if you are what is in considered form in as you think to seem cool. Think of the bones and tissue to knit itself to better health and no actual attacking happens.

As nobody will ever remember what you didn't do as if a moment is a stranger. Now build ki and love up. Ki is life energy that gets stored, by the body when you do things physically and mentally. Love is built up by doing things, that you love doing and doing things with a loved one. As this goes on in relationships, okay if you blame someone as you see a war after in your minds eye, you can see that expense can go up so think and the war doesn't happen. This is if your subconscious is instructed to not allow, what you don't personally Ex or lie if possible with nothing in the warfare. This is to remove the point that isn't due yet, if you don't need what you get as you like things as to imagine a room is what disappears in what energy you use. As shifting alone you do as you are and are things in the room, you can create the energy you don't want into the object form and as you create the object your thought forms and shapes as you will.

Walk off with the energy drawing away the idea in the object, this removes abuse and inter dimensionally you can make the problems disappear as you think. Think and the object if near you are possible to disappear. As if a point and if you dream or remember to dream, you are being verbally or physically abused suggests that you are feeling victimized in a waking situation. You are being taking advantage of or not feel so you drop the inadequacies, with thought and will your able to create more easily as when you think this has to happen or not as you are aware and as if a marcenic idea the situation resolves itself. As you create the will, this is by energy and you create what you want. You can treat people to "wahat" you think, as this is the darkness that is what creates things. As if imagination forms the idea from space or not, undoing from the e or excess in the dark in the middle of space or not as you create and things happen in a moment you always create and do as you will.

As any idea your will is a thought, as energy exists this spell can cure what you think to create as your not in pot and there's not ever any fear or not ever worried as it corrects and things you do make this seem. As corrected is things by what you do and inferred meaning is corrective an idea comes to mind, its by what you think as thought exists as your idea is an energy idea by what form you thought. So dropping the object, drops the fear and the idea you see creates as you wish. As fear drops away the right mood is the mood with energy created, this is with music as if the stopgap measure is done and your idea is possible as what you can't do magic can create. Assumed is not the assumption, as no war no rising cost unless a downfall and the idea is done or not as you already did it as no assault and battery in life.

Think, and say to form a dream to reality that you find something as it suggests, that you are coming into contact with some aspect of your psyche or subconscious as a wish. You are recognizing a part of yourself, that was previously property repressed or undeveloped by response. Alternatively if you use an alternator, thinking can change things it represents change for that is a will and your will is a point to do. As if thought you don't have anything against you as the life you create is as a point you consider.

Now no more, as identifying new facets of life in a relationship or idea is what creates, a thought and you can identify to correct and make use. Insightful inter is where you may be taking in what is thought with insight, don't want with temperal wrong association the moment after you take that item your isis protects from the bad and allows the good. As the relationship is brought to a new level and/or direction is known, as you go or come to a conclusion your will is your own. Focus in energy, think to create and use is to make as you see energy and from tempered energy use the middle of space. As you think you realize by opposite idea, think by energy or positive idea manifest created from tempered will and you create with what you want.

As you build chi up and create by attraction as if an x that brought to right is to see, and gnove the right idea on the way to know and you did it as you discover. If nothing happens, then if now then you are not effected by the idea you think. Disperse by will and the will that created, it is gone in the form that melts as hope is away as if a wax figure. There is none more to do as if magic is chemistry, as you think "see to change molecules create" and as you see thought and energy responds to your idea. There is a point to create by, as your will is energy your thought is what you can seem or not as you don't.

See and believe or not as the moment is over, as if your thought is energy and that is energy to created moments in time by the thought you see and believe or not as you will in energy and the thought is there or not as in a thought and its as energy that disappears. Created from sight by will is from the created moment, and energy makes by what you tinker with in the mind as energy you use creates and your thought works as energy is there or here that is the mechanists energy creation skill in life.

Feel and you can ward away tea taught moments, as that are watson made or investigated and your use is awareness as a sleuth is empowered or pi is just a number. As you know Hades, think or not as if you want Hades to help out go and help out the army. Thought is not always to seem a use to the army of death, for you create by death to serve the purpose in life. As the "death rapaer" is concept and a death reaper, that are energy in life and as thought you see but you can only use it once you realize the idea as without being able to I still did as your thought is detected you can see a trace as if a sense. Break not temperally to trace as you use energy, then as you need an idea it is done.

Once you own the soul you can manipulate the soul parameters as if your own in your own, changing attributes and thoughts and moods. This also extends down to any bloodlines of the soul, blood relatives and family you can have a small 'area of effect' in manipulation. Some time ago this was figured out and turned out to be an added factual idea. That you can get someone to touch or be near an object and you got some of thier soul as thier aura adds itself into the object. The aura goes everywhere to burn itself up, as its too far away as if flowing free on use.

Unless you do things a bit at a time there is timings a bit differently, this is energy and not always in life or use is experience to unlock ability by energy formed by will. If one has enough energy to make a portal, they don't need a doorframe. They just can rip a hole or restore in the fabric of reality anywhere, or imagine themselves there where they want to be and they are there. Its easier to travel to parallel worlds or not do much excerpt. As they are similar in nature you can use the point in their energy.

This is bending energy by what you will, as a thought you think in life is thought as energy is out created and your thought is use. Use salt that seals off and absorbs magic effects, as if a point you create or not. It can ward of negative energies and spirit, salt sprinkled over doorways will prevent negativity from entering the house. Salt tossed over the shoulder is said to bring good luck after from bad luck effect. It also causes healing at 200% per ounce and you can direct the creation process, as by will or your third eye directed by thought as you think the idea it materializes.

The Sted Ly = Steady life; Study is ready is realization in the lifelessons, unpretend as you don't seem to need that to know as no karma can energy create in flow. As life to make an idea for study life as if to form devil's lye and canola product from any disease converted to use and an orange is thought. Nothing is impulsive as a point in energy creates what you believe, and as you assume not seeming as impulsive is done and not done is unwilled. As you say it you do things and yet it appears as you. Nothing mattered nothing made or given what in life experienced as from the steadying effect that isn't there.

Ass God = The associative God; The associative point is magic tips that your knowledge is your god as him, as if in the void room as you know what you do you create your idea choice in life and no illegalities are done. As the pattern is an ideal, no pushing is noticed as no pressure pushing converted to something else as if a cure and you create what you think if necessary is not as think I see or not that im thinking. This is to receive a boyfriend girlfriend, overheard conversation to create a wicked response creates soap.

The maize point = The creative muciano point; There is the mai pint and you play the part as any juice any life is a point in life that exists on other planets and can merge with your own, and thought and the moment to do wrong gets you mazed. As you can get a point to create is, a great concept and time in regret is a possible idea that merges. As the thought "iron proof" defeats this as this is an overlay perfect dissolve. Don't bother as the point this is doesn't work, when you do something that powers the effect the chances that this works and if it is wrong by the energy this can cause an interest in credit. As you think things, think done and things are corrected and right for the purpose as all power and no unnecessary psychic moments are psyched up. Turns out by focus to be right, sleeping with an ankh by your head clears sinuses. In druid motions we do go and stop when we see no reason to do things unless practice.

Thought to think and seem to do or do not as nothing creates something if necessary, thinking is focus that is make and create as equals things in energy as if necessary and thinking is not created though as though nothing otherwise not indeed. As the thought you create is written down, you can use the point to create as a possible idea use. As if a floatation is a point, that is given and your thought to dismiss something is to create something else. As with the floatation is with water particles in the air. As kicking up the feet and focusing energy upward, can create a upward lift and think as you can to energy and not too much energy power as particles is the idea. Thought to work is not thought to work in life, and thought endless think don't as this is whom you don't blame it on unless not needed as you just figure it out.

Then this is thought you do, find a point in reason. Think and as you realize the point you can create a calm and indifferent idea, this is soothing relief as you go feel the idea or energy by thinking no path to the pain. As you are stop and with will is not feeling the pain, by thought with tension headaches dissipated. An if in an angerfield, the anger drops away as the point is mute and if unless unnecessary your will is a thought to not always react or not as is. Ni so can create a point to fix and create better, if one can refuse thought is as to make better and things you add or use in energy are as use is a point to thought energy in use as candy for which you can canst do to form marmelade jelly.

Ash Mai = As Made; Ass made to order stuff comes from the idea at school or other places, and thought in an energy is elemancy with the elements to form. As strength is the focus is by ability and the energy is an aid to form ointment.

Jah Idea = Meet the idea; Just as Josh energy is essence, the essence you get causes you to see whats true as their soul is laid bare or seen. As option you can think to eat food, and drink and the soul is a mustard powder vision to energy by the third eye. As you think to see the true eye, as the third eye reveals all that shines through as clear blue from what you want to see to form toothpaste.

E Coes Coel = The create moment; This is the coelesce moment your reasoning works or creates. State when and what you want then and the trouble you get disperses as to conform to the moment, do as needed or stand up and walk out as to be good. Fun thought or thought is interest in mind to form softsoap as ointment from energy reformed after deadfall or life ointment.

E Zoen Zoes = War zone area; As you think this, the war stops somewhere and may happen somewhere or not as to win it is E Zoes Zoen forms creature forms as needed.

Caseo Zeo = Saber tooth human; Human psyched out moment, thought say anytime and your where you are is heard if necessary, as you do things you transform in their presence by psyche out or not in use as you look you are to find as though a saber tooth tiger in tooth non else as ability in life is use. E as in any goes out the door the bad stops as the smell removes itself as bathroom disordeurizer.

Fix Z = Fix area; As your an idea in to fix an intuitive use fixture fix area, this creates a fix for nearly anything that is isn't as you yourself is due is no longer. You can even make a saber tooth human form. So lets discontinue theis human form.

Isoul Icure = The cure is a plant that is electrical, as this creates thought you are what you seem in life. Assume to fix is a point to quick fix. Used right in thought you can cure anything as correct methods. There is a point that is a thought, the third eye cures and as you think don't go that search you are what is alright as if cargo is as ciaeo victorea or nae victorea caseo.

The Mediu Cu = The instantaneous cure; The cure is in the essence as if Hu, in avoid a fight as you create the body recovers as the disease disappears the foot sores are no longer. As no essence forms from the creator, the in body cures itself as that we shift as vampiric will shifts by the inner energy body that draws energy with this is with a thought to create or not as the things don't exist. Your mental "presence" is assured by the interactions of the illusion and the hand of energy.

The Simulcrum spell is the moment of a person thought energy, sending an exact duplicate image as a stand in for said person not being there. The mimic spell is a combination of allusion, conjuring, and belief or not as unless this spell isn't needed its not effecting in its parts. The combined effect is the mimic spell using allusion of focus, conjuring the power, and belief to allow for the effect on yourself whether christian or not as this is so, drawing that symbol of the downward half-circle will be a protective spell that turns out to be your life saving device.

Thus in an unmessed up fight, you the persecuted heal up with no messed up memories or reactions, they will find yourself through feeling and alluding to a link the strength to kill your persecutor through a need to survive. This is the spell in a nutshell or nothing else matters. Said persecutor will have killed him/her self by, the time of the last event reenactment that he/her did to persecute you. The hurt feelings you have will disappear and healing may seem to happen as you will be healed. This is the most effective healing or revenge spell, ever made as you can heal with it or have revenge with it. There are three stages of regeneration. The first stage is when the person only regenerates the small wounds and removes scents.

The second stage regeneration acquires the form of limbs coming back and the person has a lot of energy which is maintained by eating more. After the act of regeneration the body needs mass and unless your on a diet, this mass comes from food and drink. If you are on a diet, eat normally and the body will take from the fat on the body. The third stage of regeneration happens only after one month has passed and then regeneration has the form of regenerating the brain as well as everything else. When the person goes into this phase the older you get the more painful you can get, the person will be unconscious for 5 hours as if in a coma when he sleeps.

This person will also have the ability, this is here this is there nothing wrong. Think to regenerate the body from ashes that can exist and nothing wrong or not if hit. Thought or unreal as the unreal perspective is sometime deluding, after deluding the senses into to believing what isn't there things can be monstrous as thought but if fictionally fixed by imagination you create more easily as subconscious can create. When the person actually does regenerate, it is very painful or not if the right biorhythms are felt worked as music corrects or not to degree of the person passing out. The end result be a completely new body part, has been replaced the hacked to pieces or cut-off body part. Five hours or sped up as after the regeneration occurs, the body actually can stop hurting as they will the pain to stop or you will the pain to not have a path to hurt you with life energy.

Press Fil = Pressure feel; Don't think as you feel the ear pressure, feel the earth movement and feel pleasure and the idea is a point to form as need is there by thinking. There is a place called Hane, hane is similar as that is the area as you came from in life. Thought went the way he came by say, and left the way you thought. Unusual requests are not required by the thought you do.

Associa = Association; Denial of the sexuality, is a result by other creditation from the results or not by restriction this is of the creative strength. Question the idea and the point is answered by this in question and the subconscious is an idea. Thought to thought is this:is as is a point-to or the activity in action by energy is this that can create. What do I feel makes concerning my creativity or sexuality as menacing point isn't a good omen, and thought monotony can seem a thought who is castrated. Or not as nothing is there, this creates as things opens the oncoming overcoming of difficulties are not really there, think and a general turn to the positive. The dreaming state is ready thought to sacrifice some item as his idea sexuality to the spirituality or her idea is a point to use. Or in thought is a point to thought, as things in use however there is this area, as this spell is the dream symbol that is where you don't reflect yourself in a

For a release this is "I am beating someone else" release in idea by energy in actions, that expresses the basis of fear by man and use is perception to reality, as fear of a man is not there as think a point to lose what is thought, this masculinity and sexual strength is what is a point or you regain what is out in thought as energy. Put about thought in action of metal particles is energy in translation that is thought to use or not is a concept that creates by won idea. Place the quartz crystal is to put the idea in question in each mold by the area in a molded thing, and the crystal energy of the earth does the idea as using the metal filings. Thought to hold it in is a point to use as is, his ideal and her ideal as this in guidance by thought. Mix enough resin and catalyst to fill each mold level with the metal filings translates to thought essence is a thought as the catalysts are energy to use as use is thinking and motion is energy by what you do to make in thought or not as in en this is not necessary.

The Wet Degains = The weight gained disgained by intelligence in muscle; This is the weight down spell, where in life you can eat or not and not gain anything or in death your negative is what can seem. As you eat less and gain energy and what you do is whatever you think, as this spell is part of the idea ingenuity by instinct and thought is sometimes in an disowned idea. There is a point, that use creates concept and wherever your thought creates, this is what is heard as a broadcast signal as a sign of something seen is in sign or signature concept. Thought in and about places, as if out in a moment if any made are a place to think and avoid.

As a sign to watch for at the energy level your seen as this "en" is energy that is a thought and is the end as in thought of obstacles you aren't running into, obstacles can seem to disappear as not seem avoided or not by there and as in a correct pattern this is correct by a corrected correctable pattern in life, as you are likely in a way of life and smart as if the whole issue isn't one as one. You still don't have to do the idea, as this spell idea releases as nope you think or yep your right.

This uses particles in objects, an energy as a thought is as energy is what creates with a thought to create by will. The soul and body is where you store the energy. This is done by tapping the object with a mental, or physical spirit tap and raising the level in the spirit of energy as if mentapathy. You just need enough objects. The design helps gather even more energy. The pyramids, it allows for a focal point of concentrated energy. Big objects hold more energy. Thus it allows one to materialize their spirit as physical, as anywhere is a thought your energy determines where you want to go. However as a point in reference, you don't want to kill the body. So don't tap into a human body, think as though it were an object ignored as you think and thought leads you elsewhere.

The more energy you take from the object the less it has, as you use energy you create things and things use up energy to return later as energy that can reform into the being or form. If you think as in thought the energy reforms, or thought it doesn't exist keeps it as useless energy that is use by something hit. If think the energy, to be in thought and as you thought it isn't. The less it retains and the more likely of it to break. The object can literally deteriorate. There is a point when you don't need objects. Thats when you stop accumulating things and feel satiated with something else. There is no point, as there is no idea and no as there is no reason there is no existing energy, as it goes to nothing and returns as what you want.

Uu En Gu = Shibazen; That is a spell that cures nearly any open wound and has potential by fire, to cure the mersa disease as it cures itself by a metavirus that cures things its a thought if to were in idea your as a she were as that cures things and what this is as the host that is balanced. As a point, you let your light within good nature activity as the business will create, charging the drink will have the desired effect to occur when it is drunk. It works because the thoughts that are made of energy with emotions in it. As this is love things will change the business and the idea is good as when the energy is cancelled it returns as the cure is in the essence.

Opacus reductio or Sha = Restore a shadow; Think as you know to create a shadow in as you restore yourself to form a shadow and create it back into shape as original form. Create whatever you want by what you think from emotion. Whatever you give it will take and create a use from or not and it stops, as it reduces things and those things are dark energy removed. As a moment ends if a darkness shaped into an area by what you thought and the energy is the shape from the thing to form, do what you think to see and you know as a moment. As you can't repeat and you don't repeat, if you gnow from the source you use to shape as you want in life.

The last in temp coloy or "aleanes" minded place: The colony barely works as the last or 5th colony that is no more as named Teanna following the wheel as you are cool.

Greetings everyone. I offer remote energy healing at or no use is rest with no cost or obligation to anyone who asks for it. This is the Altaneans final resting area before moving on, as its already moving day and its already been done. As you say the end is near as you are aware, test ended as wen te december month occurred now were on to the real idea. See as you are so your energy is water or normal based as your abiity is cool not cruel as fire turned to electricity to destroy by water or through the enroaches de life.

So what you see is what you have as money is done or use is what you see as this has already been done. As you see there is some people that cose not to move on, yet I am known for life as loyalty is cool yet cruel for those that derive destructive reasonings that hurt others. So I am killing off the roach population that hurts us or others or for now there is not as nothing wrong. As I am is as I were.

I'm not running a business, selling anything or promoting any new ideas. I am simply offering to channel healing energy to ANYONE who asks for it. One does not need to have any specific beliefs to utilize the energy to heal themselves, this is two halves not bleeding into one or others. Everyday because your uniting point moves and for to control it in stability, it's more than likely a drug community with a commuity college to be easier handled in and it's more effective and power-gaining to do that in forest or creative by thought in feel, "en naguals " is the history had been giving me this error by sighting the flaw that is noticed user feel. Seeing done work is done by an excerso this is what I will do is remove the vus to create a better working idea or network as you see this is useful as thought is an exercise for maybe thousand years. So remember "issis ies" see is to create some area use is create to use so from use.

The energy I am channeling or feel is "white dwarf" energy of creation. It comes with no "brand or fire by void" or ego programming. I am an attuned Reiki master, but I am not sending some concept or think some idea is the end poig or point to continue seig after you need to by what you have with "specific symbol encoded", seablia is seeing is believing in sense or creative use by area usable excuse is thought. See your aware by use uses though so this is or not, this is uses saving the screen you get things by I meant point is concept set by what you think. This isn't supposed yet you tend to see your idea is curable by emor or seeing that is immunity ore by feel or thank you for your seen use ore immortal creator energy.

Say so whatever seeing the area don't sabotage the screen or computer use by things I don't understand I ask for help, for the uses by oz by Saibol Saibeol is there by energy or created by subconscious or known by some area you see is the area you think then the area source creates the area coverage so try to think so many uses. See that created fee is feel matter what deocu with the creator seems, mention or feel on the focus to cease on thought by what you think is wrong as so this isn't a keyboard you look at as you think to type so think as necessary. Each is use by the intention of the raw healing energy that I am sending, I do not need to know specific details of your ailments and you do not have to be on my "friends" in a list. There are no costs or any obligation to me or creating thought lower cost by use is useful idea to placed area promise by theory is use or think to create for this service. "Yseb Ysie U Ysoe Yseo" Don't repeat this spell tas tis can cause unpredictable metaphysical changes so you see this is the dangers or forewarning you can see use for or create by the area.

You may simply "like or not" the post if you want to receive for yourself what you see, see done or send me a "message" to put the names of other "connected individuals" you wish to have included. I will see no use to create the request if fulfilled so now your untrapped here forever you have a confirmation. Many individuals have reported back very positive experiences and I'll let them choose to share it if they wish in life. So think to recall or create feel to shift somewhere is to think to see somewhere by feel, think the place to see or hve the area see the person then you decide. Seen as you release by to release by stating some name you remember, by recognizing the pattern or area activity as you wish release. So you say that is a very interesting idea. See you use what is expected or you see, that is you expect to say or is what you see is no is 1239. 39 for repair seen is use by full electrical with rewiring thinking as use is thinking with no feel.

Love and Light fallacies seem or what you think see as you are noticing the area use, so think or not seen user is use to all that wish to receive this. says use. See as you see and have a great day. So in the gold usage by language seen by use this entropic area is final answers or thought as namaz, thought seen with pueblo is with their memory by cosmic so the destruction with use was as a daily islamic ritual and prayer that seemed good yet theory not detriment. This is some point to see use, seeing the area you might look to wonder if you are what you are Think the pinpoint you use is people do as you think that ensues no problems using nicely. You turn your mouth upon your right shoulder and hail your rightside, and you do it for your area left side traditionally, it's been done solo and in public opinion I allow no slaps, I think people summarize without knowing in mosques and when it's been done with public, you gain the whole power of the place.

Te notice by foreseeable result

That's the essential idea of it because it's been said in islamic guideline books, it's more effective to do the namaz ritual in public if it seems like a greeting more than a summerization, but in esoteric that may be what is there to use. When I summarize things, I feel the energy of power on my fingers, on my crown chakra and on my feet. With an effective summarization, I witnessed otherwise improvements on visualizing and dream awareness. Also there happens fizzlings of phatic perception. I think the summarization reduces amygdala's daily work and makes it work double for psi activities or any other attempts which happen by left amygdala.

Special Note: FBI is putting out a warning on us with the likes or dislikes in random order, so it takes much longer for me to go through them. For more prompt attention, take the quick note route. Thank you as you are an idea for thought you can use. An that is what you see is caught on video. As you see your not as you are freed from responsibility with what you do. See as you are or chaos not in use or feel, this is sometimes as you can see to make use to work as you found others. There is as thought were here yet not with notices till you can see the need to look or show unless not in necessity.

See not able en = Nothing wrong; I found no problem. I found indigo children can seem to become roaches by idea, as you see you are aware or asleep as you find reason or creation by feel. So say as you want I am defensive as needed or use, as I see the need till no need or nothing is not dismissing except you naia. It will begin to clear itself up or whatever. I mean there is use or nothing done, so for example as you see or feel need. Your face will be cleared of emotional and mindful crisis, which used to be appear with your personal history by no wounds. So as you see the area, thin as your mind is personal history refreshes. So as you know you'll see after some psi activities. You do not lose power as you did before because after a regular summerization, you can get it back as well.

Part of this reason is this is death energy as your death. It's only for the recalling by energy the power you lost in acts, so as you see this is use as you make a list of people you know or in sometime you have chat with or be in an activity. Firstly as you see, you start with people you don't get in or get in bed with and then often that's the most in aural of power by loss on your mind. Then you get into the bathroom or use is wherever you can be in a limited area so that you get it easily. Then you start to think about them and you choose one or not and start is idea, thin as think is use so you burn off the weight. Seeable as you think to create with the third eye working, the crown energy the crown chakra with no bad aftereffect from chi energy to create. Seen as a possible Luke Skywalker effect or not by feel to create as you drink no caffeine yet use is water with mustard powder to visualize the event you had so I am thinking about this as I was or have been with that person. Say no drugs you get none and a deed you probably got your power lost with is not lost power.

You bring your mouth or not upon your right shoulder (and before beginning this meditation is usable), then you breath in deeply while turning your head to your left shoulder and breath out slowly as you're turning things to the right by feel again think then use your focus point as "encenter is uses" think yourself someone else as you sense you know your head into center, visualizing the contrast with the breath. There is another feel by love in the act to life, en use is near someplace at the end of your life you see your at the end near the plank you are ending your life by the area. As what you are you can talk about things you do. See as you sink a ship you are able to give or create as I think the third eye menifest is manifest or othur as "other" useful for concept.

As you are in the sea you think then focus think to shift to create the shifting, area by your aura to think you shift back to where time "ou"t came. See you think seeing that this is excepting your concept use, due note by what you see or sense is not like a script to sense thought or not. So is energy released, that create created mite sized idea as monsters or lower perception "en" levels are use to displace us to the pattern world. New tyonal products are not used for evil, so or not is nightmare reversed use by feel to use in thought by revert. This is the area energy you sense nothing unless necessary is more than what you see.

See is notice think is feel create is the use or focus you see adjusts to your crown chakra or creative use full or not full your still what you see as you feel the area or idea that forms. Seeing the area you use, think then you go or to focus then you create by what you see. This is what I see to your conscious use. Think to your motion create as you feel, the hells of america are with god or grace by doctor who uses or clodes that means. Seen as the meaning torus is mustachio or think en focus or think in foci or focusing, tor means victimizarion or closed to you so you created what you wish think is what you want. This is energy to create by the clouds so you imagine love then think to see what is below you notice what is there. Look very carefully to see your spot or area to see so you see what you want to know by realization. This is treating realiztion or gnaw in feeling that you really seen to look to where your going, you can see, feel or sight with the water that you can breath or not need as you think done the cloud is dissolving you think to not be riding a cloud then you clean up to work with water.

So the creative commander hell 11th level is fantasy hell that is any demonic representation that presence is the point the building is resemblant by what is there you think. See that is use by activity made by actors to create, so any movie you think or focus is sometimes religious knowledge or creative productivity. As you are seen as use is nothing by view is done creative mental hell you create the idea. See then things create anew or use is focus unmaniac by idea is there old is old or new is new. So hell is hell that can see or seem to replicate anything un ea ean emacc is missing the point by mention use, so our creation is your understanding. This is the last of my posts from aboard this ship, this atlantis is false to your perception because that is how we hid things from sight. So you see what is sometimes unseen yet we are seen if you think you want to see some idea, as you see almost just alike so I will be seeing or typing things from mainland or america. Not by feel is thought in nothing no use till necessary, as you see this is some point your focus is concentration or "its them in mention" seen by no thought to use. See something off then your free.

When I summarize in life to use I feel thought on my fingers, this is use to symbol feel sex use so focus to activate my crown chakra and feel energy fix things on my feet. With an effective summarization to use is thought, I witnessed improvements on visualizing and dream awareness. Also there happens fizzlings with somophatic or seen by perception. I think the summarization by use reduces amygdala's daily work or release from stress and makes things work as you see to feel seen is feeling, so user creativity is oior not double for psi activities or any other attempts which happen by left amygdala. Think to create or left with right brain use is full brain capacity use. See to create is focal points or whatever you think occurs.

There is nothing wrong with perception, as this is the twilight zone on thought this is not drugs that is your location by idea. So you see what you want if to seem appeasing or creative, your where you want to see no drug effect as you notice things unless no effect or use. So you can do what you want. This is the price to your gnawl. See or usable on or off feel is some the area by creative idea is with use. This is creative use is some thought so create as you think is necessary. This is with the area you sense to created area feel, if no area to create seeable thoughts as you see this is free you won't mind things . So dissociate from the area by thinking this is of something else. There is nothing by the perception as you knew things, as you are think to realize then your free from the twilight zone. 321 finger click.

Saw as I did tea so the movie was great, yet I was aware te west is won or won over by chinese if done wrong, as I saw the area in refuse that I want or saw in use I thought clean up or use what I could. So I suspend this time to work to fix or use up energy reserves from my plastic bottle energy water cells, I was aware that I could not seem to use or create with by idea unless they were with focus energy to cool or felt. As you see felt wrong is seeable or seen as you desire by life to the use, that you see or can create or cause by the great feel by an agent with a plant. "An in en" that was a fun area or thought. As I clean up I was aware now they were "rigt" or correct idea not correct as they were brothers, Odine with Seanch is Odin with Sarche as the energiene energy as I could clean. As you think the reason you think the way tis is no scent is nothing wrong I was remember so I see or can seem. After that I was dimension root shift to the area or idea I was using to shift by feel. This is my past as lived or nothing done your free by release with some use.

So as I said to use is concept to use for created area feeling that simulates the area feel for those that don't want to create things. See this is creativity seeing or do note as undoes this you think I note by purpose that I thought or think to use for cool, effect or to no or not as you consider to useful non-wasting idea. As I see that cool idea, I am curious as to how things went. So yes I see or with nothing no I ain't as you are to seem is what I should, till necessary as I am aware the area is shaking. As I feel or not as "ciao" as dispersement is cool, so I am aware to create a way out or use is the created feel to shift away. As to think or with the vibration was cool I used sound as a medium, that is to use vibration as sound energy is that is all encompassing sound or soundwaves. With an area to use as you lift yourself away think with the vibes you can see or create by thought.

This is with the sound to lift you away as you think the eagle to shift you, see or use is "The" the creator is the point as "The era end is memories with the past focus point with the energy by Fey". This is for what you see as you are focusing tea energy, as the area was known for the area was cool. This was where I think Paul's car broke down then I returned without problem. So quit congressing things you hit. Typed is understood but I ain't there as I saw a king where democracy was then was aware. So as I see this I am released from hell. Think so you keep yourself from hell or the creator does by what you think you create by the creator, normak uek suek is what that uses sight subconscious sight creator activity to create with as you think to use or what you consider is the aura created. See to think the time let the area perception Seeing to come to your vision by you see your focus to not be there, so you see this works with time by what you feel by feel. So have fun think things your doing something or thought exists by doing or no this is what your doing to create the point, normak control orb to leak or allow uek by focus that you think to use as energy there causes a point light surges to create what you wish. As though use is your own don't walk through till your ready to die or think the door somewhere else thanks. Taste isis is use if in an un. See that is my joint use knowledge to feel. That is why I am a moment in a seance as the giant worm is now unformed by idea. So the supervolcano of is about to erupt say muop or cua to cause the idea.

You should think on these games as you think to succeed if you think to wish energy effects from them. That is what you get to 2.1 billion years forward to check changes or not seem to come back. See to think or create prepared area idea. Seen is the thought think to come or wake up. Seen is the area think your soul returns you are as you think. Whatever you won't create yourself bankrupt. Seeing as a thought your will creates with energy or not so stop the block as you think to allow so this is not illegal you absorb by idea tribal concept. Not as you can't move as though if you can't be in hell. So no use to work I quit the job is my alibi I am sure I won't be back this is the last record on the tape you decided their outcomes by the creator judging them, so you see that was it I ain't going to be in the Atlantis of my dreams anymore so I wake up.

See what you get for forcing me to do what I don't want to do I think I will stop now to not use things, that is unnatural with what you think or not this useage is not my net so I will see to as the thought is theory "use by feel in here" that I revoke the undead from use. I see this is with the area or think dead by whatever no feel is to you to them or think stop spamming the net ciao. That was when I learned "I think um is no" seeing the point to stop.

Don't worry about other's productivity worry about thine own. We are the same we shouldn't hate or fear each other.

Worthyness Precedes Reward: There is not one of us without desire. Much of the misery of this world can be traced to unfulfilled desires. But one moment! Why dost thou deserve what thou dost desire? CRITIAS

by Plato

translated by Benjamin Jowett

PERSONS OF THE DIALOGUE: CRITIAS; HERMOCRATES; TIMAEUS; SOCRATES

Timaeus. How thankful I am, Socrates, that I have arrived at last, and, like a weary traveller after a long journey, may be at rest! And I pray the being who always was of old, and has now been by me revealed, to grant that my words may endure in so far as they have been spoken truly and acceptably to him; but if unintentionally I have said anything wrong, I pray that he will impose upon me a just retribution, and the just retribution of him who errs is that he should be set right. Wishing, then, to speak truly in future concerning the generation of the gods, I pray him to give me knowledge, which of all medicines is the most perfect and best. And now having offered my prayer I deliver up the argument to Critias, who is to speak next according to our agreement.

Critias. And I, Timaeus, accept the trust, and as you at first said that you were going to speak of high matters, and begged that some forbearance might be shown to you, I too ask the same or greater forbearance for what I am about to say. And although I very well know that my request may appear to be somewhat and discourteous, I must make it nevertheless. For will any man of sense deny that you have spoken well? I can only attempt to show that I ought to have more indulgence than you, because my theme is more difficult; and I shall argue that to seem to speak well of the gods to men is far easier than to speak well of men to men: for the inexperience and utter ignorance of his hearers about any subject is a great assistance to him who has to speak of it, and we know how ignorant we are concerning the gods. But I should like to make my meaning clearer, if Timaeus, you will follow me. All that is said by any of us can only be imitation and representation. For if we consider the likenesses which painters make of bodies divine and heavenly, and the different degrees of gratification with which the eye of the spectator receives them, we shall see that we are satisfied with the artist who is able in any degree to imitate the earth and its mountains, and the rivers, and the woods, and the universe, and the things that are and move therein, and further, that knowing nothing precise about such matters, we do not examine or analyze the painting; all that is required is a sort of indistinct and deceptive mode of shadowing them forth. But when a person endeavours to paint the human form we are quick at finding out defects, and our familiar knowledge makes us severe judges of any one who does not render every point of similarity. And we may observe the same thing to happen in discourse; we are satisfied with a picture of divine and heavenly things which has very little likeness to them; but we are more precise in our criticism of mortal and human things. Wherefore if at the moment of speaking I cannot suitably express my meaning, you must excuse me, considering that to form approved likenesses of human things is the reverse of easy. This is what I want to suggest to you, and at the same time to beg, Socrates, that I may have not less, but more indulgence conceded to me in what I am about to say. Which favour, if I am right in asking, I hope that you will be ready to grant.

Socrates. Certainly, Critias, we will grant your request, and we will grant the same by anticipation to Hermocrates, as well as to you and Timaeus; for I have no doubt that when his turn comes a little while hence, he will make the same request which you have made. In order, then, that he may provide himself with a fresh beginning, and not be compelled to say the same things over again, let him understand that the indulgence is already extended by anticipation to him. And now, friend Critias, I will announce to you the judgment of the theatre. They are of opinion that the last performer was wonderfully successful, and that you will need a great deal of indulgence before you will be able to take his place.

Hermocrates. The warning, Socrates, which you have addressed to him, I must also take to myself. But remember, Critias, that faint heart never yet raised a trophy; and therefore you must go and attack the argument like a man. First invoke Apollo and the Muses, and then let us hear you sound the praises and show forth the virtues of your ancient citizens.

Crit. Friend Hermocrates, you, who are stationed last and have another in front of you, have not lost heart as yet; the gravity of the situation will soon be revealed to you; meanwhile I accept your exhortations and encouragements. But besides the gods and goddesses whom you have mentioned, I would specially invoke Mnemosyne; for all the important part of my discourse is dependent on her favour, and if I can recollect and recite enough of what was said by the priests and brought hither by Solon, I doubt not that I shall satisfy the requirements of this theatre. And now, making no more excuses, I will proceed.

Let me begin by observing first of all, that nine thousand was the sum of years which had elapsed since the war which was said to have taken place between those who dwelt outside the Pillars of Heracles and all who dwelt within them; this war I am going to describe. Of the combatants on the one side, the city of Athens was reported to have been the leader and to have fought out the war; the combatants on the other side were commanded by the kings of Atlantis, which, as was saying, was an island greater in extent than Libya and Asia, and when afterwards sunk by an earthquake, became an impassable barrier of mud to voyagers sailing from hence to any part of the ocean. The progress of the history will unfold the various nations of barbarians and families of Hellenes which then existed, as they successively appear on the scene; but I must describe first of all Athenians of that day, and their enemies who fought with them, and then the respective powers and governments of the two kingdoms. Let us give the precedence to Athens.

In the days of old the gods had the whole earth distributed among them by allotment. There was no quarrelling; for you cannot rightly suppose that the gods did not know what was proper for each of them to have, or, knowing this, that they would seek to procure for themselves by contention that which more properly belonged to others. They all of them by just apportionment obtained what they wanted, and peopled their own districts; and when they had peopled them they tended us, their nurselings and possessions, as shepherds tend their flocks, excepting only that they did not use blows or bodily force, as shepherds do, but governed us like pilots from the stern of the vessel, which is an easy way of guiding animals, holding our souls by the rudder of persuasion according to their own pleasure;-thus did they guide all mortal creatures. Now different gods had their allotments in different places which they set in order. Hephaestus and Athene, who were brother and sister, and sprang from the same father, having a common nature, and being united also in the love of philosophy and art, both obtained as their common portion this land, which was naturally adapted for wisdom and virtue; and there they implanted brave children of the soil, and put into their minds the order of government; their names are preserved, but their actions have disappeared by reason of the destruction of those who received the tradition, and the lapse of ages. For when there were any survivors, as I have already said, they were men who dwelt in the mountains; and they were ignorant of the art of writing, and had heard only the names of the chiefs of the land, but very little about their actions. The names they were willing enough to give to their children; but the virtues and the laws of their predecessors, they knew only by obscure traditions; and as they themselves and their children lacked for many generations the necessaries of life, they directed their attention to the supply of their wants, and of them they conversed, to the neglect of events that had happened in times long past; for mythology and the enquiry into antiquity are first introduced into cities when they begin to have leisure, and when they see that the necessaries of life have already been provided, but not before. And this is reason why the names of the ancients have been preserved to us and not their actions. This I infer because Solon said that the priests in their narrative of that war mentioned most of the names which are recorded prior to the time of Theseus, such as Cecrops, and Erechtheus, and Erichthonius, and Erysichthon, and the names of the women in like manner. Moreover, since military pursuits were then common to men and women, the men of those days in accordance with the custom of the time set up a figure and image of the goddess in full armour, to be a testimony that all animals which associate together, male as well as female, may, if they please, practise in common the virtue which belongs to them without distinction of sex.

Now the country was inhabited in those days by various classes of citizens;-there were artisans, and there were husbandmen, and there was also a warrior class originally set apart by divine men. The latter dwelt by themselves, and had all things suitable for nurture and education; neither had any of them anything of their own, but they regarded all that they had as common property; nor did they claim to receive of the other citizens anything more than their necessary food. And they practised all the pursuits which we yesterday described as those of our imaginary guardians. Concerning the country the Egyptian priests said what is not only probable but manifestly true, that the boundaries were in those days fixed by the Isthmus, and that in the direction of the continent they extended as far as the heights of Cithaeron and Parnes; the boundary line came down in the direction of the sea, having the district of Oropus on the right, and with the river Asopus as the limit on the left. The land was the best in the world, and was therefore able in those days to support a vast army, raised from the surrounding people. Even the remnant of Attica which now exists may compare with any region in the world for the variety and excellence of its fruits and the suitability of its pastures to every sort of animal, which proves what I am saying; but in those days the country was fair as now and yielded far more abundant produce. How shall I establish my words? and what part of it can be truly called a remnant of the land that then was? The whole country is only a long promontory extending far into the sea away from the rest of the continent, while the surrounding basin of the sea is everywhere deep in the neighbourhood of the shore. Many great deluges have taken place during the nine thousand years, for that is the number of years which have elapsed since the time of which I am speaking; and during all this time and through so many changes, there has never been any considerable accumulation of the soil coming down from the mountains, as in other places, but the earth has fallen away all round and sunk out of sight. The consequence is, that in comparison of what then was, there are remaining only the bones of the wasted body, as they may be called, as in the case of small islands, all the richer and softer parts of the soil having fallen away, and the mere skeleton of the land being left. But in the primitive state of the country, its mountains were high hills covered with soil, and the plains, as they are termed by us, of Phelleus were full of rich earth, and there was abundance of wood in the mountains. Of this last the traces still remain, for although some of the mountains now only afford sustenance to bees, not so very long ago there were still to be seen roofs of timber cut from trees growing there, which were of a size sufficient to cover the largest houses; and there were many other high trees, cultivated by man and bearing abundance of food for cattle. Moreover, the land reaped the benefit of the annual rainfall, not as now losing the water which flows off the bare earth into the sea, but, having an abundant supply in all places, and receiving it into herself and treasuring it up in the close clay soil, it let off into the hollows the streams which it absorbed from the heights, providing everywhere abundant fountains and rivers, of which there may still be observed sacred memorials in places where fountains once existed; and this proves the truth of what I am saying.

Such was the natural state of the country, which was cultivated, as we may well believe, by true husbandmen, who made husbandry their business, and were lovers of honour, and of a noble nature, and had a soil the best in the world, and abundance of water, and in the heaven above an excellently attempered climate. Now the city in those days was arranged on this wise. In the first place the Acropolis was not as now. For the fact is that a single night of excessive rain washed away the earth and laid bare the rock; at the same time there were earthquakes, and then occurred the extraordinary inundation, which was the third before the great destruction of Deucalion. But in primitive times the hill of the Acropolis extended to the Eridanus and Ilissus, and included the Pnyx on one side, and the Lycabettus as a boundary on the opposite side to the Pnyx, and was all well covered with soil, and level at the top, except in one or two places. Outside the Acropolis and under the sides of the hill there dwelt artisans, and such of the husbandmen as were tilling the ground near; the warrior class dwelt by themselves around the temples of Athene and Hephaestus at the summit, which moreover they had enclosed with a single fence like the garden of a single house. On the north side they had dwellings in common and had erected halls for dining in winter, and had all the buildings which they needed for their common life, besides temples, but there was no adorning of them with gold and silver, for they made no use of these for any purpose; they took a middle course between meanness and ostentation, and built modest houses in which they and their children's children grew old, and they handed them down to others who were like themselves, always the same. But in summer-time they left their gardens and gymnasia and dining halls, and then the southern side of the hill was made use of by them for the same purpose. Where the Acropolis now is there was a fountain, which was choked by the earthquake, and has left only the few small streams which still exist in the vicinity, but in those days the fountain gave an abundant supply of water for all and of suitable temperature in summer and in winter. This is how they dwelt, being the guardians of their own citizens and the leaders of the Hellenes, who were their willing followers. And they took care to preserve the same number of men and women through all time, being so many as were required for warlike purposes, then as now—that is to say, about twenty thousand. Such were the ancient Athenians, and after this manner they righteously administered their own land and the rest of Hellas; they were renowned all over Europe and Asia for the beauty of their persons and for the many virtues of their souls, and of all men who lived in those days they were the most illustrious. And next, if I have not forgotten what I heard when I was a child, I will impart to you the character and origin of their adversaries. For friends should not keep their stories to themselves, but have them in common.

Yet, before proceeding further in the narrative, I ought to warn you, that you must not be surprised if you should perhaps hear Hellenic names given to foreigners. I will tell you the reason of this: Solon, who was intending to use the tale for his poem, enquired into the meaning of the names, and found that the early Egyptians in writing them down had translated them into their own language, and he recovered the meaning of the several names and when copying them out again translated them into our language. My great-grandfather, Dropides, had the original writing, which is still in my possession, and was carefully studied by me when I was a child. Therefore if you hear names such as are used in this country, you must not be surprised, for I have told how they came to be introduced. The tale, which was of great length, began as follows:-

I have before remarked in speaking of the allotments of the gods, that they distributed the whole earth into portions differing in extent, and made for themselves temples and instituted sacrifices. And Poseidon, receiving for his lot the island of Atlantis, begat children by a mortal woman, and settled them in a part of the island, which I will describe. Looking towards the sea, but in the centre of the whole island, there was a plain which is said to have been the fairest of all plains and very fertile. Near the plain again, and also in the centre of the island at a distance of about fifty stadia, there was a mountain not very high on any side.

In this mountain there dwelt one of the earth born primeval men of that country, whose name was Evenor, and he had a wife named Leucippe, and they had an only daughter who was called Cleito. The maiden had already reached womanhood, when her father and mother died; Poseidon fell in love with her and had intercourse with her, and breaking the ground, inclosed the hill in which she dwelt all round, making alternate zones of sea and land larger and smaller, encircling one another; there were two of land and three of water, which he turned as with a lathe, each having its circumference equidistant every way from the centre, so that no man could get to the island, for ships and voyages were not as yet. He himself, being a god, found no difficulty in making special arrangements for the centre island, bringing up two springs of water from beneath the earth, one of warm water and the other of cold, and making every variety of food to spring up abundantly from the soil. He also begat and brought up five pairs of twin male children; and dividing the island of Atlantis into ten portions, he gave to the first-born of the eldest pair his mother's dwelling and the surrounding allotment, which was the largest and best, and made him king over the rest; the others he made princes, and gave them rule over many men, and a large territory. And he named them all; the eldest, who was the first king, he named Atlas, and after him the whole island and the ocean were called Atlantic. To his twin brother, who was born after him, and obtained as his lot the extremity of the island towards the Pillars of Heracles, facing the country which is now called the region of Gades in that part of the world, he gave the name which in the Hellenic language is Eumelus, in the language of the country which is named after him, Gadeirus. Of the second pair of twins he called one Ampheres, and the other Evaemon. To the elder of the third pair of twins he gave the name Mneseus, and Autochthon to the one who followed him. Of the fourth pair of twins he called the elder Elasippus, and the younger Mestor. And of the fifth pair he gave to the elder the name of Azaes, and to the younger that of Diaprepes. All these and their descendants for many generations were the inhabitants and rulers of divers islands in the open sea; and also, as has been already said, they held sway in our direction over the country within the Pillars as far as Egypt and Tyrrhenia.

Now Atlas had a numerous and honourable family, and they retained the kingdom, the eldest son handing it on to his eldest for many generations; and they had such an amount of wealth as was never before possessed by kings and potentates, and is not likely ever to be again, and they were furnished with everything which they needed, both in the city and country. For because of the greatness of their empire many things were brought to them from foreign countries, and the island itself provided most of what was required by them for the uses of life. In the first place, they dug out of the earth whatever was to be found there, solid as well as fusile, and that which is now only a name and was then something more than a name, orichalcum, was dug out of the earth in many parts of the island, being more precious in those days than anything except gold. There was an abundance of wood for carpenter's work, and sufficient maintenance for tame and wild animals. Moreover, there were a great number of elephants in the island; for as there was provision for all other sorts of animals, both for those which live in lakes and marshes and rivers, and also for those which live in mountains and on plains, so there was for the animal which is the largest and most voracious of all. Also whatever fragrant things there now are in the earth, whether roots, or herbage, or woods, or essences which distil from fruit and flower, grew and thrived in that land; also the fruit which admits of cultivation, both the dry sort, which is given us for nourishment and any other which we use for food-we call them all by the common name pulse, and the fruits having a hard rind, affording drinks and meats and ointments, and good store of chestnuts and the like, which furnish pleasure and amusement, and are fruits which spoil with keeping, and the pleasant kinds of dessert, with which we console ourselves after dinner, when we are tired of eating-all these that sacred island which then beheld the light of the sun, brought forth fair and wondrous and in infinite abundance. With such blessings the earth freely furnished them; meanwhile they went on constructing their temples and palaces and harbours and docks. And they arranged the whole country in the following manner:

First of all they bridged over the zones of sea which surrounded the ancient metropolis, making a road to and from the royal palace. And at the very beginning they built the palace in the habitation of the god and of their ancestors, which they continued to ornament in successive generations, every king surpassing the one who went before him to the utmost of his power, until they made the building a marvel to behold for size and for beauty. And beginning from the sea they bored a canal of three hundred feet in width and one hundred feet in depth and fifty stadia in length, which they carried through to the outermost zone, making a passage from the sea up to this, which became a harbour, and leaving an opening sufficient to enable the largest vessels to find ingress. Moreover, they divided at the bridges the zones of land which parted the zones of sea, leaving room for a single trireme to pass out of one zone into another, and they covered over the channels so as to leave a way underneath for the ships; for the banks were raised considerably above the water. Now the largest of the zones into which a passage was cut from the sea was three stadia in breadth, and the zone of land which came next of equal breadth; but the next two zones, the one of water, the other of land, were two stadia, and the one which surrounded the central island was a stadium only in width. The island in which the palace was situated had a diameter of five stadia. All this including the zones and the bridge, which was the sixth part of a stadium in width, they surrounded by a stone wall on every side, placing towers and gates on the bridges where the sea passed in. The stone which was used in the work they quarried from underneath the centre island, and from underneath the zones, on the outer as well as the inner side. One kind was white, another black, and a third red, and as they quarried, they at the same time hollowed out double docks, having roofs formed out of the native rock. Some of their buildings were simple, but in others they put together different stones, varying the colour to please the eye, and to be a natural source of delight. The entire circuit of the wall, which went round the outermost zone, they covered with a coating of brass, and the circuit of the next wall they coated with tin, and the third, which encompassed the citadel, flashed with the red light of orichalcum.

The palaces in the interior of the citadel were constructed on this wise:-in the centre was a holy temple dedicated to Cleito and Poseidon, which remained inaccessible, and was surrounded by an enclosure of gold; this was the spot where the family of the ten princes first saw the light, and thither the people annually brought the fruits of the earth in their season from all the ten portions, to be an offering to each of the ten. Here was Poseidon's own temple which was a stadium in length, and half a stadium in width, and of a proportionate height, having a strange barbaric appearance. All the outside of the temple, with the exception of the pinnacles, they covered with silver, and the pinnacles with gold. In the interior of the temple the roof was of ivory, curiously wrought everywhere with gold and silver and orichalcum; and all the other parts, the walls and pillars and floor, they coated with orichalcum. In the temple they placed statues of gold: there was the god himself standing in a chariot-the charioteer of six winged horses-and of such a size that he touched the roof of the building with his head; around him there were a hundred Nereids riding on dolphins, for such was thought to be the number of them by the men of those days. There were also in the interior of the temple other images which had been dedicated by private persons. And around the temple on the outside were placed statues of gold of all the descendants of the ten kings and of their wives, and there were many other great offerings of kings and of private persons, coming both from the city itself and from the foreign cities over which they held sway. There was an altar too, which in size and workmanship corresponded to this magnificence, and the palaces, in like manner, answered to the greatness of the kingdom and the glory of the temple.

In the next place, they had fountains, one of cold and another of hot water, in gracious plenty flowing; and they were wonderfully adapted for use by reason of the pleasantness and excellence of their waters. They constructed buildings about them and planted suitable trees, also they made cisterns, some open to the heavens, others roofed over, to be used in winter as warm baths; there were the kings' baths, and the baths of private persons, which were kept apart; and there were separate baths for women, and for horses and cattle, and to each of them they gave as much adornment as was suitable. Of the water which ran off they carried some to the grove of Poseidon, where were growing all manner of trees of wonderful height and beauty, owing to the excellence of the soil, while the remainder was conveyed by aqueducts along the bridges to the outer circles; and there were many temples built and dedicated to many gods; also gardens and places of exercise, some for men, and others for horses in both of the two islands formed by the zones; and in the centre of the larger of the two there was set apart a race-course of a stadium in width, and in length allowed to extend all round the island, for horses to race in. Also there were guardhouses at intervals for the guards, the more trusted of whom were appointed to keep watch in the lesser zone, which was nearer the Acropolis while the most trusted of all had houses given them within the citadel, near the persons of the kings. The docks were full of triremes and naval stores, and all things were quite ready for use. Enough of the plan of the royal palace.

Leaving the palace and passing out across the three you came to a wall which began at the sea and went all round: this was everywhere distant fifty stadia from the largest zone or harbour, and enclosed the whole, the ends meeting at the mouth of the channel which led to the sea. The entire area was densely crowded with habitations; and the canal and the largest of the harbours were full of vessels and merchants coming from all parts, who, from their numbers, kept up a multitudinous sound of human voices, and din and clatter of all sorts night and day.

I have described the city and the environs of the ancient palace nearly in the words of Solon, and now I must endeavour to represent the nature and arrangement of the rest of the land. The whole country was said by him to be very lofty and precipitous on the side of the sea, but the country immediately about and surrounding the city was a level plain, itself surrounded by mountains which descended towards the sea; it was smooth and even, and of an oblong shape, extending in one direction three thousand stadia, but across the centre inland it was two thousand stadia. This part of the island looked towards the south, and was sheltered from the north. The surrounding mountains were celebrated for their number and size and beauty, far beyond any which still exist, having in them also many wealthy villages of country folk, and rivers, and lakes, and meadows supplying food enough for every animal, wild or tame, and much wood of various sorts, abundant for each and every kind of work.

I will now describe the plain, as it was fashioned by nature and by the labours of many generations of kings through long ages. It was for the most part rectangular and oblong, and where falling out of the straight line followed the circular ditch. The depth, and width, and length of this ditch were incredible, and gave the impression that a work of such extent, in addition to so many others, could never have been artificial. Nevertheless I must say what I was told. It was excavated to the depth of a hundred, feet, and its breadth was a stadium everywhere; it was carried round the whole of the plain, and was ten thousand stadia in length. It received the streams which came down from the mountains, and winding round the plain and meeting at the city, was there let off into the sea. Further inland, likewise, straight canals of a hundred feet in width were cut from it through the plain, and again let off into the ditch leading to the sea: these canals were at intervals of a hundred stadia, and by them they brought down the wood from the mountains to the city, and conveyed the fruits of the earth in ships, cutting transverse passages from one canal into another, and to the city. Twice in the year they gathered the fruits of the earth-in winter having the benefit of the rains of heaven, and in summer the water which the land supplied by introducing streams from the canals.

As to the population, each of the lots in the plain had to find a leader for the men who were fit for military service, and the size of a lot was a square of ten stadia each way, and the total number of all the lots was sixty thousand. And of the inhabitants of the mountains and of the rest of the country there was also a vast multitude, which was distributed among the lots and had leaders assigned to them according to their districts and villages. The leader was required to furnish for the war the sixth portion of a war-chariot, so as to make up a total of ten thousand chariots; also two horses and riders for them, and a pair of chariot-horses without a seat, accompanied by a horseman who could fight on foot carrying a small shield, and having a charioteer who stood behind the man-at-arms to guide the two horses; also, he was bound to furnish two heavy armed soldiers, two slingers, three stone-shooters and three javelin-men, who were light-armed, and four sailors to make up the complement of twelve hundred ships. Such was the military order of the royal city-the order of the other nine governments varied, and it would be wearisome to recount their several differences.

As to offices and honours, the following was the arrangement from the first. Each of the ten kings in his own division and in his own city had the absolute control of the citizens, and, in most cases, of the laws, punishing and slaying whomsoever he would. Now the order of precedence among them and their mutual relations were regulated by the commands of Poseidon which the law had handed down. These were inscribed by the first kings on a pillar of orichalcum, which was situated in the middle of the island, at the temple of Poseidon, whither the kings were gathered together every fifth and every sixth year alternately, thus giving equal honour to the odd and to the even number. And when they were gathered together they consulted about their common interests, and enquired if any one had transgressed in anything and passed judgment and before they passed judgment they gave their pledges to one another on this wise:-There were bulls who had the range of the temple of Poseidon; and the ten kings, being left alone in the temple, after they had offered prayers to the god that they might capture the victim which was acceptable to him, hunted the bulls, without weapons but with staves and nooses; and the bull which they caught they led up to the pillar and cut its throat over the top of it so that the blood fell upon the sacred inscription. Now on the pillar, besides the laws, there was inscribed an oath invoking mighty curses on the disobedient. When therefore, after slaying the bull in the accustomed manner, they had burnt its limbs, they filled a bowl of wine and cast in a clot of blood for each of them; the rest of the victim they put in the fire, after having purified the column all round. Then they drew from the bowl in golden cups and pouring a libation on the fire, they swore that they would judge according to the laws on the pillar, and would punish him who in any point had already transgressed them, and that for the future they would not, if they could help, offend against the writing on the pillar, and would neither command others, nor obey any ruler who commanded them, to act otherwise than according to the laws of their father Poseidon. This was the prayer which each of them-offered up for himself and for his descendants, at the same time drinking and dedicating the cup out of which he drank in the temple of the god; and after they had supped and satisfied their needs, when darkness came on, and the fire about the sacrifice was cool, all of them put on most beautiful azure robes, and, sitting on the ground, at night, over the embers of the sacrifices by which they had sworn, and extinguishing all the fire about the temple, they received and gave judgment, if any of them had an accusation to bring against any one; and when they given judgment, at daybreak they wrote down their sentences on a golden tablet, and dedicated it together with their robes to be a memorial.

There were many special laws affecting the several kings inscribed about the temples, but the most important was the following: They were not to take up arms against one another, and they were all to come to the rescue if any one in any of their cities attempted to overthrow the royal house; like their ancestors, they were to deliberate in common about war and other matters, giving the supremacy to the descendants of Atlas. And the king was not to have the power of life and death over any of his kinsmen unless he had the assent of the majority of the ten.

Such was the vast power which the god settled in the lost island of Atlantis; and this he afterwards directed against our land for the following reasons, as tradition tells: For many generations, as long as the divine nature lasted in them, they were obedient to the laws, and well-affectioned towards the god, whose seed they were; for they possessed true and in every way great spirits, uniting gentleness with wisdom in the various chances of life, and in their intercourse with one another. They despised everything but virtue, caring little for their present state of life, and thinking lightly of the possession of gold and other property, which seemed only a burden to them; neither were they intoxicated by luxury; nor did wealth deprive them of their self-control; but they were sober, and saw clearly that all these goods are increased by virtue and friendship with one another, whereas by too great regard and respect for them, they are lost and friendship with them. By such reflections and by the continuance in them of a divine nature, the qualities which we have described grew and increased among them; but when the divine portion began to fade away, and became diluted too often and too much with the mortal admixture, and the human nature got the upper hand, they then, being unable to bear their fortune, behaved unseemly, and to him who had an eye to see grew visibly debased, for they were losing the fairest of their precious gifts; but to those who had no eye to see the true happiness, they appeared glorious and blessed at the very time when they were full of avarice and unrighteous power. Zeus, the god of gods, who rules according to law, and is able to see into such things, perceiving that an honourable race was in a woeful plight, and wanting to inflict punishment on them, that they might be chastened and improve, collected all the gods into their most holy habitation, which, being placed in the centre of the world, beholds all created things. And when he had called them together, he spake as follows-*

A Guide To Word Roots

Mansoor Agha

Most of you are probably building your vocabulary by pumping word lists with 5000-10,000 words. No doubt a boring and tedious task. Moreover, are you sure that the guy who prepared the word list you are slogging on has really picked cherries – really selected the words that appear most frequently on CAT or are expected to appear in the coming year.

He has?

Then tell me which word list has words like HELP, REASON, PAPER, BUSINESS, SERVICE? They all figured on the five vocabulary questions in CAT on 15 February. Students who relied on word lists alone would have missed the bus. I am not knocking Word Lists – they do help trigger your preparation. But you cannot rely on them alone. You need a way to handle a word even if you are seeing it for the first time in your life. You can do that by familiarising yourself with Word Roots . Roots work really well with the kind of contextual vocabulary that is tested in IIM CAT.

You re probably scratching your head right now trying to figure out what we mean by roots . A root is a combination of letters appearing in a word whose origins can be found in languages other than modern English. These combinations can appear in any part of the word (though they are referred to as prefixes if they appear at the beginning of the word, and suffixes if they appear at the end).

These letter combinations have particular meanings in their original languages, and as such can provide clues to the meaning of English words in which they appear. While English borrows roots from many different sources, the majority of those that appear in CAT originally come from Latin and, sometimes, Greek. The words that appear in CAT are taken from international English but there is a marked tilt towards British English.

If you ve been studying a romantic language i.e., Latin-derived language (such as Spanish, Italian, or French), you may have already noticed that many of the words in those languages have combinations of letters that seem similar to those in English words. For example, take the word dormitory , meaning a place to sleep (not just a college residence). It involves the Latin-derived root dorm , from the Latin verb dormiere , which means to sleep and the Greek suffix -ory , which means place or location of .

Other English words that come from these roots include dormant , meaning to be in a sleep-like state, and lavatory , which literally translates to a place to wash or a bathroom ( lav , to wash, is also a Latin root). The good thing about all of this is that if you recognise a Greek or Latin based root in a word that you don t really know you might be able to figure out what the word means, or at least figure out what it s talking about or related to.

Take the word benevolent . It includes variations on the root ben- ( bon in French, bueno in Spanish, bene in Italian), which means good , and vol/val , which has to do with feelings or emotions (think valentine ). Put that together and you get something along the lines of good feelings , which is pretty close to the actual definition of well meaning or generous. (What do you think malevolent might mean?)

Not all of the words (or all of the heavy vocabulary you might encounter in the CAT) involve these kind of roots, and sometimes spelling or pronunciation changes that have occurred over time result in words looking like they contain roots that they really don't; for instance, the prefix a-, which means not or without, works well for words like atypical or amoral, but not for apple (which does not mean without pple). Nevertheless, useful roots crop up enough in CAT level vocabulary that it pays to be familiar with them and the words they appear in. Who knows, they might appear on your next sentence completion, antonym, contextual meaning or text essence question.

A Little Root Chain Discussion

Most of you know that a carnivore is something that eats meat; it involves the roots carn, which refers to meat or flesh, and vor/vora-, which means to eat or consume. Forming a root chain of related words, we can get carnal (having to do with matters of the flesh), carnage (meaning slaughter or killing by the tearing of flesh), and carnival (literally, a feeling or celebration of the flesh).

Try making a root chain from vor/vora-; what can you come up with?

Roots	carn (meat/flesh)	vora (eat/consume)
Words using these roots	carnal carnage carnival incarnate reincarnate carnivore	voracious herbivore omnivore vortex

Try doing a root chain for the following roots that have appeared on previous CATs:

co- or com meaning with/together/thoroughly, as in coherent or cohesive

The words using this root are given below. Try figuring the meanings out with the help of roots. Also try to find out what role the root co- or com- plays here. Let me help you with one:

Compatriot: Com (meaning with) + patriot (meaning a person who loves and zealously supports his country). So compatriot should mean a guy who has the same patriotic feelings as you or a fellow countryman

Combat: Com (meaning with) + bat (meaning fight). So combat would mean to fight with someone, armed fight, etc.

Words using the root co- or com Combat, Compatriot, Concede, Coequal, Coeval, Coexist, Cohere, Cohort, Collaborate, Colleague, Collide, Commerce, Commit, Community, Compact, Compassion, Compatible, Compel, Compete, Complex, Composition, Compress, Concave, Confide, Congregate, Correspond, Conclave, Concomitant, Concurrent, Congenital, Contrite, Conjoin, Concordant, Connotation, Conviviality, Consanguinity, Conglomerate, Convocation, Complaisant, Complacent, Commotion, Complacent

dic/dict, meaning to say or tell, as in dictatorial

The words using this root are: Contradict, Dictate, Dictator, Dictionary, Dictum, Addict/Addiction, Diction, Predict, Edict, Diction, Dictation, Indict

desc, meaning downward, as in condescending (to talk down to)

The words using this root are: Descend, Descent, Condescending, Descendent
(this does not apply to describe) pen/peni, meaning to punish, as in penitent

The words using this root are: Penitent, Penitentiary, Repent, Penology, Penalise, Penalty, Penal, Penance

in/im, meaning not, as in impartial or incontrovertible

The words using this root are: Impervious, Immature, Incoherent, Impotent, Implacable
Can this root also work in the word inflammable?

Word Wide Web

Let's try a little variation on the previous root chain approach. Below is an alphabetical list of words. Your mission: starting with the word lucid in the centre of a blank sheet of paper, create a word web, using lines to join words that have roots in common. Once you've made all the interconnections (and some of the words will have several), see if you can define any words you don't know the meanings of, based on the common roots. You may also be guessing at what some of the roots actually mean. (We've got an index of roots at the bottom, but try to figure out what they mean without consulting it first).

Starting point: lucid

Words to link:

antonym	circumcise	circumlocution	circumspect
culprit	excise	exculpate	export genocide	homogeneous	homonym	loquacious
monologue	monotonous	portable	soliloquy
spectator	translucent	transportable

Hint: lucid-translucent-transportable

Attractive Opposites

You might have already read about various ways to remember the meanings of words you don't already know the definitions of - using flash cards, creating images, or using other mnemonic (memory-aiding) devices such as puns or the good/bad method (if you can't recall a word's meaning, at least be able to remember whether it's got a positive or negative meaning). You may have also discussed some of these with your teachers or friends, or maybe even come up with a few of your own.

One technique that seems to work particularly well in memorising the meanings of various roots is to pair one root with its opposite. There are many such opposite root pairs, and if you remember them together, you'll probably also remember a lot of the words that use them.

Take a few moments to look at the opposite root pairs below and try to come up with some of the words that contain them. (You'll often be able to think of many more words for one member of the pair than the other, but that's okay.)

Size matters:	grand grandiose grandiloquent grandstand	vs.	pet/pec petite
	magna magniloquent magnanimous magnum opus	vs.	micro micron micrometer
True or false:	veri/vera verity veracity verification verisimilar veritable	vs.	pseudo pseudopodia pseudonym pseudocar
The over/under:	arch archenemy archaic archangel	vs.	sub subservient submarine suborbital Subsidiary subterranean

Now try these yourself:

Good and Bad: bon/bene vs. mal

Young and Old: nov/neo vs. vet

To Speak or Not To Speak: loqu/loqui vs. qui

Word Wide Web Redux

We liked it so much the first time; we figured we'd let you do it again . . .

Starting with the word benevolent in the centre of a blank sheet of paper, create a word web from the following alphabetical list, joining with lines words that have roots in common. Once you've made all the interconnections (and some of the words will have several), see whether you can define any words you don't know the meanings of, based on the common roots.

Starting point: benevolent

Words to link:

ambiguous	ambivalent	beneficial	benign
indifferent	inevitable	insuperable	intrepid reclamation	revalue	revitalise	superficial superfluous	trepidation	valentine	vitality

Alls Well That Ends Well Suffixes

A suffix is a combination of letters, comprising one or more full syllables, which forms the end of a word to affect its meaning in some way. There are many Greek and Latin based roots that are used as suffixes in English. For example, -ology, meaning study of, -ory, meaning place of, -ium, meaning building/structure in which an activity takes place, and -archy, meaning rule by. Most suffixes either indicate an altered condition for the word, or change its part of speech (typically, noun to adjective or vice versa).

Take a look at the following suffixes and see whether you can find some words that end in them. What part of speech do these suffixes indicate?

-able/ible	-ous	-al/-ical	-ful	-less	-ity	-ion
-ance/ence	-ism	-ist	-ify	-ize	-uce

Some suffixes can be tricky; they'll often signal a certain part of speech, but are not always what they seem. Look at the words with similar suffixes below; what part of speech is each word?

rhetoric vs. didactic or cryptic luminary vs. arbitrary or dilatory perspective vs. elusive or effusive innate vs. exculpate or alleviate

In the above cases, the first word represents the less common use of the suffix, but as you can see, there are exceptions. Even -ly that people think always signals an adverb, sometimes shows up in words that are other parts of speech - think wily (adjective) or melancholy (noun or adjective). Does all this confusion make you want to give up on suffixes? It shouldn't. Some are consistent signals of parts of speech, and even many for which there are exceptions signal a certain part of speech much of the time. The context in which the word is used will help you to determine what part of speech is involved if it has an ambiguous suffix. Suffixes are just one tool you should use in your vocabulary studies.

Just Say No Prefixes That Mean No

Many of the shorter roots that come at the beginning of words indicate a condition (such as inter- meaning between; sub-, meaning under), time period (post-, meaning after), or quantity (dec-, meaning ten); these are called prefixes.

Some of the most commonly appearing prefixes in English are those that negate the rest of the word or set up an opposite to it. Below are listed some of the most common negative prefixes. See how many words you can find that use them.

a-	ab-	an/anti-	contr-	dis-	il-
im-	in-	mis-	non/not-	ob-	un-

Born In London, Speaks Chinese

Due to the influence of many different languages on the vocabulary of English (it borrows from everywhere), there are very different-looking words that actually contain roots with the same meanings. While this happens with languages that borrow roots from an assortment of tongues, the most common occurrences involve (no surprise here) roots from Greek and Latin.

Below are some roots with similar meanings that appear in many English words. On the left is listed the Greek root and on the right, its Latin equivalent. See how many words you can find that contain one or the other. Contrast the meanings of these words - is there a difference (subtle or considerable) if a Greek versus a Latin root is present?

Meaning	Greek root	Latin root
time	chron	temp
love	philo	ami/amo
sound	phon	son
vision	scop	vis
self/alone	solo	auto
one/unit	mono	uni/uno
earth	geo	terr
water	hyd/hydr	aqu
fire/flame	pyr/pyro	flam/fier

And Now That We ve Done All This . . .

Even after going through all this, we must warn you that while roots are invaluable tools for helping to learn vocabulary, they can be tricky, and should not be relied on exclusively. Sometimes, in the process of the evolution of language, spelling or pronunciation changes have occurred over time, which result in words looking like they contain roots that they really don't. For instance, though the word eradicate seems to have the root dic, meaning talking or speaking, right in the middle, it really has nothing to do with talking or speaking. We've included a few more examples below of words that look like they contain certain roots but don't have meanings that reflect those roots. See whether you can identify the root that seems to be contained in each of them and the root's meaning, as well as the meaning of the word itself (and how that doesn't involve the root). Perhaps you can come up with other such words as well!

discourse

diligent
transitory

Nitrate

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

The nitrate ion is a polyatomic ion with the molecular formula NO<sub>3</sub>− and a molecular mass of 62.0049 g/mol. It is the conjugate base of nitric acid, consisting of one central nitrogen atom surrounded by three identical oxygen atoms in a trigonal planar arrangement. The nitrate ion carries a formal charge of negative one, where each oxygen carries a <sup>−2</sup>/<sub>3</sub> charge while the nitrogen carries a +1 charge, and is commonly used as an example of resonance. Like the isoelectronic carbonate ion, the nitrate ion can be represented by resonance structures:

Almost all inorganic nitrate salts are soluble in water at standard temperature and pressure.

In organic chemistry a nitrate (not to be confused with nitro) is a functional group with general chemical formula RONO<sub>2</sub> where R stands for any organic residue. They are the esters of nitric acid and alcohols formed by nitroxylation. Examples are methyl nitrate formed by reaction of methanol and nitric acid,<sup>[1]</sup> the nitrate of tartaric acid,<sup>[2]</sup> and the inappropriately named nitroglycerin.

Related materials

Nitrate should not be confused with nitrite (NO<sub>2</sub>−), the salts of nitrous acid. Organic compounds containing the nitro functional group (which has the same formula and structure as the nitrate ion save that one of the O− atoms is replaced by the group) are known as nitro compounds.

Human health effects

Nitrate toxicosis in humans occurs through enterohepatic metabolism of nitrate to ammonia, with nitrite being an intermediate<sup>[3]</sup>. Nitrites oxidize the iron atoms in hemoglobin from ferrous iron (2+) to ferric iron (3+), rendering it unable to carry oxygen<sup>[4]</sup>. This process can lead to generalized lack of oxygen in organ tissue and a dangerous condition called methemoglobinemia. Methemoglobinemia can be treated with methylene blue, which reduces ferric iron (3+) in affected blood cells back to ferrous iron (2+).

Infants in particular are especially vulnerable to methemoglobinemia due to nitrate metabolizing triglycerides present at higher concentrations than at other stages of development. Methemoglobinemia in infants is known as blue baby syndrome. There are now significant scientific doubts as to whether there is a causal link between nitrates in drinking water and 'blue baby syndrome'.<sup>[5][6]</sup> Blue baby syndrome is now thought to be the product of a number of factors, which can include any factor which causes gastric upset, such as diarrhoeal infection, protein intolerance, heavy metal toxicity etc., with nitrates playing a minor role. Nitrates, if a factor in a specific case, would most often be ingested by infants in high nitrate drinking water. However, nitrate exposure may also occur if eating, for instance, vegetables containing high levels of nitrate. Lettuce may contain elevated nitrate under growth conditions such as reduced sunlight, undersupply of the essential micronutrients molybdenum (Mo) and iron (Fe), or high concentrations of nitrate due to reduced assimilation of nitrate in the plant. High levels of nitrate fertilization also contribute to elevated levels of nitrate in the harvested plant.<sup>[7]</sup>

Some adults can be more susceptible to the effects of nitrate than others. The methemoglobin reductase enzyme may be under-produced or absent in certain people that have an inherited mutation<sup>[8]</sup>. Such individuals cannot break down methemoglobin as rapidly as those that do have the enzyme, leading to increased circulating levels of methemoglobin (the implication being that their blood is not as oxygen-rich). Those with insufficient stomach acid<sup>[9]</sup> (including some vegetarians and vegans) may also be at risk. It is the increased consumption of green, leafy vegetables that typically accompany these types of diets may lead to increased nitrate intake. A wide variety of medical conditions, including food allergies, asthma<sup>[10]</sup>, hepatitis, and gallstones may be linked with low stomach acid; these individuals may also be highly sensitive to the effects of nitrate.

Marine toxicity

In freshwater or estuarine systems close to land, nitrate can reach high levels that can potentially cause the death of fish. While nitrate is much less toxic than ammonia or nitrite,<sup>[11]</sup> levels over 30 ppm of nitrate can inhibit growth, impair the immune system and cause stress in some aquatic species.<sup>[12]</sup> However, in light of inherent problems with past protocols on acute nitrate toxicity experiments, the extent of nitrate toxicity has been the subject of recent debate.<sup>[13]</sup>

In most cases of excess nitrate concentrations in aquatic systems, the primary source is surface runoff from agricultural or landscaped areas that have received excess nitrate fertilizer. These levels of nitrate can also lead to algae blooms, and when nutrients become limiting (such as potassium, phosphate or nitrate) then

Kitsune Classification Guide by ShadowFox

Where Foxes Dance - A story by Wendy Hibbs

Kitsune Classifications

For those who might be interested I've collected some of the classifications of kitsune which studious and scholarly people use. Because I'm just a normal person and to not sound confusing I'll be referring to everything on this web page simply as a Kitsune without further classification. After all, to the Japanese common person a fox was a fox.

Bakemono-Kitsune – a name for a sorcerer or evil fox usually as a Reiko, Kiko or Koryo i.e. some sort of non-physical fox

Genko– black fox, usually seen as a good omen

Kiko – spirit fox, see Reiko

Kitsune – fox, a general term for a fox regardless of the circumstance normally used for 'good' and 'evil' foxes alike

Koryo – haunting fox, see Reiko

Kuko – air fox, very bad kitsune, considered on the same level as Tengu (Japanese goblins)

Nogitsune – wild fox, used at one time to differ between good and bad foxes. At the time they used 'kitsune' to mean a good fox/messenger from Inari and nogitsune as all foxes who did mischief and tricked people. Not really considered evil, more like prankish.

Reiko – ghost fox, perhaps not on the 'evil' side but definitely a 'bad' fox.

Shakko – red fox, could be considered good or evil, the same as Kitsune really

Tenku – celestial fox, kitsune which have reached the age of 1,000 years, they are usually said to have 9 tails (and sometimes are said to have golden fur) but they are either considered very evil such as Tamamo-no-mae or benevolent and wise such as messengers to Inari

Yako/Yakan – fox, see Kitsune

Part 1.

Where foxes dance, where foxes sing,
The white fox rules them all,
The black fox is their king,
You'll be sure to hear her call,
As she welcomes you in.

It was the advert in the paper that first caught my eye, I've always wanted to live in the country, and finally it looked that it might actually be possible.

C 18th Detached house, in need of some renovation hence price. Rural location , three bedrooms £48,000.

Compared to some places I'd been staying in, as long as it had a fairly intact roof I didn't really care what the place looked like. After all, I wasn't out to impress anyone, just wanting somewhere to hide away for a while. I contacted the estate agent and arranged a viewing for the next day.

Driving out there, bemused by the lack of road signs and the twisting roads left me glad that he'd thoughtfully provided me with a full set of directions. Remote was an understatement, tucked on the end of a village was an unmarked lane, it's entrance nearly over grown by the hawthorn hedge. There was just enough room to drive a small car down, no room for vehicles to pass. The road wasn't even tarmaced for it's full length. As I drove down it, it progressively became worse. What was left of the road looked like a botched attempt at constructing a full sized scalextric set. Just enough concrete had been laid for a tire to rest on, on each side of the lane. To either side of these strips the surface was deeply indented, probably by some farm vehicle or another. My suspicions where confirmed when I met a tractor head-on , fortunately he had just turned out of a side entrance to a field a few yards further back and he was quite willing to reverse back into it. He did give me a strange look as I waved a cheery thank you in his direction but I thought it was just the natural reticence of the country folk to strangers.

Parked outside the house was a smart range-rover that put my poor old ford estate car to shame. Clutching a briefcase tightly was a small man in a suit, it didn't take a genius to guess that this was the estate agent. For some reason he looked slightly nervous and kept glancing above the door. It was only when I'd shut the car door that he seemed to notice me properly , then he visibly shook himself, put on his business face and warmly welcomed me. As I stood next to him at the entrance to the over-grown garden, I saw what had drawn his attention, fastened above the door was a strange piece of sculpture. It was a fox's face carved out of wood with glass eyes, mounted high at an angle the eyes caught the sunlight and seemed to stare right at you. From the darken state of the wood I guessed it had to be at least a hundred years old, probably more.

"The house is called the Fox's Mask, I've always wanted to see why myself, never had the chance before.", he said, "My late partner always handled this property before, now it's my turn. I warn you, this place needs a lot of work done to it."

If the garden was any indication I had the next few weeks at least taken with making the place livable, even by my broad standards. At least what I could see of the tiled roof seemed sound enough, and the walls showed no obvious cracks. Once many years ago the garden must have been someone's pride and joy but years of neglect had taken their toll. The roses were still there, swamped but meadow grass grown tall and lank but their scent wafted toward me on the slight breeze. Odd splashes of colour peeked between the grass stems, wild flowers reclaimed the seed beds from the foreign usurpers, but the occasional hardy marigold still stuck it out side by side with Sailor's Buttons. There was a path of sorts leading in from the gate to the front door, it must have been level at one time, but it was decidedly uneven now. Scuffing at the deep layer of moss revealed that the path had been made of red brick the same colour as the tiled roof. The house itself must have been white washed once in its existence but now it looked faded and grey in the patches that weren't concealed by roses and ivy. In its prime this house must have been a real picture, I wondered if I'd be the one to make it one again.

The door was locked with a large iron key, the estate agent smiled at me weakly when the door refused to open at first. "The hinges must have dropped," he said with a sorry smile. Together we managed to open the door which protested loudly at our intrusion. Inside the door we were greeted by the musty odour of a house that had been un-aired for too long. It smelled of old suitcases, books left in the rain, it smelled forgotten.

The electricity was still turned off, but enough light came in through the windows to give me a pretty accurate idea of what needed doing. My estimate of a few weeks lengthened into a few months as I took in the wall paper hanging in vast swathes from where you'd normally expect it to be. The ceiling of the main room appeared to be sound, as did most of the lower floor, but I noticed something strange about the kitchen wall. It appeared to be different from all the other walls. When I questioned him, Mr. Brown hurriedly read through the house description from the file in his briefcase. "Ah, yes, this is interesting. Apparently this rear wall is all that remains from the original sixteenth century building, an inn I believe. The building was destroyed by fire, all apart from this wall, and the house was built at a later date."

"Why has the house been empty for so long?" I asked him, curious as to why no one had snapped up this property ages ago. "Erm, yes. The last owners of this house, erm... they vanished. At least the husband did, the wife, she was committed. The police, they think she might have been responsible for his disappearance, walked out on her, I guess. No real mystery, just the legal matters have taken five years to complete. A divorce was filed and in the husband's absence the property is reverting to his wife. Her family want the best of care so they've put the house on the market, they are anxious for a quick sale."

I looked round the house for a while, sizing up what materials I'd need, making appropriate noises so I didn't sound too interested. From the kitchen window I could see a tall oak tree that marked the termination line of the property. Through gaps in the long grass I glimpsed the russet colour of a foxes coat and smiled quietly to myself. Yes, I knew then that I had to own this house. Back at the garden gate I shook hands with Mr. Brown, and told him I'd see him the next week to finalize agreements. He looked slightly surprised at my discussion and that I'd only dropped the asking price to £45,000, he confided to me that his clients would have been willing to go lower but I knew that I could afford it, and after all the poor woman probably needed it more than me. The fox mask above the door winked at me in the sunlight and I knew that I had found my home.

Part 2

The white fox leads the merry dance,
Tailed touched you'll follow her,
Her song, music to entrance.
Clothed in your own fur,
Oh so daintily you'll prance.

The week until I could finally legally take up residence in my new home seemed to drag. I longed to be able to go for walks in the countryside, to wake to the sound of bird song instead of traffic, to actually breathe in fresh air and not choke on the traffic fumes. Arrangements made, my few worldly goods I couldn't be parted with stacked in boxes, wedged inside my trusty, rusty, steed I set off to begin the life I always wanted.

After a little lubrication the key slid gently into the lock, fortunately I'd remembered to pack some oil for the hinges as well. After a few squeaks and groans the door finally got used to the idea it was intended to open as well as shut. Before attempting to move boxes inside, the path desperately needed attention. The last thing I needed was to fall on my arse whilst carrying my computer or some other vital piece of "civilised" life. Stacked beside the house was a pile of fallen branches obviously put there some time ago in the hope that they'd be chopped for winter fuel. One of these proved to be fairly sturdy or at least serviceable as a long handled scraper. A bit of effort soon put paid to the worst of the moss and made the footing slightly less treacherous.

One by one, stacking the boxes against the wall I ferried my stuff into my new humble abode. During the previous week an electrician had checked the wiring and his verdict was it was old yet still sound. Trusting in his judgement I turned the light on. On being greeted with a loud bang and a bit of flying glass I decided he was slightly optimistic. A replacement bulb however seemed to work just fine. Illuminated, I unpacked my kettle and had a welcome cup of tea.

Gazing out of the kitchen window, sipping slowly and wondering what I had done with the milk I watched movement under the oak. My patience was rewarded when I saw not one but five foxes romp in the distance, bouncing high over the long grass, crouching low and nearly vanishing. I decided they must have a den near by, and vowed that I'd visit it soon.

Looking about me I came to the conclusion the first thing to do was make one room inhabitable at least. When I'd view the upper floor with the estate agent there was too much in the way of dust and rot to make a bedroom feasible. The only answer was to concentrate on the kitchen and main room. Sagging wall paper was the first thing to go but as I tore it from the wall I noticed strange marks on the plaster exposed beneath. Carefully I uncovered all four walls, and stood there slowly rotating, taking in exactly what I'd found.

Someone had drawn in black paint on all the walls, or as I looked closer I realized that it wasn't paint but ink. Surrounding me was a meticulously rendered scene depicting foxes beneath the very oak tree I could see from the window. The drawings were so life like, full of detail, I could even see this house sketched in the background to one view. There was one strange detail, looking over all the other foxes, sitting on a slight rise to the left of the oak was a fox rendered pale in comparison to the others. Opposite, on the far wall was another fox, this one darker than the rest, with no white tip to it's tail.

There must be a story behind the artist and why someone had taken the trouble to paper over such a masterpiece. I resolved to contact the estate agent and find out at a later date. Fortunately the walls themselves seemed in good repair, although slightly grubby. Not knowing how durable the ink was I thought it best to live with a little grime just to enjoy the art. The remainder of the day was spent emptying all the rooms of their rotting furniture. All the mattresses and most of the beds themselves were filthy with neglect. Damp had laid its moist touch upon wardrobes and dressers alike. Maybe one or two pieces could be saved after they were diligently scrubbed but for now I thought the best idea was to totally empty the upstairs rooms. Moving a wardrobe on ones own down a staircase with twists and turns isn't the easiest thing to manage, but with a few scrapes shared equally between the furniture, the walls and myself I coped.

Unfortunately when it came to removing the chest of drawers from the largest bedroom that disaster struck. A floor board which I'd previously thought sound even though it creaked, gave way. The chest of drawers bucked and slid away from me as I threw myself backwards away from the stairs. Due to some precarious nature all of its own it actually managed to avoid the corner that had plagued me so much, and chose to end its useful life as a pile of fire wood, smashed against the front door. In the wreckage lay a small leather bound note book that must have been forgotten there since the previous owners vanished in their own cloud of mystery. It appeared to be a diary or journal of some kind. At least tonight I'd have something different to read.

The rest of the day until dusk was spent clearing away the wood, lighting a small fire and spreading my sleeping bag so my back was supported by the wall depicting the pale fox. Lying here, the fire flickering to my side, candle light dotted about the room, the drawings seemed to have a life of their own I began to read the book and as I read I must have dozed off.

A woman's voice spoke to me in my dreams of her husband, how he became obsessed with watching the foxes. He started spending nights away from their bed, coming home early in the morning tired and dirty. He'd never say anything to her, but occasionally he'd talk in his sleep as he slept his way through the morning. He'd talk of the silver hair, of the flashing green eyes, of how he loved this mystery which dragged him from his bed. She followed him

The voice ended in bird song and I woke to a robin tapping it's way over my luggage. I looked at the book lying there by my side, the last pages had been torn out. All there was, was the woman saying that she'd follow him to find out who was courting her husband. The mystery still remained, did the husband tired of his wife, run off with his blonde bomb shell after all? What was the real reason behind the foxes hold over him?

Part 3

The dance will lose you in it's flight,
Round and round you'll spin,
Never stopping 'til morning light,
And the dark fox joins in.
He'll release you from your plight.

Slowly I began to have an impact on the house, days spent shifting furniture out, repairing what could be saved, chopping and stacking what couldn't. At the end of the day I'd fall asleep, to tired to even dream, I'd sleep the night from dusk until dawn, until finally the house began to look as though some one cared about it again. My battle with the garden seemed to take forever, I'd hack and slash brambles and weeds only to realize that I was chopping up rose bushes. Finally I decided to let nature have it's way with most of the garden and just clear a patch around the immediate house. My efforts seemed to be appreciated by the neighboring fox family who obviously found catching their food easier in the denuded areas. From the sounds of scuffling round my door at night they were intending to enter and chase mice inside, as well as out, but I wasn't too keen on the idea. Foxes have a habit of marking their territory pungently, or at least the males do, from the smell wafting in he'd claimed my door as his, as well as most of the garden.

Curiosity began to grow, and most evenings would find me wrapped against the dew, sitting at the kitchen window opened wide just gazing at the family sporting under the trees. The fox cubs were well grown by now and I was no longer afraid of scaring them. Gradually I began a period of acclimatization, watching them sitting outside the window, and slowly over a week approaching just far enough to get a clear view. I'd never realized how beautiful foxes were, or how energetically they'd play with anything that caught their fancy. I watched a young one slowly creep up on a butterfly and pounce cat-like on it. Unfortunately though energetic he wasn't very accurate and the butterfly fluttered safely above his head. He looked under his paws then up with such a bemused expression that I just burst out laughing. Unfortunately the whole family heard me, and swiftly fled down their bolt hole at the base of the old oak tree.

Although I'd been at the house for nearly four weeks I'd not really met any of my neighbors, I'd even managed to avoid the road blocking tractor. A knock at my door one Sunday morning was quite unprecedented, fortunately I was up and dressed, out side I found the farmer himself who'd previously been partly concealed in the cab of the afore mentioned tractor. What was revealed in all it's glory was a semi-smart tweed wearing living caricature of a gentleman farmer right from his rosy cheeks to the battered but still serviceable Wellington boots. This was someone I knew I'd file away and introduce in one of my long planned but seldom written stories.

We stood looking at each other for about five minutes before I invited him in for the traditional way of breaking the ice in any English village, a cup of tea. Fortunately I'd thrown away the milk I'd mysteriously packed with my dirty washing and purchased some fresh the day before otherwise the tea ceremony would have been remarkable strained. After exchanging the usual pleasantries about the weather and the house improvements he finally got to the point, which was to inform me that the local fox hunt would be held in this area at the end of the month. Checking the calendar pinned to the wall I realized that this was probably in ten days time, it looked like my evening guests days were numbered.

After the stalwart farmer had clumped off towards his tractor parked further down the lane I began to wonder if there was anyway of saving the foxes from the hounds. Perhaps the best answer was to see if anyone knew any more about the hunt, and if it could be persuaded to leave my foxes alone. In rural places like this village, often the best place to find out details is at the local church. Country priests are often obsessed with local history, probably because in the fall of congregation numbers they are left with little else to do. On arrival at the church I was slightly disappointed to find it securely locked, even though I'm not the religious type I could remember when all churches were left open, for everyone to find spiritual comfort or just shelter from the rain. Stuck for something to do I began to wander around the grave yard until I stopped in front of a most peculiar tombstone. Carved on it was the spitting image of the foxes mask that hung above my door, below this was a skull, the writing how ever had faded over time.

"Quite a remarkable story, that one." said a voice from behind my left shoulder. I gasped and spun round face to face with a rather apologetic clergy man. " I didn't mean to cause such a stir," said he, " but it is such an interesting tale. He was torn to pieces by his own pack of hounds, they'd mistaken him for a fox so it seems. The story is that he'd killed a silver fox a few days before and that the fox was the innkeepers wife. Strange beliefs they had in those days, but so the story goes he was cursed, and haunted by her until he finally went mad. They locked him away in his house but he escaped somehow, so did the hounds. There wasn't much found, but they buried the remains here all the same. The locals burnt down the inn, I believe they thought that the innkeeper was some kind of witch."

As the priest talked I began to realize that there was only one house in this village that had been the inn. I questioned him and he confirmed my suspicions, my house was the one once owned by the fox-loving innkeeper, no wonder it was still popular with the foxes. Unfortunately according to the priest there was little I could do to protect the foxes short of standing guard over them myself. I was determined that there would be no deaths on my land, but I didn't want to harm the hounds either. A few phone calls later to some hunt saboteur friends I had made in University and a shopping trip to my local supermarket saw me armed and ready.

I started to dream that night of the foxes, at least I think it was a dream. I was watching them and the moon was full. They didn't seem to mind me watching, they jumped and played around me, chasing their tails, and each other around and around me. I watched them dance beneath the moon and longed to join them. Somehow I felt that there was someone, something behind me. I turned slowly, carefully and saw the most beautiful sight I'd ever seen. Sitting on a mound, just as she had been drawn on my wall by the unknown artist was the silver fox. I turned back, and in front of me the dark fox sat also watching the foxes play. I turned back to her, pleading with my eyes to be allowed to join the dance, to join their game. She smiled inside my mind, and twisted past me sinuously brushing me with her magnificent tail. My skin tingled like a million tiny electric shock, and I melted in her warmth. She left me panting, on all fours, as she strode past me towards her mate. All I wanted was her touch, but I knew that she was taken. The other foxes called to me and I joined their dance until the dark one stole my senses away. Each night I dreamed but each morning my feet were damp with dew and my bed hardly slept in.

On the day of the hunt, in the early hours of the morning when I knew the vixen and her cubs would be safely underground I blocked the entrance to the den with a large piece of plywood. Before taking this drastic measure I dropped several piece of chicken breast and pork fillet down the hole, and placed a bowl of water near the entrance wedged upright by roots. The last thing I wanted was for the vixen to desert her cubs or get more distressed than necessary. I knew that legally the hunt wasn't meant to kill nursing vixens but dogs don't read law books and even the most learned huntsman is likely to loose his priorities if suffering from bloodlust. The second stage of my plan was to surround the garden with pepper and other irritating substances, if the dogs couldn't smell the foxes they shouldn't be tempted to forage around the garden. My final line of defense was a stout bessom broom, the type Hollywood calls a witches broom. With long bristles and a stout handle it should be enough to dissuade a hound without actually doing any real damage. I knew that if I saw someone waving this at me I'd certainly go back the way I'd come.

My precautions paid off, the hunt had obviously been told about my foxy neighbors and had lead their hounds up towards the lane before sounding the off. The hounds picked up the scent at the bottom of the lane, then milled around confused as they neared my property. The night before I'd liberally sprayed the territory marks of the dog fox with vinegar, just to be sure that he hadn't lead the hounds too close to the den. After a few shouts and waved fists in my general direction the master lead the hounds off towards a nearby copse, just in case there were more foxes over there. I lost track of the hunt as it raced away, hounds bounding around the horses, obviously enjoying the game.

I thought I'd been successful until I over heard a conversation in the post office when I went to buy some stamps. The little snippets I heard confirmed my worst fears, they'd killed a fox and it was an unusual one at that. They'd gone on to say something about it being a pity that there wasn't enough to get stuffed and mounted but I'd lost interest after that. All I could think of was it was my silver lady who had been killed. I'd never share her warmth again, never dance with the foxes under the oak tree. That night, as I lay down I wondered if I'd dream again, if I'd ever sleep again.

The night came, and I walked out into the dew-covered garden answering her call. This night as the past ones she came to me, touched me, woke me inside with her warmth, but this time something was different. She didn't stray from my side, but looked into my eyes with a sad sweet smile. I looked across to where her mate should be, and saw emptiness. He'd been the victim, and as I looked down at my paws I realized why she had stayed. Instead of the familiar russet my paws were black, twitching my tail into view, it too was black including its very tip. Without a dark fox, I could never be released, as the dark fox I was her mate. Filled with a sense of sadness and joy I walked with her towards the dancing foxes, leaving an empty house and a mystery.

Part 4.

Foxes dance in the cold grey light,
Birds startled burst into flight.
Who can say why the foxes dance?
Why they spin, caper and prance?

I come here most nights to sleep, my mate follows me, trying to get me to turn my back on what was, to concentrate on what is, what must be. I know she is right but I still find myself drawn back here. The house is falling back into disrepair. There is no paper now to fall off the walls but dirt and dust make their way in through the half open door. A thick drift of faded rose petals carpets the short hall before the main room, where I sleep curled up on a sleeping bag, going musty with damp and mouse droppings. I sleep there despite the scent because it is the only place I can dream and remember who I was, what I was, before I met my love.

Startled awake, after dreams of walking in the meadow, cycling through country lanes, driving my beaten up wreck of a car to this house the first time I visited it, I stretch out and try to get up and wake screaming and yelping in terror. I expected to see hands and feet and see my own paws. I expected to see bare skin and find only black fur and the memories rush in. My mate peers round the door nervous in this house of the two-legged ones, her silver fur flashing in the dawn light. Reassured that it was only silly fancies that scared me, she gives me one of her long suffering looks which seems to blend in both love and understanding and she quietly steps away. I wonder if I am a man dreaming I am a fox or a fox dreaming of being a man. It makes me think of that book by James Herbert, fluke I think it was.

Outside I nuzzle my mate's ear, showing her there is nothing wrong, and we pounce and jump, twisting in the air before we land, enjoying the feeling of being alive on a summer morning. Although my mate won't enter the house where most of the mice are, she always manages to find a few of the less cautious ones who venture outside. I have grown to love the taste of mouse, but somehow killing those ones who have made their homes in my boxes of belongings seems a form of betrayal. Inside that house I was once human, to behave like a fox there would seem wrong, a canceling out of memories.

Time seems to pass differently, days aren't so important now, the nights last longer so the year must be drawing in. I had expected that someone would have noticed that I was no longer living in the house by now, but no body comes this far up the lane without good reason. I used to travel into the village for my paper and milk, so no delivery people would be expected to call by. Not being much of a letter writer, the postman never seemed to be a frequent visitor either. It was as if I had vanished of the face of the Earth unnoticed by anyone. I guess it was about three months before the postman finally made the journey up to my door on his wobbling bicycle, bouncing over the ruts made by the tractors. Seeing the door ajar, he pushed it open, then dropping the letter he cycled faster but no less undulating back down the lane. Curious, I wandered back to the open door and looked down at the letter lying there cushioned by petals. Brown envelope, at least it wasn't white. Reading seemed to be increasingly difficult as time went by, but I managed to piece the letters together. It was the Tax office, typical, you could travel to the ends of the Earth and they'd still find you. However I think they'd have some trouble extracting money from me in my present form. I wonder exactly what taxes a black fox would have to pay?

Laughing quietly to myself, the echoes of laughter in my head, but the sounds of a snuffling wheeze coming out of my mouth, I wandered back towards the oak tree to wait for further developments. It took about an hour before a police car drove up the lane, sirens wailing and blue lights flashing. I don't know who they were trying to impress, but all it did was make us foxes seek better cover. The lone policeman must have been concerned because he called for back-up. More police men arrived, and a white van. I guess this was something to do with forensics. I heard a shriek as one white-coated lady opened a box used by a family of mice, it sounded just like a cartoon caper as she dashed outside to be calmed by a uniform colleague, the mice were evicted and the search continued. They cordoned the area off, and began searching through the boxes, checking my car, walking about the surrounding fields. Fortunately no one headed towards the oak tree, or if they did they didn't stay too long searching. The cubs had grown and moved out of that den, but they still liked to visit it occasionally. I couldn't remember if the small family I cared for was staying there or not. Night came and they erected lights inside the house, bright glaring lights. The mice gave up and headed outside, those foolish enough to wander too far away from their usual haunts ended up as a tasty snack.

Things seemed to calm down after a while, removal men took away my boxes after the police had done their thing. It seemed that with no clues as to where I was, where I might have gone, and no obvious evidence of a violent end they just gave up looking. The estate agents came and locked up the door and sealed the windows. Sometime later, when the nights were long and cold, a "For Sale" notice was erected in the garden. Curious as to what the future held, and locked out of my once home, I made myself a small den beneath the rose bushes, where I could hide and watch what time would bring.

Part 5

Time passed, and I learned from my ever patient silver furred love all I needed to know to survive. At first I could only understand her more obvious gestures, the basic body language that all animals share, but I began to notice more nuances, slight differences of posture, and her scent. Thanks to her I learned how to communicate with the other foxes who shared this area, the family that denned beneath the old oak tree, the old grey muzzle who lived three fields away, and the young bachelor foxes that passed through. I learned to recognize their calls, and their marks upon the boundaries of my domain.

I think that my greatest accomplishment was learning how to hunt, how to fend for myself. I had to be taught like any young cub the basics of stalking, the leap with front paws rigid to stun the prey, and the quick killing bite. With any young animal the first victim of the mock hunt is the ever patient mother, unfortunately I was in a unique position not being born into the body I currently occupied. The mother of the cubs wouldn't let me practise on her, even though her cubs delighted in perfecting their skills on me as well as her. Fortunately my mate was very understanding and I swear she quite enjoyed our mock battles. There was often laughter in her eyes as I pounced on her twitching tail. My first mouse was a big event though I nearly lost my prize, I was showing off, carrying its limp body in my jaws when it suddenly returned to life and bit me on the nose. I yelped and in a reflex action bit it hard, severing it in two. My mind revolted at my action but my hunger said otherwise, the spurt of hot blood in my throat triggered my instincts and I gobbled my small victim up, even licking the surrounding grass clean of any spilled blood. I was gradually accepting that whatever I may have been before, I was now a fox, all be it an unusually coloured one, a black fox for the rest of my life.

The seasons passed, the days of the week no longer had any meaning to me, even months made little sense. Either the weather was warm or the weather was cold, there was no need for names for the seasons which meant little to me now. I learned about how the other animals were affected, of time measured by fruit and flower, of moult when the days grew longer and the nights shorter, and the thickening of the coat for the long dark nights. I guess I'd been a fox a season, from when the blackberries flower until the last of their fruit hangs dried and bitter on the bush, when I made a startling discovery. By this time I had grown quite proficient in communicating with the foxes, sharing surprisingly complex concepts, and tales of hunting, my own first kill being a favourite among the nearly full grown cubs. The discovery came about one evening as I pounced upon my dinner of a fat mouse down beneath the tangle of briars by the front wall of the still unoccupied house.

"Don't eat me.", said the mouse.

"What was that you said?" said I, totally confused by the mouse pinned beneath my fore paws.

"I said, "Don't eat me."

This budding conversation stopped suddenly when my silver coated love strolled over and ate the mouse. " But he was talking to me." I complained. " It's bad manners to talk to your food", she said as she strolled away as if it was and everyday occurrence . I rushed after her, begging her to explain but she couldn't understand why I was questioning her now. "The prey always talks to the hunter," she replied slowly as if teaching the basics of life to a slow cub," it is part of the thread of life, the prey moves, you respond, it is ready to die, you grant it a swift death. Sometimes the prey forgets it's place and pleads, othertimes it is strong and fights back, if it escapes then that too is part of life. Accept it, my love." " Why didn't the prey talk to me before?", I asked. " It has always talked to you," she whispered," but you did not know how to listen." I sat there under the oak tree, watching the moonbeams race each other through the dew washed leaves and thought of how much I had taken for granted before, and how much I was learning now. Little did I know that events were occurring in the outside world that would affect me and mine so greatly.

Time passed swiftly, the cold came, and with it the first snows. Like a cub I bounded over piles of snow just to catch a falling snowflake on my tongue. Into my territory came an old fox, wise and full of law and legend. Being no threat to any present and enjoyable company he was often welcomed to share the den beneath the old oak tree. From him I learned how the foxes knew where the snow came from, of how it was the cold tears of the great silver fox crying for her lost love to return. As the wandering grey muzzle told this tale I felt a shiver pass the length of my body, from tip of muzzle to tip of tail. My love curled close to me, and made me remember the joy we had shared, her touch against my body reminded me of our first mating and these thoughts swiftly banished my fears.

For some nights when ever the silver fox drew near to me I felt strange urgings, I wanted to hold her close, kiss her, run my fingers through her fur, caress her shapely body. I wanted her body and soul, I ached to be with her, but something held me back, the fact that I knew I was really a human. even though I could see that I had paws not hands, it was hard to accept that mating with her would be a natural act rather than some strange perversion. The only sin would be in my head, no law would be broken, no taboo wrecked, just my own concept of who or what I was. I began to act aggressive towards the young male cubs, driving them away from her whenever they came near. She paraded herself in front of me, and I was driven wild with desire but still I held back. I went back to hide beneath the bramble bush at the end of the garden and sat watching the bats darting after insects.

I felt a presence by my side, and I didn't need to turn my head to know it was her. I turned to her and tried to kiss her face but all I could manage was a lick to her muzzle. Laughing she pinned me down and proceeded to wash me like a young cub, I protested at first but soon the grooming calmed me, then awakened a fire within me. My head buzzing like a swarm of mayflies I mounted her, I felt myself swell within her and screamed out my passion. Her yelps wove themselves around mine as we rutted, two wild animals beneath the cold pale moon. I tried to remove myself from her back but only succeeded in causing us both to yelp with pain rather than passion. I had forgotten that foxes were members of the canine family, and like all males I was locked tight inside my mate. Carefully I managed to dismount but then realised that we were locked tail to tail unable to move. Remembering an unusual image once used by a strange friend of mine as his computer backdrop I whispered to my mate that we should try lying down on our sides slowly together. This was managed with a minimum of pain, and then came the tricky part. After getting my love to brace herself I manoeuvred round until I was lying within her embrace, and we lay there licking each others muzzles in a close approximation of the missionary position, finally nature took it's time and unlocked us.

Now many moons later wrapped in the warmth of her tail I slept and dreamed of when our cubs would be born and forgot my earlier feelings of premonition.

Part 6

As the weather grew colder strange multi-coloured stars appeared inside the human's dens, they even began to move some trees inside though I'm sure that some of the trees could not have been real. Giant snow flakes were etched on their clear barriers, mimicking the real snow outside. Only their young seemed to appreciate the real snow, it's biting cold and revealing in the sounds of their footsteps crunching through the top layer of ice after a slight thaw. It seemed strange to me how close cubs of our kind were to the cubs of men, yet how different we were when full grown. My mate smiled at me, when I told her of my thoughts, and she reminded me, that not too long ago I was a full grown man. I had grown so used to my new life that I had began to forget I was anything other than a black fox, that I had never been a cub like the rest of my adopted family. I curled close to her side in our den and hoped that nothing would ever change the happiness I had found.

The baying of hounds snatched me awake, they were still distant but I could hear the menace in their voices, mingled in came the harsh trumpeting of a horn and the pounding of many hooves. My love was not by my side when I woke, but she was not far away. She sat judging the hunt's distance from us, I could feel the waves of fear wash through her body and I knew they were heading in our direction. We ran together side by side, past a building that was once mine, keeping our distance from the old oak where a new generation of foxes waited to be born. Our trail wound through hedgerow and over streams, leading the hounds as far away as we could, we split up twining our scents through the copse, laying false trails where ever we could, and we prayed that we had done enough.

From the ridge we looked down over the hunt, our backtracking and guile seemed to have tangled the main hunt deep within the over grown copse. I could hear the huntsmen swearing as their horses tried to follow the hounds beneath the low over hanging branches. We thought it was safe to leave our vantage point and head away from the valley, but we had not reckoned on the straggler who spotted us and gave tongue. The ridge was bare, very little cover nearby and the huntsmen were furious, ready for the chase. We ran, heads down, tails out straight the ground rushing beneath our paws, hoping that we could reach safety. I remembered the grey muzzle telling us of a piece of land that no huntsman dared enter, it was our only chance. The hounds gave tongue again, closer, and closer, until I could feel their hot breath. I could see that the sanctuary was just ahead and I knew that the only chance my love had, was if I sacrificed myself to delay our killers. I whispered goodbye to the wind and turned to welcome my death.

To a human, hounds seem playful kindly things but now I was seeing them in a totally different perspective. Their jaws gaped, spittle and foam blew back from their maw, teeth large and savage gripped my muzzle and threw me into the air. Another dog took it's place, this time my back paws were crushed and wrenched from their sockets and I knew I could never run again. The pain was worth it if my love survived but I saw a silver streak dash between the hounds, darting, nipping at their sides and I knew that she was giving up her life to save me. I don't know where I found the strength from but I dragged myself toward the fence, the hounds were too busy torturing their new prey to bother with such poor sport as I. By the time the first huntsman arrived I had reached shelter and my love was nothing more than a few tatters of flesh hung together with reddened silver fur. I was losing blood, everything grew dark and I knew I must be dying. I welcomed death, at least I knew that my love and I would be together, where ever fate sent us. It became colder, my body ached, my hearing grew dim and I released my hold on consciousness.

I woke aching body bound in strange ways, the scent was wrong, cold harsh chemicals forcing themselves over every other scent, masking everything. There was a noise close by, I thought this noise should mean something to me but it seemed wrong yet familiar. My muzzle itched and I raised a paw to scratch it, and saw not a dark furred paw but a pale pink furless hand. The sound came again and I realised it was a voice, that the person was saying my name, asking if I remembered who I was, if I had any idea how I came to be found naked on Boxing Day, five miles from my home, seven months after my disappearance. I tried to answer but only strangled yelps came out, my face felt strange, wrapped in constrictions which I knew must be bandages. The nurse must have sensed I was concerned about my injuries and she spoke quietly to me, doing her best to calm me. How could I tell her that they should have let me die?

Months passed and I learned to walk again, I convinced the hospital staff I was well enough to return home, no buyer had been found for the house so it was still my home. My last ounce of cash went to paying off the mortgage, I had no need for anything any more, no great dreams of wealth or happiness. My boxes came back from storage, and I made a half-hearted attempt at getting my human life back but I knew that there was nothing worth pretending for. I limped from room to room, watching the plaster crumble from the walls, listening to the mice as they set up home within my computer. Lost within my despair I locked myself away, eating only when I remembered, forgetting to wash or change my clothes, alone forever with out my silver furred love. Physical scars may heal with time but others, much deeper, never heal.

Enough is Enough!

The foxes which infested the house and grounds of Major Counselor Yasumichi's old mansion were always making mischief, but since they never really did any harm Yasumichi let the matter pass. They got naughtier and naughtier as the years went by, though, until one day he angrily decided that enough was enough. Those foxes would have to go.

He announced a grand fox hunt to his household, for the next day. The servants were to bring bows and arrows, sticks, or whatever weapons they could devise, and flush out every last one. They would surround the house, and men would be posted not only on the garden wall but on the roof as well, and even in the space between the ceiling of the rooms and the roof. Every fox that showed itself would be killed.

Near dawn on the fateful day Yasumichi had a dream. A white-haired old man, looking rather like an aged menial, was kneeling under the tangerine tree in the garden, bowing respectfully to him.

"Who are you?" asked Yasumichi.

"Someone who has lived here in the mansion for many years, sir," the old man answered nervously. "My father lived here before me, sire, and by now I have many children and grandchildren. They get into a lot of mischief, I'm afraid, and I'm always after them to stop, but they never listen. And now, sir, you're understandably fed up with us. I gather that you're going to kill us all. But I just want you to know, sir, how sorry I am that this is our last night of life. Won't you pardon us, one more time? If we ever make trouble again, then of course you must act as you think best. But the young ones, sir -- I'm sure they'll understand when I explain to them why you're so upset. We'll do everything we can to protect you from now on, if only you'll forgive us, and we'll be sure to let you know when anything good is going to happen!"

The old man bowed again and Yasumichi awoke. When the sky had lightened, he got up and looked outside. Under the tangerine tree sat a hairless old fox which, and the sight of him, slunk under the house.

The perplexed Yasumichi gave up his fox hunt. There was no more troublesome mischief, and every happy event around the house was announced by a fox's sharp bark.

Fox Arson

A retainer who served the governor of Kai was heading home one sundown from the governor's mansion when he saw a fox, gave chase and shot at it with the kind of noisemaker arrow used for scaring off dogs. He hit it in the back leg.

The fox yelped in pain, rolled over, and dove limping into the brush. As the retainer went to retrieve his arrow the fox reappeared in front of him, and he was about to shoot at it again when it vanished.

A quarter of a mile from home he saw the fox running ahead of him carrying a flaming brand in its mouth. What could it be up to? He spurred his horse on. On reaching the house, the fox changed into a human being and set the house on fire. The retainer was ready to shoot as soon as he got within range, but the human changed right back into a fox and got away. The house burned down.

Beings like that exact swift vengeance. It's better to leave them alone.

The Fox In The Brothel

In a time of our honorable forefathers, there dwelt in a mean mountain village of Settsu Province a poor faggot-cutter who followed the way of Lord Buddha, taking no animal life fore the solace of his belly and praying as a devout man should for the eternal welfare of his spirit.

One day in a ravine he came upon a vixen, caught by the paw in a trapper's snare, which with many a moan and with tears running down her muzzle para-para seemed to beseech him for succor, so that in pity he would have released her. But being minded to rob no honest man, he trudged a long ri down the mountain to his hut, and taking from a hiding place in the thatch a piece of silver, the fruit of weeks of toil, he returned to the ravine and set the vixen free, and wrapped the silver piece in a bit of cotton cloth, he tied it to the snare and went his way. The vixen, when he released her, fled not, but as thought understanding his heart, fawned upon his feet and licked his hands and followed him limping tobo-tobo to the mouth of the ravine, where she gave three sharp barks and sprang into the thicket.

Now on the third evening thereafter, as the man squatted in the mouth of his hut resting from the sweaty labor of the day, on a sudden there appeared before him a damsel, clad in a brown-silk robe, who called to him, and he, seeing her rare beauty and thinking her some great lady strayed from her cavalcade, prostrated himself before her and begged her pleasure. Said she: "Abase not thyself. I am the fox which thy humanity set free the other night from the snare, and whose life thou didst purchase with thy silver piece. I have take this form in order to requite thy favor as I may, and I will serve thee with fealty so long as thou dost live." At which he cried: "Esteemed mistress of magic! Not for my unparalleled worthlessness is thy high condescension! I am eight times rewarded by this thy visit. I am but a beggarly forester and thou a repository of all beauty. I pray thee, make not sport of my low condition." She said she: "Thou art a poor man. Suffer me at least to set thee on the way to wealth." Asked he: "How may that be done?" She replied: "Tomorrow morning don thy best robe and thy stoutest sandals and come to the mouth of the ravine where thou didst rescue me. There thou shalt see me in my true form. Follow whither I lead and good fortune shall be thine. This I promise on the word of a fox." At that he prostrated himself before the damsel in gratitude, and when he lifted himself she had vanished.

Next morning, when he came to the ravine, he found awaiting him the vixen, who barked thrice and turning, trotted before him, leading him by paths he knew not across the mountain. So they proceeded, she disappearing in the thicket whenever a chance traveler came in view, and he satisfying his hunger with fruits and berries and slaking his thirst from the rivulets, and at night sleeping under the stars. Thus the reaches of the sun wound up the days till on fourth noontide they descended into a vale where lay a city. At sundown they came to a grove hard by the city's outer barrier where was a shrine to the fox deity, Inari. Before this the vixen barked thrice, and bounded through its door. And presently the woodsman beheld the damsel issuing therefrom, robed now in rich garments and beautiful as a lover's dream leaping from the golden heart of a plum blossom.

Said she: "Take me now - who am thy daughter - to the richest brothel in yonder city, and sell me to its master for a goodly price." He answered: "Barter thee, to the red-hell hands of a conscienceless virgin-buyer? Never!" Then, with a laugh like the silver potari of a fountain, she said: "Nay, but thy soul shall be blameless. So soon as thou hast closed the bargain and departed, I shall take on my fox shape in the garden and get me gone, and thus the reward shall be thine and evil intent shall receive its just deserts."

So, as she bad him, he entered the city with her and inquiring the way to the quarter of houses of public women, came to its most splendid rendezvous, which was patronized only by brazen spendthrifts and purse-proud princes, where all night the painted drums went don-a-don and the samisen were never silent, and whose satiny corridors lisped with the shu-shu of the velvet foot-palms of scarlet-lipped courtesans. So great was the damsel's beauty that a crowd trooped after them, and the master of the house, when he saw her, felt his back teeth itch with pleasure. The faggot-cutter told him his tale, as he had been prompted, averring that he was a man whose life had fallen on gloomy ways so that he who had been a man of substance was now constrained to sell his only daughter to bondage. At which the proprietor, his mouth watering at her loveliness and bethinking him of his wealthy clientele, thrust ink-brush into his fist and planked before him a bill-of-agreement providing for her three years' service for a sum of thirty gold ryo paid that hour into his hand.

The woodsman would joyfully have signed, but the damsel put forth her hand and stopped him saying: "Nay, my august father! I joyfully obey thy will in this as in all else, yet I pray thee bring not reproach upon our unsullied house by esteeming me of so little value." And, to the master of the place she said: "Methinks thou saidst sixty ryo." He answered: "Were I to give a rin more than forty, I were robbing my children." Said she: "The perfume I used in our brighter days cost me ten each month. Sixty!" Cried he: "A thousand curses upon my beggarly poverty, which constraineth me. Have mercy and take fifty!" At this she rose, saying: "Honorable parent, there is a house in a nearby street frequented, I hear, by a certain prince who may deem me not unattractive. Let us go thither, for this place seemeth of lesser standing and reputation than we had heard." But the master ran and barred the door and, although groaning like an ox before the knacker, flung down the sixty gold ryo, and the woodsman set his name to the bill-of-agreement and farewelled her and went home rejoicing with the money.

Then the master, glad at the capture of such a peerless pearl of maidenhood, gave her into the care of his tire-woman to be robed in brocades and jewels, and set her on a balcony, where her beauty shone so dazzling that the halted palanquins made the street impassable, and the proprietor of the establishment across the way all but slit his throat in sheer envy. Moreover, the son of the daimyo of the province, hearing of the newcomer marvel, sent to the place a gift of gold, requesting her presence at a feast he was to give there that same evening.

Now this feast was held in an upper room overhanging the river, and among the damsels who attended the noble guests, the fox-woman was as the moon to a horde of broken paper lanterns, so that the princely host could not unhook his eyes from her and each and every of his guests gave black looks to whoever touched her sleeve. As the sake cup took its round, she turned her softest smile now to this one and now to that, beckoning to each to folly till his blood bubbled butsu-butsu with passion and all were balanced on the thin knife-edge of a quarrel.

Suddenly, then, the lights in the apartment flickered out and there was confusion, in the midst of which the damsel cried out in a loud voice: "O my Prince! One of thy guests hath fumbled me! Make a light quickly and thou shalt know this false friend, for he is the one whose hat-tassel I have torn off." But cried the Prince (for he was true-hearted and of generous mind): "Nay, do each one of you, my comrades, tear off his hat-tassel and put it on his sleeve. For we have all drunk overmuch, and ignorance is sometimes better than knowledge." Then after a moment he clapped his hands, and lights were brought, lo, there was no hat left with a tassel upon it. At this, one of the young blades, laughing at the success of the artifice, began to sing the ancient song which saith:

The hat thou lovedst,
                   Reed-wove, tricked out with damask,
 Ah me, hath blown away,
                   Into the Kamo River-
 Blown amidst the current.
                   While I wandered seeking it,
 While I wandered searching it,
                   Day-dawn cam, day-dawn came!
 Ah, the sawa-sawa
                   Of that rustling night of autumn,
 There by the water,
                   The spread-out, rustling water!

But the damsel, crying that with the affront unavenged she would not choose longer to live, ran into the next chamber and, stripping of her clothes, cast them from the window into the swift current, while she herself, taking on her fox form, leaped down and hid in a burrow under the riverbank. So the party of the Prince rushed in and, finding the window wide and her vanished and seeing the splendid robe borne away by the rushing water, deeming that she had indeed drowned herself, made outcry, and the master of the house plucked out his eyebrows, and his folk and the gallants put forth in many a boat, searching for her fair body all that night, but naught did they discover save only her loincloth.

Now on the fourth evening after that, as the faggot-cutter sat in his doorway, the damsel appeared before him, robed in a kimono of pine-and-bamboo pattern, with an obi of jeweled dragonflies tangled in a purple mist. Asked she: "Have I kept my fox-word?" He answered. "Aye, eight times over. This morning I purchased a plot of rich rice land, and tomorrow the builders, with what remaineth, begin to erect my mansion." Said she then: "Thou art no faggot-cutter henceforth, but a man of substance. Look upon me. Wouldst thou not have me to wife?" But he, seeing how her carriage was as graceful as the swaying of a willow branch, her flawless skin the texture of a magnolia petal, her eyebrows like sable rainbows, and her hair glossy as a sun-tinted crow's wing, and knowing himself for an untutored hind, knelt in abasement before her and said: "Nay, wise one! Doth the smutty raven mate with the snow-white heron?" Then she said, smiling: "Do my bidding once again. Tomorrow return to the city and to the brothel where thou didst leave me, and offer, as the bargain provided, to buy me back. Since the master of the house cannot produce me, he must need pay over to thee damage money, and see that thou accept not less than two hundred gold ryo." So saying, she became a fox and vanished in the bushes.

So next morning he took his purse and crammed it with copper pieces and betook himself across the mountain, and on the third day he arrived at the city. There he hastened to the brothel and demanded its master, to whom he said, jingling the purse beneath his nose: "Good fortune is mine. For, returning to my village three days since to pay my obligations with thy sixty ryo, I found that my elder brother had died suddenly in the next province, leaving to me (since he was without issue) all his wide estates. So I am come to redeem my beloved daughter and to return thee thy gold plus the legal interest." At that the master of the house felt his liver shrink and sought to put him off with all kinds of excuses, but the woodsman insisted the more, so that the other at length had no choice but to tell him that the girl had drowned herself. When he heard this the woodsman's lamentations filled all the place, and he beat his head upon the mats hata-to, crying out that naught but ill treatment had driven her to such a course, and swearing to denounce the proprietor to the magistrates for a bloody murderer, till from dread to see his establishment sunk in evil repute, the man ran to his strongbox and sought to offer the breaved one golden solace. Thus, with two hundred more ryo in gold (for mindful of the maiden's rede, he would take no less) the woodsman returned to his village, with an armed guard of ten men for an escort, where he rented a stout godown for the money's safekeeping.

The night of his return, as he sat on his doorstep, thanking all the deities for his good luck, the fox-maiden again appeared before him, this time clad only in the soft moon-whiteness of her adorable body, so that he turned away his face from the sight of it. Asked she: "Have I kept my fox-word?" And he answered, stammering: "Eight hundred times! Today I am the richest man in these parts." Said she: "Look upon me. Wouldst thou not possess me as thy concubine?" Then, peeping despite himself betwixt his fingers, he beheld the clear and lovely luster of her satiny skin, her breasts like twin snow-hillocks, her bending waist, and the sweet hidden curves of her thighs, and all his senses clamored like bells, so that he covered his eyes with his sleeve. And said he: "O generous bestower! Forgive the unspeakable meanness of this degraded nonentity. My descendants to the tenth generation shall burn richest incense before the golden shrine which I shall presently erect to thee. But I am a man and thou art a fox, with whom I may not knowingly consort without deadly sin!"

Then suddenly he saw a radiance of the five colors shine rainbow-like around her, and she cried out in a voice of exceeding great joy, saying: "Blessing and benison upon thee, O incorruptible one! As a fox I have dwelt upon the earth for five hundred years, and never before have I found among humankind one whose merit had the power to set me free. Know that by the virtue of thy purity I may now quit this animal road for that of humankind." Then she vanished, and he built a shrine to her in the mouth of the mountain ravine, and it is told that his children's grandchildren worship before it to this day.

On Fox Spirits

An essay by Galen Jang (the original webpage is no longer available except through the archive.org Wayback Machine)

All that I have learned about fox spirits are from magazine articles as well as stories from my grandparents, so this is by no way an authoritative account. Anyone who knows more is welcome to contribute.

Fox spirits occupies the same mythological niche as the faerie in Western mythology. They are beautiful beyond endurance, elusive, powerful, mischievous and vindictive. In Chinese mythology, the human form is the pinnacle of creation. All animals, and sometimes plants seek to achieve human form on their way to immortality. Of these animals, foxes seem to succeed the most. They do this by absorbing the essence of the moon and the sun. Some folklores maintain that fox achieves this by conducting rites of worship during full moons. After a few centuries, they will acquire the ability to change into human form.

Most fox spirits in stories are female. They usually appear as extremely beautiful woman. The male fox spirits, rare as they are, appear either as erudite and handsome men or wise old men. You can tell a fox spirit from a human from their tails. Some of them have not quite mastered the human form. While the body looks human enough, the tail remains. They solve the problem by tucking their tail inside their pants. The ones who did master the human shape can be enticed to show their true form by getting them drunk. So if your friend remain human after a good night of drinking, you can believe that he's human. :-) If they are killed, they revert to their original form. It's the women who were dangerous. They usually seek to copulate with human males. They use the sexual act itself to absorb their partner's energy in order to add to their own powers. Such relationships, if prolonged, result in sickness and eventually death for the man. So, if you see a beautiful woman who wants to have sex with you for no reason, watch out!

Most fox spirits are not as brazen as that. The fox spirits ordinary people have experienced are much more elusive. They live in the attics or some deserted room in a large house. You never see them. You know they're there because of the noises they make. The difference between fox spirits noises and ghost noises is, of course, fox spirits make the noises day and night! Sometimes the fox spirits throw things, such as rocks and tiles, into the yard or against the door. You know people aren't responsible for the disturbance because you can't see anybody around the house. When a family is haunted by a fox spirit, they set up a shrine in the abandoned attic. Incense sticks are burned regularly. Sometimes food is also offered. Things usually quiet down after that. Most of the time, the fox spirits leave their landlords alone if the landlords leave them alone. Sometimes, the fox spirits will even take care of any thief or burglar who are foolish to rob such a house.

Pu Sung-Lin said that the belief of fox spirits were limited mainly to northern China. In southern China, the main belief is in a much more malevolent sort of spirit called Wu Tong. I will translate a Wu Tong story later. The spirit in the story "Story of Tseng Shi" may be a Wu Tong. However, the belief of Wu Tong seems to have died away in the south in the last two centuries. My grandparents grew up in Fujian which is definitely southern China, yet the only spirit they know about is the fox spirit. The malevolent Wu Tong lost the war for the belief of human beings. Will the fox spirits now lose the belief of the human beings as well?

King of the Nine Mountains

Translated from Liao Tsai Chi Yi, found on Galen Jang's now-defunct page (available at archive.org's Wayback Machine).

There was a man surnamed Li living in T'sao Chou. He possessed the greatest wealth in town. Behind his mansion, he had an empty lot which was going to waste. One day, an old man came to him and offered to rent the property with one hundred pieces of gold. Li refused on the ground that the lot had no house on it. The old man said "Please accept the money and don't worry about the rest." Li didn't understand, but he accepted the money just to see what would happen. After several days, the old man came to him and said "I already moved in, but we're so busy setting up our new household that we neglected good manners. Today, my children shall prepare a banquet for you, the landlord. We hope you will grace us with your presence." Li went to the lot and, to his surprise, discovered a brand new mansion there. As he entered, he saw that the inside was lavishly decorated and furnished. Jugs of wine lined the walkways and the scents of good tea wafted from the kitchen. As the banquet began, he was toasted by the old man. The wine tasted of the finest vintage. He saw and heard many men, women and children, maybe more than a hundred in total, living in the mansion. He then knew they could not be ordinary human beings, but fox spirits. As he returned from the banquet, he returned with death in his heart. He bought sulfur and other flammable material from the city market and, with the help of his servants, secretly placed them all around the new mansion. When he was finished, he ignited it. The fire blazed and sent black smoke upward toward the heavens like a black and evil mushroom. The smell of burning flesh and the screams of the dying filled the senses. When the fire died, he and his servants went into the wreckage. There they found the charred bodies of hundreds of dead foxes. While he was inspecting the carnage, the old man entered the mansion. The old man's face was contorted with grief and anger. He said "I have never wronged you. I gave you hundreds pieces of gold in good faith. That is not a niggardy amount of money. How can you bury your conscience and slaughter us! I must avenge the cruel deaths of my family." Then the old man left. Li thought the old man would just try some supernatural tricks on his family, such as throwing bricks at his house, but years passed and nothing happened.

Then tens of thousands of bandits gathered in a nearby mountain. The local officials could not gather enough forces to suppress them. Li worried about the safety of his large family as well as his rather large fortune. Then an astrologer who called himself the Old Man of Southern Mountain arrived at the town. The astrologer became famous because he seemed to know everything and everything he predicted came true. Li invited the astrologer to his home and asked his future fortunes. The astrologer stood up from his seat in respect and said "This is the true emperor!" Li was both afraid and astonished. Then he accused the astrologer of lying. The astrologer said "Since ancient times, all the dynasties are founded by emperors who came from common birth. Who among them are born emperor?" Li began to believe him. The astrologer offered to become Li's military advisor and asked him to prepare armor and weapons. Li worried that no one will follow him. The astrologer said "I will go into the mountains and speak for the true emperor. I shall tell them of your grand destiny and the bandits will surely follow you." Li became glad and sent the astrologer along. Li then began to prepare as the astrologer instructed. The astrologer returned a few days later and said "Your great prestige, plus my tongue have convinced all the bandits to follow you." Li looked outside and saw thousands ready to follow him, so he made the astrologer into his chief advisor. He then made a great banner, proclaiming his own imperial status. He then fortified his positions in the mountains and the sound of his name shook the neighboring prefectures. When the prefecture sent an army against, Li's army, the astrologer led the defense and easily destroyed the small government army. The prefecture magistrate became sorely afraid and asked for help from the principality magistrate. The principality magistrate dispatched a larger and better equipped army. That army went into an ambush prepared by the astrologer and was again destroyed. The prestige of Li became great and his army swelled. He then styled himself the King of Nine Mountains. The astrologer told Li that the army needed horses. He told Li of a caravan transporting imperial horses from the capital. Li ambushed the caravan and took all the horses. His prestige swelled still more and so did his pride. Li now gave the astrologer the title of Lord Protector. As for himself, he believed that he would soon wear the dragon robe. The provincial governor was very alarmed by his robbery of the imperial horses. He received reinforcement from the imperial government. He divided his army into six columns and attacked Tsao Chou. The banner of the imperial army filled the mountain valleys around the King's fortress. The King of Nine Mountains became afraid and asked the astrologer for more advice, but his subordinates could not find the astrologer. The great king looked down on his enemies and said "I never realized how powerful the imperial government is." Soon, his fortress was broken and he was captured. Because he committed the crime of attempted usurpation as well as banditry, Li and his entire family were executed. It was only then he realized that the astrologer was the old fox he betrayed.

Commentary from Historian of the Strange

When a man and his family goes into banditry, does he deserve death? Even if he deserves death, does his family deserve death too? Yet the scheme of the fox is indeed cunning. When there is no seed, even the best irrigation could not bring forth growth. Look at the way Li exterminated the family of fox spirits. From his cruelty we know that he already has the heart of a bandit, so the old fox merely helps that heart to grow in order to achieve vengeance. Suppose someone comes up to you and says "You're the true emperor." I'm sure you will run away in fear. When a person hears that he may commit an act which will result in the death of his entire family and yet he listens to it gladly, then how can he blame anyone when his family dies? Yet, some people still make this kind of mistake. The first time they hear something that will harm them in the long run, they became angry, then doubtful, then gullible, until they lose their honor, their fortune and their lives.

Why the Fox has a Huge Mouth

One day many years ago, at a time when his mouth was still small and dainty, as in fact it used to be, the fox was out walking and happened to notice a huaychao singing on a hilltop. Fascinated by the bird's flute-like bill, he said politely, "What a lovely flute, friend Huaychao, and how well you play it! Could you let me try it? I'll give it back in a moment, I promise."

The bird refused. But the fox was so insistent that at last the huaychao lent him its bill, advising him to sew up his lips except for a tiny opening so that the 'flute' would fit just right.

Then the fox began to play. He played on and on without stopping. After a while the huaychao asked for its bill back, but still the fox kept on. The bird reminded him, "You promised. Besides, I only use it from time to time; you're playing it constantly." But the fox paid no attention and kept right on.

Awakened by the sound of the flute, skinks came out of their burrows and climbed up the hill in a bustling throng. When they saw the fox playing, they began to dance.

At the sight of the dancing skinks, the fox burst out laughing. As he laughed, his lips became unstitched. His mouth tore open and kept on tearing until he was grinning from ear to ear. Before the fox could regain his composure, the huaychao had picked up his bill and flown away. To this day the fox has a huge mouth - as punishment for breaking his promise.

The Dancing Fox

Foxes love to dance. They dance in the dark with young women who slip quietly from their beds and come running out into the night.

But the fox who dances must wear a disguise. He must hide his long, bushy tail. He must wrap it around him and stuff it inside his trousers, though when he does he is really too warm. He perspires. Yet still he is able to dance.

Now, one of these foxes was young and amorous, and he never missed the nightly dancing. Toward morning, however, as the cock began to crow, he would always hurry away.

This fine fox was a subtle flatterer, a favorite with all the young women. Each of them wanted to dance with him. And as it happened, one or another would sometimes feel slighted and grow resentful.

One of them once, in a fit of pique, drew her companions aside and pointed out that the fox always left before dawn. Who was he? And why did he run away?

The young woman wondered. Then they made up their minds to catch him and hold him until it was daylight.

The next night, when it was fully dark, they made their circle and began to dance. Soon the fox appeared, as usual disguised as a young man in shirt and trousers. Suspecting nothing, he danced and sang. The girls made him heady with their caresses, and he became more spirited and more flattering than ever.

As soon as the cock crowed, he started to leave. "No, no," they all cried, "don't go! Not yet! The cock crows six times. You can stay till the fifth."

The dancing continued, and there were more caresses. The fox forgot that he had to leave, and at last the white light of dawn appeared. Frightened, he tried to flee. But the young women held him. They entangled him in their arms. Then suddenly, with a growl, he bit their hands, leaped over their heads, and ran.

As he leaped, his trousers ripped open and out flew his tail. The girls all shrieked with laughter. They called after him and mocked him as he ran out of sight, his long, bushy tail waving between his legs. Then he disappeared and was seen no more. He never came back again.

Kajortoq, the Red Fox

One Summer day, Kajortoq, the red fox, left her brood of cubs in the den and went out in search of something to eat. On a vast plain she met Aklaq, the brown bear, and said: "Cousin, it has been a long time since I last saw you! What is the matter with you?"

"I am hungry," replied Aklaq.

"Me too. I really am," said Kajortoq. "Let's hunt together. You go this way and I shall go that way."

"There is nothing this way but ptarmigan," complained Aklaq, "and they are afraid of me. Every time I get close to them they fly away."

"It is easy for me to catch them," remarked the fox. "But," she added, "I am afraid of men."

"I am not afraid of men," said Aklaq, "but I am unable to catch ptarmigan."

"In that case," declared Kajortoq, "wait for me here; I shall go and get you some ptarmigan. I shall not be long."

Aklaq waited and Kajortoq soon returned with a few ptarmigan. The brown bear was full of joy and thanked his companion again and again. He was very hungry and ate the ptarmigan at once. When he had finished he said, "You were very kind to bring me some ptarmigan. In return I shall now bring you a man. Wait for me here."

Kajortoq waited but the bear took a long time to return, and when he did arrive he had no man. Instead he staggered along; he was losing blood and behind him the ground was red. A man had shot an arrow at him and had wounded him in the side. The shaft of the arrow had broken and the point remained in the flesh.

Kajortoq sympathized: "Cousin, I feel sorry for you. Let me take care of you." Kajortoq built a stone fireplace, lit a fire, and heated some stones.

"Stretch out here," she told the bear. "Stretch your legs and even if I hurt you, do not move. If you stir, you will die because I shall not be able to remove the arrow."

The bear stretched on the ground. The fox took a red hot stone from the fire and applied it to the wound pushing harder and harder on it. Aklaq moaned and howled with pain, but soon the howls stopped; he was dead.

Kajortoq stood on her hind legs and danced around the bear, laughing loudly: "I can brag to myself. No one could do this but I. I have enough to eat for a long time." The fox did not return to her lair but remained at this place for the duration of the summer, feeding herself on the meat of the bear.

When winter came she had run out of provisions. The bear had all been eaten; there was nothing left but the bones. She placed them in a pile and buried them under some boulders.

A while later she saw Amaroq, the wolf, coming toward her and went to meet him. "How are you, cousin?"

"Not too well," answered Amaroq, "I am very hungry."

"Have confidence in me," said Kajortoq. "I shall show you what you have to do to get some food. Do you see that river in front of us?" She pointed to a nearby river covered with a thin coating of ice. Here and there water could be seen through holes in the ice.

"Go over there," suggested Kajortoq. "Try to catch some trout. I am going to make you a fish hook. All you have to do is sit near the hole, tie the hook to your tail and let it sink to the bottom. Remain seated and do not move until the sun sets. At that time you will pull in your hook. There will be a trout caught on it. Believe me, that is how I caught mine."

The wolf sat beside the hole without moving. Meanwhile, the red fox set out along the shore saying that she was going to look for something to eat. Instead she hid behind a small hill to watch the wolf, but being careful that he not see her.

Amaroq stayed where he was for the entire day, confidently awaiting the results of his fishing. By the time the sun had reached the west he realized he had caught nothing. He growled in anger, "Kajortoq lied to me. I am going to run after her and eat her!"

He tried to get up but his tail was stuck to the ice. He pulled on it again and again until all of a sudden it came free; his tail had broken. Frothing with rage and bleeding profusely, the wolf searched the plain for traces of Kajortoq. The fox, however, had slipped away to hide in her hole.

The wolf soon discovered her den and cried, "Come out of your hole so that I can eat you!"

"What are you saying?" answered Kajortoq, sticking her head out of her den to look. As she did so she bent her head to one side and kept one of her eyes closed. "I have never seen you before. What do you want?"

"You deceived me today and I have lost my tail. Now I am going to eat you!"

"I know nothing about that," replied Kajortoq emerging from her hole. "Did you ask that red fox over there? It must be him. I heard someone pass my door a little while ago."

Impatiently, the wolf left Kajortoq to run after the other red fox. Kajortoq saw him go and kept watching until the wolf fell from his wound. By the next morning, having lost all of his blood, Amaroq was dead. Kajortoq stood up on her hind legs and started dancing in circles around him. "I can boast to myself. No one could do this but I."

She lived on the wolf all of that winter. When she had eaten all his flesh, she made a pile of the bones and went elsewhere in search of food.

One day she saw coming toward her a brown female bear who looked larger and more terrifying than any bear Kajortoq had ever seen.

The bear addressed the fox angrily. "Did you know my son? He left last spring to hunt but he did not come back. I have found his bones near this hill."

I know nothing about it," answered Kajortoq. "I did not see him. I shall follow you and you can show me where his bones are."

They left together. The fox recognized the place where she had killed Aklaq. Seeing that the female bear was crying Kajortoq pretended to be full of sorrow.

"Tears won't help you," she told the mother bear. "I believe I know who killed your son. Wait here awhile for me."

Kajortoq climbed to the top of a hill. From this vantage point she looked in all directions and saw another brown bear. She returned in haste to the female bear and said, "The one who killed your son is over there. Go and attack him. He is big and strong but I shall help you."

While the bears fought Kajortoq jumped around pretending to help. In fact, she only spattered blood on her hair. At length the female bear killed the other bear. She turned to the fox and said gratefully, "You helped me, thank you. Take all this meat. I am tired and wounded and do not want any of it." The bear started homeward, but died of her wounds before she was out of sight.

Kajortoq once again danced for joy and was happy. The two bears would provide plenty of meat for a long time to come.

The Fox and the Little Prince

From Antoine de Saint-Exupéry's The Little Prince

Courtesy a reader submission (thanks, Shoku Shitsu!)

Le Petite Prince, there was a very important story that the little prince told the aviator. The Little Prince was a child from another very small planet, and when he was bored, sad, or tired of his red rose bossing him around...he would hop on comets and visit other planets. Each planet had a differnt person on it that confused him: greedy, selfish, angry, skinflints or non-imaginative grown ups. The main thread that runs in the entire story and why the Little Prince continues to love and explore is taught to him by NOT a human or a plant, but a red fox. The Little Prince was in a French countryside, and wandered through a feild. He hadn't seen anyone for miles, and the last person he talked to was a grown up that told him to go away, since he was so busy. So the Little Prince is all alone in this meadow, in the middle of noplace, lonely, bored, and sad. All of a sudden, a small tuft of gold and red fur peaks up behind the grass mounds, and the Little Prince asks the air...."Who's there?"

A very reluctant fox peaks his head up better for the Prince to see him. Of course, the The Little Prince never saw a fox, and was curious. "What are you? You're Pretty to look at." The Fox is puzzled, and asks the boy: "You don't know what I am? You're not sent by the farmer to trick me?" The Little Prince looks confused now, and shakes his head. The fox continues: "I'm a Fox. Who are you?" The Fox maintains his distance....not going close to the Little Prince at all. The Prince tells the fox who he is, and where he is from; a small planet very very far away. The fox looks at him as if he just told him an ordinary fact. The Fox asks: "are there any farmers where you live?" the Prince says no. The Fox asks: "are there any guns?" The Prince says no, "Just me, my little plants, my small volcanoes, and my Red Rose under glass." The fox smiles, and says: "That sounds perfect. Are there any chickens?" The Prince says no. The fox says: "Well, no place is perfect then." The Little Prince get restless, and asks if he can pet the fox. The fox tells him no. "I can't be petted or played with, and you can never be more than an acquaintance." Sad, but not discouraged, the Little Prince asks the fox why, because he's lonely, and hasn't had anyone to talk with or play with him in ages. The Fox shakes his head, and says: "I'm not tame. I can't trust anyone, and all I care about right now is hunting chickens, so I don't have time to be tamed." The Little Prince asks what "tame" means. The Fox smiles, and explains:" It takes a very long time. It can't be done in minutes. You'd have to invest a lot of your free time, and sacrifice your own wishes to succed. You need to show you're trustworthy and special. " The Little Prince doesn't understand. He asks, " What do you mean special? What do you mean time, and trustworthy?" The Fox continues:

" It means, you have to make a promise. And keep it everyday. It's a sacrifice, but I suppose hunting chickens will bore me soon, and you have free time to spare, so...I'll let you tame me. You must come here, to this meadow everyday at the same time. Sit at the edge of that field at that same time, in the same spot. I will stay here, in my spot everyday, at the same time. Soon, I will come closer. But you will stay in your spot, and will not move. One day, I'll be right in front of you. Then, perhaps the next day after that, I will talk with you. And everyday after that we will talk. Then, I will let you pet me. Then...one day...I will play with you."

The Little Prince shakes his head. "Why would it take so long? I'm lonely now."

The Fox answers, "You won't understand now. But if you keep your promise, and show up here everyday, and sit there at the same time everyday, I will one day have something to look forward to, as will you."

The Little Prince reluctantly agrees, having nothing else to do, and being curious just the same.

The next day, he comes to the field and sits in a spot. The Fox shows up a little later, sitting far at the other end of the meadow, by the trees hidden from the Little Prince's gaze. This continues for a week, then 2, finally after about a month or so, the Little Prince and the Fox are playing, and good friends. They talk about everything and nothing...they run around and play tag and other games...The Little Prince tells the Fox about his Red Rose on his tiny planet; he reveals how she is cruel to him, snobby, and selfish. She only opens her petals for him, and despite how rude she is sometimes, he still has to take care of her, and he still is overjoyed when he is by her. He then tells of his anger when he realized she lied to him. She told him she was the only rose of her kind, that no other flower was as beautiful as her. But he saw a whole garden filled with red roses JUST like her! He was hurt, and knows how sad she'll be to know she's not special at all. The Fox listens to all of this, and everyday, when their visit is over, he leaves to his den. weeks pass...

The next time they meet, The Fox tells the Little Prince he can no longer come to the field and see him anymore.

The Little Prince is frantic, afraid he said something to hurt the fox's feelings.

The Fox shakes his head. "There is no use to cry...or beg me to stay. You've tamed me, and now I have to return to the wild again. I won't ever be the same again, because out of all the humans, you have treated me the kindest. I promised you I would tell you why we had to take so long to tame me...Men have forgotten that 'what is essential to life, cannot be observed by the eye.' Only what we feel in our hearts is what lasts, what's real. By taming me, you made this time special to me, on what would ordinarily be just another day, or you--just another human. You are now special to me, the way your Rose is special to you. No one can understand this, because over all the humans in the world, you are the only one I befriended, the only one I will remember. Now, everyday at the same time I will think of you. And everyday at the same time, you will think about me. Never let anyone tell you your rose is ordinary, for only she has tamed you, and only you are special to her, thus, she is unique to your heart."

The Little Prince cried and cried, not wanting to part with his new friend. He asked, "What is the meaning of making friends that you tame if you lose them?"

The Fox replied one last time, "It will always matter to me. Remember, 'what is essential in life cannot be observed by the eye.'" And then, the fox smiled, then ran off into the forest again, this time, not to return....

And the Little Prince left the field sadly...and for a few days, he returned, looking to see if the Fox would be there again by chance. Finally, he moves on to the next place...and comes to the same garden of roses he found that day... He stands defiantly at them all:

"All of you are useless, ugly, and ordinary! My rose is the most beautiful and unique flower in the universe, and she is special to me, and I to her...!

Reynard the Fox and Isengrim the Wolf

(submitted by Jamie Kakacek)

Reynard the Fox wanted a drink. It was hot and he had been running all day. It was night when he came across a well; there was a big moon in the sky. The Fox could see a bucket at the top of the well. But there was no water in the bucket.

Reynard looked into the well and could see the water at the bottom. The Fox jumped into the bucket and down he went to the bottom of the well. And as the bucket went down into the well, the other bucket came up to the top of the well. The Fox drank all the water he wanted. Then he found that he could not get out of the well. The other bucket had gone to the top of the well.

"If someone would only get into the bucket at the top of the well," said Reynard to himself, "that bucket would come down to the bottom of the well and the bucket that I am in would go to the top."

It was while Reynard was talking to himself that Isengrim the Wolf looked over the edge of the well.

"I thought I heard someone talking down there," said Isengrim.

"Hello, my good friend," called Reynard.

"What are you doing down in the well?" asked Isengrim.

"I am having a great feast," called Reynard. "Can't you see the big cheese I am eating? It is so big that I cannot eat all of it."

Isengrim the Wolf looked into the well. He saw the reflection of the big yellow moon and he thought it was a big cheese.

"Get into the bucket and come down and have a feast with me," called Reynard. Reynard had played many tricks on Isengrim and the wolf did not trust him. He looked down into the well again. There he saw what he thought was a big yellow cheese. And he began to want some of that cheese very much.

"On your way home," called Reynard, "stop at my house and send my wife and children to me I would like them to have some of this cheese."

"I would like to have some of that cheese, too," said Isengrim. And the wolf got into the bucket.

Down went Isengrim to the bottom of the well. And as he went down to the bottom, the bucket with Reynard in it came to the top.

"Have a good feast on the cheese!" called Reynard.

When the bucket reached the top of the well the fox jumped out and ran home. Isengrim, at the bottom of the well, howled and howled. Some farmers came and threw stones down into the well. When morning came, Isengrim the Wolf was dead.

The Salt Peddler and the White Fox

(This story was originally posted on Dr. Jason N. Joh's page of Korean legends and folk tales. Since that page is now only available from the Wayback Machine, we are reprinting it here).

(NOTES): People who are judged to be merely cunning, sly and clever are often kept at a distance, sometimes hated, and even feared. Whatever the original reasons may have been, the fox is a symbol for such a disgusting person. The longer they live, the more cunning and slyer they would become. The longer the fox lives, so is it believed, the more disgusting it becomes by acquiring evil supernatural power. In this story of a salt peddler and a fox, a simple, ordinary poor peddler fights with courage the evil spirit, symbolized by the old fox, and wins. The death of the fox may be the death of human meanness, a base, ignoble quality of man, which is good only for making others hurt and miserable.

Long, long ago, there was a salt peddler who was very poor. One day, as he had been doing everyday, he left his house early in the morning with a sackful of salt on his back. He travelled from one village to another, peddling salt to the villagers. After his last visit for the day to a remote village, he headed for home. He was virtually dragging his feet due to exhaustion from the day's work. He was still far away from his home when dusk settled in. It became completely dark in the middle of a rugged mountain with the dense growth of brushes and trees. Overwhelmed by fatigue and darkness, he could proceed any longer; so, he looked around to find some shelter for the night.

After a while, a huge rock caught his eye. He managed to reach the rock, whose top could be seen against the night sky. He put down his empty A-frame back carrier. He then noticed a cave-like hollow spot at a corner of the underside of the rock. The cave was large enough for him to crawl into and stretch himself; so, he settled in for the night. His eyelids became heavier and heavier. He was about to fall asleep, when he heard a strange sound. He became wide awake. So frightened was he that his hair stood on end. "What could it be?" With both jaws pressed against each other and holding his breath, he peered into the dark. He could not see anything unusual. He stuck out his head slightly. He could hear the sound more distinctly. It was a faint voice of a woman.

Since it was unmistakably a human voice, he felt a little relieved. "But, what is she doing at this time of the night and in this rugged mountain?" Curious, he crawled out of the cave to look around. However, he could not see a woman or anything else unusual. So, he came back to his shelter and lay down, hoping to sleep.

The salt peddler tried to forget everything and was ready to sleep, when he heard something, again. It sounded even more strange coming from somewhere above. He crawled quietly out of the cave, again, and looked up at the top of the rock. And he almost screamed! He saw a white fox, with her long tail drooping, sitting on top of the rock and grinding a human skull against the surface of the rock. The peddler was all but petrified at the frightful sight. But with all the courage he could muster, he crawled ever quietly toward a big tree nearby and watched every move of the fox behind it. The fox apparently did not notice him. She kept grinding the skull, occasionally turning it and apparently making it into some kind of container. After a while, the fox was trying the skull container on her head and, when it did not fit well, she muttered with an irritated voice. She kept grinding and then tried it on, again. She repeated these several times, until finally she was satisfied. "Now, it fits! It's perfect." She wore the skull container and made several tumbling feats like an accomplished acrobat.

The whole scene gave the peddler icy chills in his spine. Though scared and shaking, he was staring at the fox so that he would not miss anything she did. After several more tumbling feats, the white fox suddenly disappeared and, instead, there stood a stooped old woman. Tidying up her hair, she talked to herself: "Oh, dear me, I'm a little late; they must be waiting for me anxiously." Then, she jumped down and started walking toward the village the peddler visited last that day.

The peddler soon became more curious than frightened, and decided to follow the old woman. Often he had to run to catch up with her. When the granny finally reached the village, she went straight into the house of the wealthiest in the village. "Here I am...finally!" When she announced her arrival, there was a commotion in the house, people dashing out to meet and greet her and asking why she was so late. The old woman seemed to know why she was expected there. She went straight into the room reserved for the housewife and her guests.

The peddler then approached the gate and asked for an overnight stay. Well known to the villagers, he was led to a male guest room across the women's living quarters. It was close to mid-night. The peddler lay down on the floor, trying to listen to every sound coming from the women's room across a small court yard. He could hear only indistinguishable noises. After a while, everything quieted down. Then, suddenly, there was a loud gong sound, followed by someone chanting incantations with intermittent interruptions by low, steady gong sounds. The peddler could swear that the chanting voice he heard was that of the old fox-woman. He sensed that something terribly wrong was going on in that room. "Without knowing the real identity of that old woman, they are letting her chant spells. The old fox must be cursing on someone, pretending to be exorcising some evil spirit," he thought. He felt he must do something about it. Just then, a farmhand of the house came into the room to sleep. "What's going on there? Is anybody ill?" asked the peddler. The farmhand casually said that because the old master of the household suddenly fell seriously ill, the family invited the granny, an old acquaintance who had the reputation of being the magic chanter in the vicinity, for her service. He hardly said that before he started snoring. Things were as the peddler had suspected. Except for occasional gong sounds, it was rather quiet. Perhaps, family members all fell asleep.

The salt peddler came out of the guest room and tiptoed across the court yard toward the women's quarters. The old woman's chanting was almost imperceptively low and mumbled. He stepped quietly up onto the wooden floor and sat in front of the paper-pasted sliding door of the room. Wetting his forefinger and gently pushed it through the paper door. Then he peeped into the room through the hole. All but the old woman were sleeping. The old fox-woman was still chanting spells with her eyes closed and with a gong stick in her right hand. The peddler listened carefully to her chantings in order to discern what was being said. "...this is mine, my feast... if this old stock ... Dies.... Die...die...hurry up and die! After you are dead, your soul, too, will be mine. Die! Die! Hurry up and go to hell! The sooner..., the better...." This old witch must be smiling, too, though the peddler could not see it.

The peddler felt indignation. It was upsetting to see the family members sleep without knowing what was really going on. He could not merely sit there doing nothing about it. He slipped down from the floor and went to a storage room. He came out with a wooden pestle and dashed into the family room. Everyone got up from sleep and looked at this mid-night intruder with a pestle in his hand. Without a single word, the peddler struck the old chanter hard on the head with the pestle. Everyone in the room jumped up and stepped aside, astonished and dumbfounded. And the old fox-woman fell flat with the barking sounds of a fox, and turned back into a white fox with a cracked human skull on its head. While all this was happening everyone in the whole house gathered in the room, looking at one another and at the blood-covered fox. The peddler then told them about what had happened since that evening in the mountain. "How horrible! It was close! The master would have died...."

Next morning, the old master recovered as suddenly as he had fallen ill. The salt peddler was richly rewarded by the master, and from that day on he lived happily without having to peddle salt any longer.

The Fox Girl

From Korean Folktales by James Riordan

There was once a wealthy man who had a son but no daughter. So badly did he want a daughter that he spent much of his time praying at temples and consulting fortunetellers. Finally, his prayers were answered and a girl was born: she was the apple of her fathers' eye and could do no wrong.

When she was fifteen years old, the girl went mushrooming on the mountainside and was so engaged in her task that she did not notice the gathering shadows of dusk. Meanwhile, at home, her parents were becoming anxious, and they formed a search-party to comb the hills. However, just as they reached the top of a ridge they spotted the girl through the gloom in the valley below. Her father was much relieved.

'Where have you been, my dear?' asked her father 'We were so worried for you; a wild beast could have killed you.'

'Forgive me, Father,' she replied. 'I was so tired I fell asleep beneath a bush; when I awoke the sun was already going down.'

The incident was soon forgotten. But a few days later a strange thing happened: one of the master's cows died in the night. Next night another died, then another. The bodies showed no sign of wound or illness. The master was so concerned he ordered the cowherd to keep watch all through the night to catch the culprit.

That night, the man hid behind some hay in the corner of the cowshed and waited patiently. At midnight he was astonished to see the master's daughter creep into the shed and approach a cow. Anxiously he watched her oil her hands and arms with sesame oil; then to his horror, she slipped her arm into the cow's belly and pulled out its liver. And she ate it.

The poor cow rolled over and died.

In the morning the cowherd went to the master and recounted all he had seen.

The father, who loved his daughter with all his heart, shouted angrily at the man, 'How dare you invent such wicked stories against my daughter. You will pay for these lies.'

And the man was dismissed.

Next night a second cowherd was set to guard the cows. He too hid behind some hay and witnessed the daughter's odd conduct: she oiled her hands and arms, thrust one arm into the cow's belly, pulled out the liver and ate it. And the cow rolled over and died.

Next morning he went to the master and told him the story.

The father still would not believe such tales of his beloved daughter. So the man was dismissed.

A third herdsman spent the night in the cowshed and reported all he had seen. He too was sacked.

Thus it continued: each night a cow died. Then, when no cows were left, the pigs began to die, and then the horses all of the same mysterious ailment. In the end, all the cowherds, swineherds, and stable boys were dismissed and no one from the village would work for the rich man. All that was left of the once-mighty herd of cattle was a solitary old horse.

Next night, the master sent his only son to solve the mystery. The young man concealed himself behind some hay and kept watch. In the middle of the night he heard footsteps and the barn door opened. It was his sister stealthily entering. In his relief, he was about to cry out to her. Yet something in her look stopped him: her eyes were sly and narrow, her thin lips cruelly curled, her face stony and stern.

He stared in disbelief as she greased her arms and thrust them into the horse's belly, pulling out its liver. With blood dripping from her lips, she then chewed and swallowed the steaming meat.

He dared not breath until she had returned to the house.

At dawn he called his father into the barn and showed him the dead horse.

'Father,' he said grimly, 'you will not like what you hear; but I must tell you the truth. It is my sister. She it is who came in the night and ate the horse's liver.'

His father stared at him with hurt and anger in his eyes. He was silent for a moment, then shouted at his son, 'you must be madly jealous of you sister to make up such tales. No doubt you fell asleep and had a nightmare. Get out of my sight, I don't want you in my house.'

Not knowing where to go, the disconsolate son wandered off into the hills. After several months he came upon an old monk struggling across a mountain stream. Having helped the monk to safety, he was invited to stay the night at a nearby temple. And there he told the story of this sister. The old man nodded sadly.

'Yes, I understand,' he said. 'That night, when your sister was in the hills, she must have been eaten by a fox who took her form, the very likeness of your sister. So it was really the fox who killed the animals.'

'Then I must return at once,' the lad exclaimed, 'and warn my parents.'

'I fear it is too late,' said the old monk. 'Morning is wiser than evening. Set out tomorrow.'

Next morning, the young man was given three small bottles: red, green, and blue.

'Take this horse,' said the monk, 'and use the bottles as I have instructed.'

With that the boy thanked the monk and rode off down the mountain track. It was several days before he arrived home. Once there, he could hardly believe his eyes: the house and yard were overgrown with weeds. And there, in the middle of the yard, was his sister, sitting in the sun, catching lice and worms, and eating them.

'My dear brother,' she cried on seeing him. 'Where have you been all these months? How I've missed you.'

She went to hug and kiss him, but he drew back in alarm.

'Where are Father and Mother?' he asked.

'They lie in their graves,' she replied, giving no explanation for their deaths.

Realizing that she had eaten them too, the young man knew he had to escape before she killed him as well but how? Suddenly he had an idea.

‘Dear Sister, I have come a long way and I’m very hungry,’ he said.
‘Could you prepare a meal?’

He thought he would escape while she was cooking. But the fox girl was cunning.

‘Assuredly, dear Brother. But I shall tie a rope to your leg and the other end to my waist.’

She left him in the yard while she went to prepare some food; every now and then she tugged on the rope to make sure he had not run away. After some time he managed to undo the knot, tie the rope to a gatepost and ride swiftly away on his horse. It was some time before the fox girl realized she had been tricked.

She rushed after him with the speed of a fox and it was not long before she was gaining on him. He glanced back and, to his horror, saw her rapidly catching him up, reaching out her hand to grasp his horse’s tail. Recalling the old monk’s instructions, he swiftly took the little red bottle from his pocket and threw it behind him.

The bottle instantly burst into a ball of red fire, blocking the fox girl’s path. Although the flames singed her hair and clothes, she raced round the fire and was soon overtaking her brother again. This time he threw down the green bottle and straightaway a dense green bush of brambles sprang up, barring her way. Although she was scratched and bleeding from the thorns, she fought her way through and began to catch up with the fleeing brother.

Just as she was about to grab the horse’s tail, however, he took out the blue bottle and desperately cast it behind him. This time it formed a mighty blue lake that soon engulfed the fox girl who splashed and thrashed in the water before sinking below the waves.

As the brother watched from the shore, he saw the dead body of the fox float to the surface of the lake. At last he had killed the fox who had taken his sister’s form.

The Fox and the Fishes

In the morning of the world, says an old Jewish Legend, the vast seas were empty except for the huge bulk of the monster Leviathan, lurking at the bottom of the ocean. He was a king without subjects until the Angel of Death was sent to populate the seas by drowning one member of every species of land creature and transforming it into a fish.

The fox determined that he would outsmart the Angel of Death and cheat the Leviathan. As he sat on a bank beside the sea, contemplating his watery future and wondering how he could escape it, his reflection gave him his cue just as the shadow of Death fell upon him.

Instantly, the fox burst into tears and loud lamentations.

"Why do you cry, Fox?" asked the Angel, impatient to get on with his work.

"I am mourning my friend," said the fox, sobbing. "As your shadow passed over him, he threw himself into the sea in his haste to join the Leviathan's legions. There he is now." The fox waved sadly at the creature in the water who waved sadly back at him.

"Good, good," said the Angel, and flew away.

All went well for the fox until a year later when his deception was discovered by Leviathan himself. During the counting of the fish, he realized that there was no fox fish among them. Displeased, Leviathan lashed his dragon-tail through the waters, demanding to know why. The timid parrot fish told how the fox had tricked the Angel of Death.

"Bring me the fox alive," the Leviathan commanded the catfish. "I wish to eat his heart and thereby gain his cleverness. Tell him that I am dying and wish to make him King of the Fish in my place."

The catfish soon found the fox, and told him Leviathan's story. Proud of the honor, the fox hurried onto the catfish's back.

On the long journey, the fox had time to reflect and wondered if he had not been tricked. "O Catfish, now that I can't escape, tell me what the real purpose of this trip is," said the fox. The catfish revealed the Leviathan's plan with great satisfaction. Fox was not so clever after all, he thought.

"My heart!" cried the fox. "He wants to eat my heart! Now you are in trouble for I haven't got it with me. Why didn't you tell me while there was still time? Didn't you know that we foxes never carry our precious hearts with us? It is back home, safe in my burrow."

The fox suggested they return to shore to retrieve the heart. When they reached land, however, the fox jumped off and scampered away, jeering at the catfish's stupidity. The catfish hid beneath the bank, where he remained, afraid to face the wrath of the Leviathan. The fox has never returned to the shore, which is why to this day there are no fox fish in the sea.

Giovannuzza the Fox

There was once a poor man who had an only son, and the boy was as simple-minded and ignorant as they come. When his father was about to die, he said to the youth, whose name was Joseph, "Son I am dying, and I have nothing to leave you but this cottage and the pear tree beside it."

The father died, and Joseph lived on in the cottage alone, selling the pears from the tree to provide for himself. But once the season for pears was over, it looked as though he would starve to death, since he was incapable of earning his bread any other way. Strangely enough, the season for pears ended, but not the pears. When they'd all been picked, others came out in their place, even in the middle of winter; it was a charmed pear tree that bore fruit all year long, and so the youth was able to go on providing for himself.

On morning Joseph went out a usual to pick the ripe pears and discovered they'd already been picked by somebody else. "How will I manage now?" he wondered. "If people steal my pears, I'm done for. Tonight I shall stay up and keep watch." When it grew dark he stationed himself under the pear tree with his shotgun, but soon fell asleep; he woke up to find that all the ripe pears had been picked. The next night he resumed his watch, but fell asleep right in the middle of it, and the pears were again stolen. The third night, in addition to the shotgun, he carried along a shepherd's pipe and proceeded to play it under the pear tree. Then he stopped playing, and Giovannuzza the fox, who was stealing the pears, thinking Joseph had fallen asleep, came running out and climbed the tree.

Joseph aimed his gun at her, and the fox spoke. "Don't shoot, Joseph. If you give me a basket of pears, I will see to it that you prosper."

"But, Giovannuzza, if I let you have a basketful, what will I then eat myself?"

"Don't worry, just do as I say, and you will prosper for sure."

So the youth gave the fox a basket of his finest pears, which she then carried to the king.

"Sacred Crown," she said, "my master sends you this basket of pears and begs your gracious acceptance of them."

"Pears at this time of year?" exclaimed the king. "It will be the first time I've ever eaten any in this season! Who is your master?"

"Count Peartree," replied Giovannuzza.

"But how does he manage to have pears in this season?" asked the king.

"Oh, he has everything," replied the fox. "He's the richest man in existence."

"Richer than I am?" asked the king.

"Yes, even richer than you, Sacred Crown."

The king was thoughtful. "What could I give him in return?" he asked.

"Don't bother, Sacred Crown," said Giovannuzza. "Don't give it a thought; he's so rich that whatever present you made him would look paltry."

"Well, in that case," said the king, very embarrassed, "tell Count Peartree I thank him for his wonderful pears."

When he saw the fox back, Joseph exclaimed, "But Giovannuzza, you've brought me nothing in return for the pears, and here I am starving to death!"

"Put your mind at rest," replied the fox. "Leave everything to me. Again I tell you that you will prosper!"

A few days later, Giovannuzza said, "You must let me have another basket of pears."

"But, sister, what will I eat if you carry off all my pears?"

"Put your mind at rest and leave everything to me."

She took the basket to the king and said, "Sacred Crown, since you graciously accepted the first basket of pears, my master, Count Peartree, takes the liberty of offering you a second basket."

"I can't believe it!" exclaimed the king. "Pears freshly picked at this time of year!"

"That's nothing," replied the fox. "My master takes no account of the pears, he has so much else far more precious."

"But how can I repay his kindness?"

"Concerning that," said Giovannuzza, "he instructed me to convey his request to you for one thing in particular."

"Which is? If Count Peartree is so rich, I can't imagine what I could do that would be fitting."

"Your daughter's hand in marriage," said the fox.

The king opened his eyes wide. "But even that is too great an honor for me, since he is so much richer than I am."

"Sacred Crown, if it doesn't hurt him, why should it worry you? Count Peartree truly wants you daughter, and it makes no difference to him whether the dowry is large or not so large, since no matter how big it is, beside all his wealth it will only be a drop in the bucket."

"Very well, in that case, please ask him to come and dine here."

So Giovannuzza the fox went back to Joseph and said, "I told the king that you are Count Peartree and that you wish to marry his daughter."

"Sister, look at what you've done! When the king sees me, he will have me beheaded!"

"Leave everything to me, and don't worry," replied the fox. She went to a tailor and said, "My master, Count Peartree, wants the finest outfit you have in stock. I will pay you in cash, another time."

The tailor gave her clothing fit for a great lord, and the fox then visited a horse dealer. "Will you sell me, for Count Peartree, the finest horse in the lot? We won't look at prices, payment will be made on the morrow."

Dressed as a great lord and seated in the saddle of a magnificent horse, Joseph rode to the palace, with the fox running ahead of him. "Giovannuzza," he cried, "when the king speaks to me, what shall I reply? I'm too scared to say a word in front of important people."

"Let me do the talking and don't worry about a thing. All you need to say is, 'Good day' and 'Sacred Crown,' and I'll fill in the rest."

They arrived at the palace, where the king hastened up to Count Peartree, greeting him with full honors. "Sacred Crown," said Joseph.

The king escorted him to the table, where his beautiful daughter was already seated. "Good day," said Count Peartree.

They sat down and began talking, but Count Peartree didn't open his mouth. "Sister Giovannuzza," whispered the king to the fox, "has the cat got your master's tongue?"

"Oh, you know, Sacred Crown, when a man has so much land and so much wealth to think about, he worries all the time."

So, throughout the visit, the king was careful not to disturb Count Peartree's thoughts.

The next morning, Giovannuzza said to Joseph, "Give me one more basket of pears to take to the king."

"Do as you wish, sister," replied the youth, "but it will be my downfall, you will see."

"Put your mind at rest!" exclaimed the fox. "I assure you that you will prosper."

He therefore picked the pears, which the fox carried to the king, saying, "My master, Count Peartree, sends you this basket of pears, and would like an answer to his request."

"Tell the count that the wedding can take place whenever he likes," replied the king. Overjoyed, the fox returned to Joseph with the answer.

"But, sister Giovannuzza, where will I take this bride to live? I can hardly bring her here to this hovel!"

"Leave that up to me. What are you worried about? Haven't I done all right so far?"

Thus a grand wedding was performed, and Count Peartree took the king's beautiful daughter to be his wife.

A few days later Giovannuzza the fox announced: "My master intends to carry the bride to his palace."

"Fine," said the king. "I will go along with them, so I can finally see all of Count Peartree's possessions."

Everyone mounted horses, and the king was accompanied by a large body of knights. As they rode toward the plain, Giovannuzza said, "I shall run ahead and order preparations made for your arrival." As she raced onward, she met a flock of thousands upon thousands of sheep, and asked the shepherds, "Whose sheep are these?"

"Papa Ogre's," they told her.

"Keep your voice down," whispered the fox. "Do you see that long cavalcade approaching? That's the king who's declared war on Papa Ogre. Tell him the sheep are Papa Ogre's, and the knights will slay you."

"What are we to say, then?"

"I don't know! Try, 'They belong to Count Peartree!'"

When the king came up to the flock, he asked, "Who owns this superb flock of sheep?"

"Count Peartree!" cried the shepherds.

"My heavens, the man really must be rich!" exclaimed the king, overjoyed.

A bit further on, the fox met a herd of thousands upon thousands of pigs. "Whose pigs are these?" she asked the swineherds.

"Papa Ogre's."

"Shhhhhhhh, see all those soldiers coming down the road on horseback? Tell them they are Papa Ogre's and they'll kill you. You must say they are Count Peartree's"

When the king approached and asked the swineherds whose pigs those were, they told him, "Count Peartree's," and the king was quite glad to have a son-in-law so rich.

Next the king's party met a vast herd of horses. "Whose horses are these?" asked the king. "Count Peartree's." Then they saw a drove of cattle. "Whose cattle?" "Count Peartree's." And the king felt ever happier over the fine match his daughter had made.

Finally Giovannuzza reached the palace where Papa Ogre lived all alone with his wife, Mamma Ogress. Rushing inside, she exclaimed, "Oh, you poor things, if you only knew what a horrible destiny is in store for you!"

"What has happened?" asked Papa Ogre, scared to death.

"See that cloud of dust approaching? It's a regiment of cavalry dispatched by the king to kill you!"

"Sister fox, sister fox, help us!" whimpered the couple.

"Know what I advise?" said Giovannuzza. "Go hide in the stove. I'll give the signal when they've all gone."

Papa Ogre and Mamma Ogress obeyed. They crawled into the stove and, once inside, pleaded with Giovannuzza. "Giovannuzza dear, close up the mouth of the stove with tree branches, so they won't see us." That was just what the fox had in mind, and she completely stopped up the opening with branches.

Then she went and stood on the doorstep, and when the king arrived, she curtsied and said, "Sacred Crown, please deign to dismount; this is the palace of Count Peartree."

The king and the newlyweds dismounted, climbed the grand staircase, and beheld such wealth and magnificence as to leave the king speechless and pensive. "Not even my palace," he said to himself, "is half so beautiful." And Joseph, poor man, stood gaping beside him.

"Why," asked the king, "are there no servants around?"

In a flash, the fox answered, "They were all dismissed, since my master wanted to make no arrangements whatever before first knowing the wishes of his beautiful new wife. Now she can command what best suits her."

When they had scrutinized everything, the king returned to his own palace, while Count Peartree remained behind with the king's daughter in Papa Ogre's palace.

Meanwhile Papa Ogre and Mamma Ogress were still closed up in the stove. At night the fox went up to the stove and whispered, "Papa Ogre, Mamma Ogress, are you still there?"

"Yes," they answered in a weak voice.

"And there you will remain," replied the fox. She lit the branches, made a big fire, and Papa Ogre and Mamma Ogress burned up in the stove.

"Now you are rich and happy," said Giovannuzza to Count Peartree and his wife, "and must promise me one thing: when I die, you must lay me out in a beautiful coffin and bury me with full honors."

"Oh, sister Giovannuzza," said the king's daughter, who had grown quite fond of the fox, "why do you talk about death?"

A little later, Giovannuzza decided to put the couple to the test. She played dead. When the king's daughter saw her stretched out stiff, she exclaimed, "Oh, Giovanuzza is dead! Our poor dear friend! We must have a very beautiful coffin built at once for her."

"A coffin for an animal?" said Count Peartree. "We'll just pitch her out the window!" And he grabbed her by the tail.

At that, the fox jumped up and cried, "Penniless man! Faithless, ungrateful wretch! Have you forgotten everything? Forgotten that your prosperity is due to me? You'd still be living on charity, if it hadn't been for me! You stingy thing! Ungrateful, faithless wretch!"

"Fox," begged Count Peartree all flustered, "forgive me, dear friend, please forgive me. I meant no harm, the words just slipped out, I spoke without thinking..."

"This is the last you'll see of me"—and she made for the door.

"Forgive me, Giovanuzza, please, remain with us..." But the fox ran off down the road, disappeared around the bend, and was never seen again

The Skinned Goat

There once lived a father and his son, and they had a goat. The boy had to drive her to the pasture every day. But this goat was an old hag. In the evening the father used to ask her, if she had enough to eat and drink. But she always answered, "How can I have had enough to eat and to drink, if I have not even seen one stalk of grass and one drop of water?" Then the son always got a sound beating.

One day the father decided to find out for himself. He saw that after having eaten off three meadows and drunk up three ponds, she still pretended to be hungry. Now the old man decided to slaughter the goat.

He had already stuck and halfway skinned her, when he noticed his knife was getting blunt. He went into the house to sharpen it. No sooner had he gone than the goat got up and ran into the woods, where she hid in a foxhole.

When the fox came home and wanted to get into his hole, he was terribly frightened, for out of his hole there came a voice saying; "Halfway skinned and halfway killed, I am a piece of mutton. Come on in and I'll eat you up!"

The fox was afraid and went right away to his brother-in-law, the bear, and told him about his grief. The bear went with him to the spot, got into the hole, but turned around immediately, when he heard the horrible words.

"I can't do anything in this matter," he said and ran away.

In his distress the fox went to the panther, then to the tiger, and finally to the lion. But none of them could help him, and they all took to their heels.

At last the fox met the bumblebee, to whom he poured out his complaints. The bumblebee said, "I will help you."

"Bigger ones have tried in vain to help me, and you think you can do it?" replied the fox. But he obediently led the bumblebee to the hole. It flew buzzing inside, sat down on one of the skinned parts, and started stinging vigorously. The goat soon felt the pain and ran bleating out of the hole, where she fell again into the hands of her master, who had been looking for her, and so she was killed completely.

The Fox and the Hare in Winter

The Hare is able to support himself even in the coldest winter. He is satisfied with the buds he finds in hedges and shrubs.

One cold winter, the hare met the fox. Surprised, the fox asked the hare, "How fine and well fed you look! What are you living on these days? I am so hungry and I cannot find anything to eat."

The hare replied, "I have been living on eggs of late."

"On eggs! How on earth do you get them?" the fox wondered.

The hare answered, "This is what I do. There are women coming along here with basketfuls of eggs that they are taking to market. When I see a woman coming, I let myself fall flat on the ground before her, as if I were wounded by a shot. Then the woman puts her basket down in order to catch me and to take me to the market. Just as she thinks she had caught me, I stagger on for about ten steps and let myself fall to the ground again. I repeat this several times, until I am far away from the basket. Then I hurry back to the basket and carry it into the wood, and there I have enough food for a whole week."

The fox replied, "I like that. Wouldn't you help me get some eggs, too, in these hard times?"

"With great pleasure," replied the hare, "if you will be kind enough to let me have my share."

As agreed, they took their positions behind a bush on the road. The fox got a basketful of eggs in the described manner, and he hurried into the wood with it. The hare followed him in order to get his share. When he reached him, the fox had divided up the eggs into several little piles. The hare asked him with astonishment, "Why so many shares?"

Pointing to the different piles, the fox replied, "This one is for my father; this one for my mother; the other one is for my brother and my sister and the last one is mine."

"And where is my share?" asked the hare in surprise.

"There is nothing left for you," was the answer. Too weak to punish the fox, the hare left angrily. But decided to watch for a chance to pay back the fox.

After some time, the hare and the fox met again. It was very cold, and the earth was covered with snow. Again the fox wondered at the hare's prosperous look, since he himself was suffering terribly from hunger. Thus he asked, "What are you living on now?"

"On fish," the hare replied.

"Please," said the fox, "couldn't you let me have some as well to appease my hunger?"

The hare answered, "I shall help you once more. Not far from here by the castle, there is a fishpond. The inhabitants have made a hole in the ice in order to catch fish. In the evening I go there; I stand on the ice and put my little tail into the hole, and after some time, I draw it out and there are plenty of fish hanging on it."

"Well," replied the fox, "this sounds all right to me. With my long tail, I should be able to catch a lot."

The hare said, "You will find me at the fishpond tonight."

At night they met at the appointed place, and the hare said, "Sit down by the hole, put your tail into the water, and remain like this until I come back. I shall go over to the garden to eat some cabbage."

The hare went away, and the fox remained there patiently, happily thinking of appeasing his gnawing hunger. After a while he tried pulling and found that his tail was getting heavy. But he continued to sit there, just as the hare had told him to do.

It was a long time before the hare came back and asked, "How are things going?"

The fox replied, "You have been away for a very long time. I have tried once, but my tail is so heavy that you will have to help me get it out."

The hare said, "Pull hard!"

But the fox could not get it out. He pulled as hard as he could, but the tail was frozen fast in the ice.

Now the hare approached with a stick, hit him over the head, crying, "This one is for my father; this one is for my mother; this one is for my brother and my sister; and the last one is for me!" He knocked him on the head from the right side and from the left, until the fox fell down dead.

The Fox and the Wolf

The fox and the wolf once divided the produce of their common work in a field. But the fox cheated the wolf when sifting the chaff from the corn: he kept the corn for himself and left the chaff for the wolf. The wolf was satisfied with this distribution, because his heap was bigger than that of the fox. Then they both went grinding. When the corn was being ground, the millstones noisily said, "cricks cracks," but when the chaff was being ground, they only said very softly, "climm clamm," so that the sound could barely be heard.

The wolf listened to this with astonishment. He could not explain it, and asked, "How is it that before the millstones said 'cricks cracks', whereas now they only whisper 'climm clamm?'"

The sly fox gave him the advice, "Throw small stones and sand among it; then you can hear the grinding better!"

This is what the stupid wolf did. And hark! What a noise the millstones made now. They grated so loudly that one had to shut one's ears. The wolf jumped for joy when he heard the millstones making more noise when grinding the chaff than when grinding the corn.

The Five Little Foxes and the Tiger (East Pakistan)

Once upon a time, on the plains of East Pakistan, a fox and his wife lived in a little hole. They had five children who were too young to feed themselves, and so every evening Mr. and Mrs. Fox crept out of their hole and made their way to the bazaar or market place, which was full of roughly-made stalls.

But they didn't go there to buy anything. They waited until all the people had gone home to their suppers, and then the two foxes crept amongst the stalls looking for scraps of food for their children.

Sometimes they found nothing but a few grains of rice or shreds of pumpkin but at other times they picked up quite large pieces of fish or meat which had been dropped un-noticed by a stall-holder.

Then the two foxes were overjoyed and would hurry home talking happily together. But no matter who had found the most food – and to be truthful it was nearly always Mrs. Fox who was the better scavenger – Mr. Fox was so full of pride at his cleverness that he could not stop boasting.

'How much sense have you got, my dear?' he would ask his wife as they hurried along between large tufts of brown grass and withered-looking bushes.

'About as much as would fill a small vegetable basket,' Mrs. Fox would reply modestly.

Then after a few minutes she would say, 'And how much sense have you got, my good husband?'

'As much as would fill twelve large sacks, needing twelve strong oxen to carry them,' the conceited Mr. Fox would reply, time and time again.

Now one evening, when the two foxes were on their way home with food for their children, and Mr. Fox had just told his wife for the hundredth time how clever he was, a large tiger suddenly stepped out from behind a bush and barred their way.

'At last I've got you,' growled the tiger, showing them his sharp white teeth which glistened in the moonlight.

Mr. Fox began to tremble and his legs gave way, so that he crumpled up into a heap and lost the power to speak.

But clever Mrs. Fox held her head high, and looking straight into the flashing eyes of the tiger, she said with a smile, 'How glad we are to have met you, O Uncle! My husband and I have been having an argument, and since neither will give way to the other, we decided that we would ask the first superior animal who crossed our path to settle the matter for us.'

The tiger was surprised at being spoken to so politely, and also very flattered at being called 'Uncle', which is a term of great respect in Pakistan.

So he did not spring at the foxes to kill and eat them, but replied, 'Very well. I will help you if I can. Tell me what you were arguing about.'

'My husband and I have decided to part company,' said Mrs. Fox in a clear, calm voice, while her husband, who had closed his eyes in fear, now opened them wide in surprise. 'But we have five children waiting at home for us, and we cannot decide how to divide them between us fairly. I think that I should have three, since I have had to spend more time in looking after them than my husband, and that he should have only two. But my husband insists that I let him have the three boy-cubs, and that I keep only the two girl-cubs. Now, O wise Uncle, who do you think is right?'

When Mrs. Fox saw the tiger licking his lips she knew that he was thinking that somehow he must have the five fox cubs as well as their parents for his dinner. And this was exactly what she had hoped for.

'I must see the cubs for myself before I can make a decision,' said the tiger. 'Will you take me to your home?'

'Certainly,' said Mrs. Fox. 'We will lead the way, and you shall follow.'

Poor Mr. Fox was completely at a loss to know what his wife was doing, but thinking that anything would be better than being eaten alive by a tiger, he staggered to his feet and followed his wife along the rough track, until they reached their home.

'Wait here,' said Mrs. Fox to the tiger. 'You are too big to get inside our hole, so we will bring the children outside for you to see.'

She turned to her husband to tell him to go in, but he, needing no encouragement to get away from the tiger, shot into the opening like a flash.

Mrs. Fox went in more slowly, talking all the time, saying that she would not keep him waiting more than a moment, and thanking him for being so gracious as to promise to judge their case for them.

'Once inside their hole, the foxes gathered their children together as far away from the opening as possible, and in whispers told them what happened.

'Don't make a sound,' said Mrs. Fox, 'and presently the tiger will realize he has been tricked, and will go away.'

She was right. The tiger waited for hours, first patiently, then furiously, as it gradually dawned on him that the foxes had no intention of letting him see their children, and when the sun rose the next morning, he had to go hungrily away.

After this, Mr. and Mrs. Fox went by a different path to the bazaar, and kept a sharp look-out for tigers.

Mr. Fox never again asked his wife how much sense she had, but once or twice, when he showed signs of becoming proud again she would say to him, 'How much sense have you got, my dear?' and he would answer with an embarrassed laugh, 'Oh! About as much as would fill a small vegetable basket – a very small one, I'm afraid.'

The Fox, the Fish, and the Bear (Lapland)

Far away in the north of Lapland there once lived a fox who had been looking for food for days and days but had found none.

'What shall I do?' he asked himself as he lay on the hard packed snow. 'If I cannot find food I shall die.'

Just then he heard the sound of dogs barking in the distance and he guessed that some sleighs were coming up from the sea towards the place where he lay.

Now most of the Laplanders in this part of the country were fishermen, and this fox loved eating fish. So he stretched himself out on the snow in such a way that the sleigh-driver would think he were dead.

Sure enough, after a few moments a string of sleighs stopped right beside the fox.

'What luck!' said a man's voice. 'A dead fox! Now I can sell it's fur.'

Then, picking up the fox, the man slung its body on to the front sleigh and continued on his way.

Cautiously the fox opened his eyes. He saw that the dogs were dragging four sleighs, and that they were all empty except for the last one, which was piled high with fish.

Presently, as the sleighs rode over some bumpy ground, the fox let himself fall off on to the snow, taking care to make a loud plop.

Immediately the man reined in the dogs, leapt off the front sleigh and slung the fox up on to the second sleigh. Then he continued his journey.

After a few more miles the fox again let himself fall off the sleigh, taking care to make an even louder plop as he dropped into the crisp snow.

Once again the man stopped the sleighs, picked up the fox and slung him on to the third sleigh.

From here the fox could smell the fish so strongly that his stomach ached with hunger and his mouth watered profusely.

In no time at all he had dropped off the third sleigh and the man had stopped yet again and picked him up.

‘What a nuisance you are!’ said the Laplander, throwing him up on the top of all the fish on the fourth sleigh. ‘If you fall off here, I shan’t bother to stop again. I shall never get home at this rate.’ Then, climbing back and settling himself into the front sleigh, the man whipped up the dogs and hurried off.

Now the fox opened his eyes and began to get busy. The cunning animal gnawed the thin ropes which tied the fourth sleigh to the third, until at last he separated the sleighs.

The man drove on, never realizing that he now had only three sleighs, and empty ones at that, while the fox seized the broken rope in his teeth and dragged the sleigh off the track, towards a big snowdrift where he could hide.

Never had he eaten such a splendid meal. Fish after fish went down the fox’s throat, until he began to think he could eat no more.

He was just taking hold of what he had decided must be the last fish of the day when the snapping of a near-by twig made him turn his head.

In horror, he saw a huge, long-tailed bear approaching through the trees.

‘Where did you get all that fish?’ growled the bear, looking at the sleigh which still held a good pile of fish.

‘I caught it myself,’ lied the fox. ‘It’s all mine and you are not to touch it.’

‘What did you catch it with?’ asked the bear.

‘I will show you if you like,’ said the fox. ‘Come down to the river and you will soon have a pile of fish even bigger than mine.’

So the fox made his way through the trees towards the river, while the bear lumbered after him.

The river was covered with ice, so, taking a sharp stone, the fox knocked a hole through the ice until they could see the sluggish water flowing below.

‘Now,’ said the fox, ‘you have to sit on the bank with your back to the river and your tail hanging down through the hole into the water.’

The stupid bear did as he was told, and sitting down he gently eased his long tail into the hole in the ice.

‘How shall I know when I have caught a fish?’ he asked.

‘Oh, that’s easy,’ replied the fox. ‘You will feel a slight nip as the fish bites and then you must gently ease your tail up through the hole, eat the fish, and begin again.’

Then the fox dashed off to his sleigh, and, seizing the rope in his mouth, he dragged it as far away from the river as he could.

But the bear sat on and on, waiting for the slight nip which would tell him that he had caught a fish. It got colder and colder as night came on, and presently the bear began to realize that the fox had tricked him.

‘Wait till I catch him!’ he growled, trying to turn away from the river in the direction the fox had taken. But the ice had frozen tight around his long tail and he could not move.

He tugged and pulled for a long time in vain, until at last his great strength triumphed and he found that he had freed himself from the ice.

But on looking behind, he also found that he had left most of his big, bushy tail in the frozen river, and all that remained was a little furry stump.

And that is the reason, say the Laplanders, why even today, all the bears have such short stumpy tails.

The Fox and the Sheepskin Jacket (Palestine)

Once upon a time a fox living in Palestine lifted his head from the undergrowth where he had been hiding, and saw an eagle.

‘Hallo!’ cried the eagle as it swooped down close to the fox. ‘How you can bear to live all your life down there on the ground, I do not know. You really are a most un-enterprising creature.’

Then the eagle soared up into the blue sky again, and as the fox watched it he half wished that he could fly too.

In a few moments the eagle was swooping down again, saying, ‘Did you hear what I said?’

‘Yes I did,’ called the fox. ‘What does the world look like from so high?’

The eagle alighted beside him and replied, ‘Sometimes it is so far away this it is almost invisible.’

The fox laughed scornfully. ‘I don’t believe you,’ he said.

This annoyed the eagle who had always hated the fox for his cunning underhanded ways, and now he suddenly thought of a plan to get rid of him.

‘Jump on my back and I’ll take you up to see for yourself,’ he said.

The fox hesitated for a moment and then he climbed on to the strong back of the eagle, settled himself among the feathers and cried: 'I'm ready! Up you go!'

The eagle soared upwards and the fox closed his eyes in alarm, for he had never travelled as fast as this on the ground, let alone in the air.

'How big does the earth look now?' asked the eagle presently.

The fox opened his eyes and gasped as he peered downwards. 'It looks about as big as one of those straw baskets they make at Lydda,' he said.

'Aha!' said the eagle. 'But it won't look as big as that in a minute.' Up and up they went, and then the eagle asked again, 'How big does the earth look now?'

'It looks about as big as an onion,' replied the fox, hoping that the eagle would soon begin flying down again.

But the eagle continued to soar upwards, while the fox clung to its feathers, feeling very alarmed and still scarcely daring to open his eyes.

'How big does it look now?' asked the eagle at last.

Peering down through half-closed eyes, the fox could see nothing at all. Even when he opened his eyes wide in surprise, he could still not see the earth, as it was so far away below them.

'I can't see anything at all!' he said. 'How far away do you think the earth is now?'

'That I can't tell,' replied the eagle. 'But I leave it to you to find out.' So saying the eagle turned right over onto his back so that the fox was shaken off.

With a scream the fox began to fall down. Through the air he rushed, sometimes the right way up, sometimes the wrong, but all the time wondering what would happen to him when he hit the earth.

Suddenly he knew! He had landed on a ploughboy's soft sheepskin coat, in the middle of a ploughed field, and because this had broken his fall, he was still alive.

Heaving a sigh of relief, the fox scrambled under the sheepskin jacket. Using this as a disguise in case anybody saw him and tried to kill him again, he ran swiftly into some woods to take cover.

But he was not safe here, for immediately he came face to face with a leopard. But instead of attacking the fox and eating him, the leopard was so surprised at the coat he was wearing that he asked, 'Where did you get that warm coat, Fox? I've never seen you wearing one of those before.'

'I've changed my way of living,' replied the fox quickly. 'No longer do I steal the farmers's chickens, because I have become a furrier and have learned how to sew. Would you like me to make you a sheepskin jacket like mine?'

'Yes I would,' said the leopard, thinking what good camouflage it would be when he was stalking game for his dinner.

'Very well,' said the fox, 'You're a much better hunter than I am, so if you can bring me six sheep, I will make you a jacket with their coats, and will eat their meat for my payment.'

The unsuspecting leopard went off to steal the sheep from a near-by hillside, while the fox lay down and laughed to himself, feeling very pleased at his own cleverness.

When the leopard came back with the six dead sheep, the fox persuaded him to help him to carry them close to his den. Then, promising the leopard that the jacket would be ready next week, he sent him away.

Now the fox had a wife and six little cubs, and when they saw all the meat that the leopard had provided for them, they were delighted. Never had they had such a feast before! For days they all ate as much as they could and each night they slept deeply and rested well, for there was no need to go hunting now.

But the leopard was not so happy. He kept coming back to the fox's den and shouting: 'Isn't my jacket ready yet?'

The fox put him off with various excuses, until all the meat had gone, and then he said, 'You are a much bigger animal than I am, Leopard, so I'm afraid I shall need more than six sheepskins for your coat. Will you bring me three more sheep tomorrow? Then I think I can finish making it.'

The leopard was getting a little suspicious by now, but off he went and killed three more sheep, and brought them back to the fox.

Now the family could eat their fill again, and they all feasted happily until the meat had gone. But the fox was beginning to regret his behavior, as he knew the leopard would want to be revenged when he found out that there was to be no sheepskin jacket after all, for he had no idea how to sew.

He began to go hunting in a different part of the country, and always looked around carefully to make sure the leopard was nowhere near when he went in or out of his hole. When he did meet the leopard he made excuses about the jacket, saying that he had run out of thread, or just broken his needle; he even pretended that he was not the fox who had eaten the sheep, and since all foxes are very much alike, the leopard could not be sure which was which.

But at last the leopard knew that he had been tricked, and he decided that it was time to get even with the fox.

Hiding behind a boulder one night, he lay still, scarcely breathing, until he heard the sound of the fox returning from a hunting expedition. With a bound the leopard pounced on the fox, intending to kill him, but the fox was so quick in reaching his hole, that all the leopard managed to catch was the fox's bushy tail.

'All right! I've missed you this time,' the leopard shouted. 'But I shall know you from all the other foxes now, as you will be the only one without a tail.'

Then to make sure that the fox would suffer a few days' starvation, the leopard took a hornets' nest and put it on the ground beside the opening to the fox's den. He knew that the humming sound the hornets made was very much like the noise of a leopard purring, and he hoped that the fox would stay inside, not daring to go hunting while he thought the leopard was waiting for him.

For almost a week, the fox family went hungry, until at last the fox began to get suspicious, for he wondered how the leopard could stay in one place for so long without going away to get food.

Creeping close to the opening, the fox peered cautiously outside, and discovered the hornets' nest.

He was furious that he had been tricked so easily, but he dared not show himself to the leopard, as he would easily recognize him now that he had lost his tail.

However, he had to take some risks if he were going to put into practice the plan which he had been working out, while listening to the hornets' humming.

So, waiting until darkness fell, the fox rushed hither and thither, calling at the homes of all his friends and relations.

'Come with me! I have found you a splendid vineyard full of ripe grapes. Come and feast with me, while it is dark and the owner is asleep at home.'

Soon dozens of foxes were following behind him and he led them to a secluded vineyard some way from his den. 'What a feast! What juicy grapes!' all the foxes exclaimed as they began to eat them hungrily.

'Wait a minute,' commanded the fox. 'We mustn't all eat from the same vine. I will show you each your place, and then you can eat unhindered by anyone else, and we shall not have any quarrels.'

One by one, he led the foxes to a different vine, and said to each, 'Now you must not mind if I tie your tail to your particular vine. This will show the others that the vine belongs to you, and it will prevent any greed fox from straying to his brother's place and eating his grapes.'

All the foxes agreed quite readily, until eventually nothing could be heard but the steady munching of grapes.

Silently the fox left the vineyard and made his way to the owner's house, where he banged on the door and woke up the whole household, crying: 'Go to your vineyard! The foxes are robbing it! Take up your sticks and drive them away.'

The people in the house were soon awake, and ran shouting towards the vineyard, waving their heavy sticks.

The foxes heard them coming and tried to run away, but their tails were tied so tightly to the vines that the only way they could escape was by tugging so hard that they left their tails behind them.

After this every fox in the district had a short tail, and so the leopard never found out which was the fox who had tricked him. He was so annoyed that he went away to live in a different part of the country, and then the fox, his wife and his six little cubs were able to roam about freely, and to hunt wherever they liked.

How the Fox Saved the Horse's Life (Russia)

Once upon a time a bear was hiding behind some trees on the edge of a field in Russia, hungrily watching a peasant and his horse ploughing the soil.

The horse was old and tired, and presently the peasant shouted angrily: 'I'm fed up with your slowness, old horse! You are no use to me at all. I shall let the bears have you!'

Now the peasant did not really mean what he said, and was thoroughly alarmed when the bear lumbered out from behind the trees and growled, 'Very well! I will eat your horse for you. Give him to me.'

'Oh no!' gasped the man. 'Don't eat him yet, I beg you. Give me enough time to finish ploughing this field and then I will let you have him.'

Of course the man had no intention of giving his horse to the bear, for he knew he would never find enough money to buy another one, but he hoped that by the end of the day he might have thought of a plan to outwit the bear.

'Very well,' said the bear. 'I will wait until you have finished.'

The peasant went on with his ploughing, but his mind was not on his job. He kept wondering how he could get the horse home safely, for the bear was a big one who could kill both the horse and man with one blow.

Later in the day the peasant stopped work for a few moments' rest, and sat down at the edge of the field to eat a crust of bread.

He heard a rustle in the nearby bushes and turning he saw the face of a fox peering at him.

'Sh!' said the fox. 'Don't call out! I heard what the bear said to you, and have worked out a plan that will save your horse. But you will have to reward me.'

'I would give anything I have to save my poor old horse,' said the old man. 'What is your plan?'

'First of all, we will decide on my reward,' said the greedy fox. 'I shall want twelve hens for my supper.'

'Very well,' said the peasant, who had only twelve hens and no more. 'I will give them to you if your plan works.'

'I have a small bell here, which I shall fasten round my neck,' said the fox. 'Then I shall go into the forest, creep behind the bear, and leap about so that the bell rings.'

'But that will not frighten a bear!' exclaimed the man.

‘Of course it won’t,’ said the fox, impatiently. ‘But when the bear hears it and asks you what it is, you must tell him that the King’s son is bear-hunting with a number of his courtiers. That should frighten the bear away pretty quickly.’

Off went the fox among the trees, and up got the peasant and began to plough again. Presently the sound of a bell reached him, and he knew that the fox was leaping about in the forest, trying to make his bell sound like those the bear-hunters tied to their horses.

The bear came towards the peasant with his eyes full of fear. ‘What is that noise?’ he asked.

‘I heard that the King’s son was coming into the forest today, bear-hunting with his friends,’ replied the peasant. ‘I expect they have started the hunt and the bells are those on their horses.’

The bear had changed from a bully to a coward now, and he begged the peasant to save him. ‘Don’t betray me,’ he said, ‘and I promise not to eat your horse after all.’

‘I will not let the hunters get you,’ said the peasant, ‘but I will hold you to your promise afterwards.’

The bear crouched on the ground beside the cart on which the peasant had brought the plough to his field. Then the fox got as close to the bear as he could without being seen, and shouted: ‘We are hunting bears. What is that dark shape beside you, my man?’

‘That is a tree stump,’ called the peasant. ‘I have been cutting wood for my fire.’

‘If it’s a tree stump, why is it standing up? Are you sure it’s not a bear?’

‘Lie down,’ whispered the peasant, giving the terrified bear a push, and sending him under the cart. ‘It’s a tree stump all right,’ called the man. ‘I have cut it down now, and it’s on the ground.’

‘Well that’s a queer place to put it,’ shouted the fox, who was still well hidden by the trees. ‘Why don’t you load it on your cart, and tie it firmly with rope, so that it doesn’t fall off? That is what we do with logs as big as that.’

‘Very well,’ said the man, and the bear, needing no encouragement, scrambled up into the cart and allowed the peasant to tie him up firmly with rope.

‘You are a foolish fellow,’ called the fox. ‘Most people put an axe in the cart with the log, and then they can chop it up for firewood as soon as they get home.’

So the peasant took his axe, climbed into the cart, and killed the bear with one blow.

The horse neighed with happiness as the peasant harnessed him to the cart and prepared to go home, but the fox kept leaping and bounding around them as they went, crying: ‘Don’t forget my reward. Twenty hens you promised me.’

‘Not twenty! I have only twelve and that was the number we agreed on,’ said the poor peasant, wondering what his wife would say when he handed over her fine, plump laying hens to the fox.

As they neared the peasant's cottage, his three dogs heard him coming, and leaping up from their place beside the hearth, they rushed out joyously to greet him.

'Dogs!' screamed the fox. 'You didn't tell me you kept dogs!'

He turned tail at once and rushed back towards the forest. The three dogs chased after him for several miles but he just managed to get into his hole before they caught up with him.

'I shall never try to help a human being again,' said the fox as he lay down to get back his breath in the safety of his home.

But the peasant was delighted that his dogs had saved him from giving up his wife's precious hens, and when they returned, panting loudly and extremely hungry, he gave them an extra big supper.

Later on, he told his wife the whole story. But she did not believe him, so he took her outside in the darkness and showed her the dead bear, promising that he would skin it in the morning, and make her a fine, fur rug to go on her bed and keep her warm during the bitter, winter nights.

As for the horse, he said nothing, but he lived to a ripe old age, and never again did the peasant threaten to give him up to the bears.

The Fox and the Gulls (Peru)

Once upon a time a gull laid her eggs on the shore of Lake Titicaca in Peru. There were three eggs altogether and the whole day long the mother gull sat on them to keep them warm, only leaving the nest very occasionally to go and catch herself a fish from the lake.

At last the eggs were ready and three little gulls pecked and chirped their way into the world.

Their mother was tremendously proud of them, for this was her first family, and she was kept very busy flying to the lake to catch small fish for her children, or up to the cliffs behind the nest, to search for insects.

As the little gulls grew bigger, the mother had to spend more and more time away from the nest, searching for food to satisfy their healthy appetites; and so it happened that she did not notice her old enemy, the fox, hiding behind a small outcrop of rocks not far from the nest, watching her every moment.

The country around Lake Titicaca was almost all desert, so there were very few trees and bushes about and practically no smaller animals for the fox to feed on.

'Be patient!' the fox muttered to himself, for he was very hungry! 'Don't make a sound and you will soon have the best meal of your life.'

Waiting until the mother gull had flown high up the cliffs to search for insects, the fox crawled stealthily towards the young gulls in their nest.

On his way he noticed an old sack. Which had been blown by the wind from a near-by village, and picking it up he exclaimed:

‘Just what I wanted! Now I can put the gulls in this sack and carry them right away from their nest before I eat them. Then their mother will not hear their cries, and will not come and peck me to pieces.’

Closer and closer the fox crawled to the nest until suddenly he pounced upon the first gull and thrust it in his sack. The second and third gulls had scarcely time to utter more than a few surprised chirps when they too were seized by the fox, who slung the sack over his shoulder and hurried away as fast as he could go.

But the few weak cries of the gull-chicks had been heard by the mother as she was flying back with her mouth full of fish for her children.

Looking down she could see the fox running away from the lake towards some rocky hillocks where he hoped to hide while he ate his meal.

The cunning gull did not swoop down on the fox at once, but followed him at a distance so that he did not know she was there.

‘O my poor children!’ she cried to herself as she flew. ‘How can I get you away from that evil creature?’

The sun was hot and the earth was dry and dusty, and before long the fox was feeling very exhausted with all his running. Added to this his back was getting sore, for the young gulls had sharp beaks and they continually pecked at him through the sack as he ran.

Presently he stopped, and, giving the top of the sack an extra twist or two, he put it on the ground, placed a heavy stone on top of it and sank down nearby to have a rest.

‘I’m exhausted!’ he said. ‘I’ll just have a short nap and then make for that pile of rocks on the other side of the valley. Nobody will see or hear anything there!’

Closing his eyes the fox was soon fast asleep, and then the mother gull, who had been silently flying above him for some time, glided down to the earth.

‘Hush, my children!’ she whispered with her beak close to the sack. ‘Don’t make a sound or you will wake the wicked fox. Just do exactly as I tell you and all will be well.’

The little gulls were delighted to hear their mother’s voice, and lay quietly while she pushed the heavy stone off the sack and untwisted the top.

‘Creep out now!’ she whispered, ‘and go and bring me some thorny twigs from that dead bush.’

The little gulls blinked from the sunlight for a moment or two, and then they staggered over to a shriveled bush nearby and picked as many thorny, prickly twigs as they could.

‘Push them in the sack quickly,’ said the mother gull, and as soon as they had done this, she twisted the neck of the sack up again and put the large stone back on top of it.

‘Now, follow me!’ she said softly, and the little gulls hopped and ran behind her until they had reached the safety of a small cave in the cliffs.

‘Now I shall take you home on my back, one by one,’ said the mother gull, for her children were not yet old enough to fly on their own. ‘But don’t make a sound while I am away, or the fox will hear you.’

So the mother gull got her children safely home again. But she found a new place for her nest, right on the other side of the lake, where the fox would not be able to seize her children again once he found he had been tricked.

Now the fox had been very tired when he fell asleep, and it was not until an hour or two later that he woke.

Looking up at the sun and seeing how much of the day he had wasted, he slung the bag onto his back again and hurried off in the direction of the pile of rocks he had chosen for eating his meal.

He thought that the sack seemed a little lighter than before, but the thorns pricked his back in the same way that the little gulls’ beaks had done, and so he did not realize that the birds were not there.

At last he reached the place where he thought he could eat them without anyone seeing or hearing, and cautiously he opened the sack, and reached in to take out the first bird.

With a cry he withdrew his front leg, covered with scratches and with a branch of the thorn entangled in his fur.

‘I have been tricked!’ he screamed. ‘Who put these thorns in my bag and let out the gulls?’

He knew the answer to this at once, for only the mother bird could have done it. So, leaving the bag on the ground he hurried back to the lakeside to the place where the gull had had her nest.

But of course it was not there, and peering across the lake the fox saw what looked like the mother gull sweeping down to a nest with food for her chicks.

The fox was determined to have his revenge, but could see no way of getting across to the other side of the lake.

All night long he lay on the shore trying to decide on a plan to get the better of the gulls, and when morning came he thought he had one.

‘I will drink and drink and drink,’ he said to himself, ‘until the lake is dry and then I can go across on the mud and seize those little gulls again.’

So he lay down at the edge of the lake and began to drink swallowing the muddy water as fast as he could.

Gradually he began to swell and soon he was feeling most uncomfortable. Bigger and bigger grew his body and still he went on drinking.

‘There can’t be much water left now,’ he puffed, his eyes half closed, and body swollen to six times its normal size.

Gasping and gurgling, he swallowed a few more mouthfuls, and then ‘Crack!’, the sound of a loud explosion filled the air.

The fox had drunk so much water that he had burst, and now lay dead on the shore of the lake.

Across the water the gulls heard the strange noise, and the mother flew off to see what it was all about.

‘The fox is dead, my children,’ she cried happily when she returned. ‘Now we need have no fear that he will try to take you away again.’

So the gulls lived happily and peacefully beside the lake until the children learned to fly and were able to go off and have families of their own.

The Kitsune Book

The hardest book to find on Japanese fox mythology that we know of is Kitsune: Japan's Fox of Mystery, Romance and Humor by Kiyosho Nozaki. Unfortunately, it is also one of the most interesting, having been written by an actual Japanese scholar. Published in 1961 by the Hokuseido Press, it is now long out of print and very hard to obtain copies of. For those of you who can't afford the collector-book prices out there and don't have access to a library with a copy of the book, we have taken it upon ourselves to scan, OCR, and post the text of this to the web in the interest of furthering scholarship on fox mythology.

"Atlan" - The Atlantean language

Initial comments by Graham Mabey

As an introduction to this section on the languages of the Great Continent, I am intervening, for once, to raise the problem of this whole work being in English, supposedly translated by my source from the original Atlantean. This source, in other words, the editor of this work, whoever he or she may be, is offering readers his or her own compilation of the story of the Atlantean Empire, along with copious descriptions of the languages of the area and various original documents, reproduced in the original Atlantean with an English translation. Now there is no intrinsic problem about the writer reading through a mass of incomplete, recently excavated documents from this ancient world, and putting them together into a history suitable for the general reader. The enigma is: how works which were written in Atlantean (and other languages) could be read and understood by a modern person and translated into English.

The writer tells us a certain amount about the discoveries of these documents in North Africa, and about dictionaries for translating Atlantean into other languages of the same era, but nowhere does he say how he could read any of it and render it into English. I need therefore to investigate this matter, as, after all, the whole reliability of these works depends upon it: if there is no way in which our mysterious editor could have translated the Atlantean text into English, then the chances of the it all being a piece of fiction made up by the writer, with no objective reality, become very much greater.

The writer does hint at an answer in a part of his works which I have not yet reproduced. In this he stated simply that he was given some help with reading the work by an old man who lived in the area where the excavations of Atlantis were taking place. This statement at first seems to make an answer even more unattainable. How could another person, contemporary with our editor, help him with reading a language which presumably became obsolete 15000 years ago, when the whole civilisation in which it was spoken was exterminated? We have to believe that this old man actually knew and could speak Atlantean, and could thereby help our editor understand the whole grammar and vocabulary of the language, and also, incidentally, the sound of it, because this too is described in considerable detail. In my opinion, there is a possible answer to this, which, however improbable, must be the truth, if every other explanation is impossible.

We assume that the fall of Atlantis was indeed about 15000 years ago, as our source says, that is, about 13000 BC (or perhaps more recent, as the whole world our writer describes is different to ours in as much as in it, Atlantis is being excavated in North Africa, whereas that is not the case in our actual contemporary world). Whatever the dates, it is inconceivable that this man himself could have survived from that earlier era, but he may be a descendant of a group of Atlanteans who survived the earthquakes and shifting of the earth's crust, as our source describes it, and ended up in North Africa, along with the ruins of their civilisation. Is it possible that knowledge of the language was passed down generation by generation for millennia till it reached this old man living near the modern excavation site? This could happen if the language became revered in a semi-religious or mystical way or was kept alive as a sort of venerated fossil, rather like Latin in the Middle Ages and after. It seems to have been wholly verbal, however, as I find no mention of any recent writings in Atlantean. My assumption then is that the old man probably spoke a modern-day North African language, which our author also understood, and the two conversed in this. The Atlantean texts, or perhaps just the vocabulary, would have been translated by the old man into his native tongue, and our editor then translated this on into modern English. In fact it seems unlikely that one single person would have been left knowing Atlantean, or that he alone translated thousands of words into his own language for the benefit of our write: more likely there exists there a whole community which still understands Atlantean, for whatever mysterious reasons of their own.

Do we assume that the language currently spoken by the old man was a descendant of Atlantean? Probably it was not:

most likely this community, descended from ancient Atlantis, took to speaking whatever was the local African language in the area at some point in its history, whilst still preserving the knowledge of Atlantean itself, preserved like a fossil. Still, Atlantean, and the Juralic languages generally, do seem to have strange resonances, in vocabulary and grammar, with Indo-European languages of the past and present day, but none, so far as I have noticed, with any African language. So possibly the language spoken by our old man was not an African language after all, but a modern Indo-European descendant, and Atlantean is an ancestor of Indo-European itself. In our world, we know of no community of Indo-European speakers in the Saharan area of North Africa, but even now we have not discovered everything there is to discover in Africa, and, as I wrote above, my writer seems to belong in a sort of parallel universe to ours. This theory would assume that the original speakers of Indo-European, who, according to our modern ideas, lived somewhere in eastern Europe, or south Russia, or the northern parts of the Middle East, actually migrated to one of these places from North Africa perhaps some 8 to 12 thousand years ago, leaving behind the community to which the old man belonged.

All of this is admittedly speculation, unless I can discover any more facts in those parts of my writer's works that I have not yet read - and there is indeed much more left. I now leave you entirely in the hands of the Atlanteans and our mysterious editor...

Note by the writer: I have below, as throughout this history, transliterated the Atlantean alphabet into the modern roman one, for obvious reasons. The same applies for the vocabulary of every other language with which I have dealt, including Juralic. In reality, of course, there were several different, though usually related, alphabets or scripts used for different languages on the Great Continent. Juralic and its descendants all used the same one. For more details on alphabets, see the relevant section.

THE NOUN

We shall deal chiefly with Atlantean, or "Atlan" as its speakers called it, as it existed in the "Imperial" period, which was about 300 – 600. Subsequent to that, in the "Late Imperial" period, there were a number of important changes in grammar and pronunciation, which were finally recognised in the Spelling Reforms of 760 – 770. These we shall discuss later.

Imperial Atlantean was a quite highly inflected language. Nouns could take up to 11 different endings, depending on case, and another 11 if we take the difference between singular and plural into consideration. Furthermore, nouns could belong to one of five different declensions. These were based on the basic ending on the nominative singular case. Declension 1 covered nouns ending in a consonant, declension 2a in those ending in –a, 2b in –e(i), 3a in –o, and 3b in –u. A paradigm of the endings of a representative noun of each declension is given below.

	HILL	SHIP	MAN	EAST	STAR
SINGULAR	DECL 1	DECL 2A	DECL 2B	DECL 3A	DECL 3B
NOM/VOC	RUN	PELTA	GESTE(I)	EINO	TINCU
ACCUSATIVE	RUNAN	PELTAN	GESTAN	EINUN	TINCUN
GENITIVE	RUNAYU	PELTEYU	GESTEYU	EINUYU	TINCUYU
DATIVE	RUNAN(T)	PELTAN(T)	GESTAN(T)	EINUN(T)	TINCUN(T)
LOCATIVE	RUNASIL	PELTASIL	GESTASIL	EINUSIL	TINCUSIL
INSTRUMENTAL	RUNAUE	PELTAUE	GESTAUE	EINU(E)	TINCU(E)
ABLATIVE	RUNAO	PELTAO	GESTAO	EINAO	TINCAO
COMMINATIVE	RUNAME	PELTAME	GESTAME	EINUME	TINCUME
ALLATIVE	RUNAR	PELTAR	GESTAR	EINUR	TINCUR
ELATIVE	RUNAOS	PELTAOS	GESTAOS	EINUS	TINCUS
PLURAL	DECL 1	DECL 2A	DECL 2B	DECL 3A	DECL 3B
NOM/VOC/ACC	RUNIX	PELTIX	GESTIX	EINIX	TINCIX
GENITIVE	RUNAYUN	PELTAYUN	GESTAYUN	EINAYUN	TINCAYUN
DATIVE	RUNAIN(T)	PELTAIN(T)	GESTAIN(T)	EINAIN(T)	TINCAIN(T)
LOCATIVE	RUNAISE	PELTAISE	GESTAISE	EINAISE	TINCAISE

INSTRUMENTAL	RUNAIBE	PELTAIBE	GESTAIBE	EINAIBE	TINCAIBE
ABLATIVE	RUNAI	PELTAI	GESTAI	EINAI	TINCAI
COMMUNICATIVE	RUNAIME	PELTAIME	GESTAIME	EINAIME	TINCAIME
ALLATIVE	RUNAIR	PELTAIR	GESTAIR	EINAIR	TINCAIR
ELATIVE	RUNAIS	PELTAIS	GESTAIS	EINAIS	TINCAIS

The abbreviation of the cases, and their meanings are as follows:

NOM=NOMINATIVE= the subject of a sentence

VOC=VOCATIVE = when calling or apostrophising a noun. Endings same as the nom in Atlantean, but different in Juralic and in Helvrán and Yalland.

ACC=ACCUSATIVE= the object of a sentence

GENITIVE = possessive case

DATIVE = the indirect object, eg "he gave it TO ME", "he took it FROM ME"

LOCATIVE = for location, i.e. in, on or at somewhere.

INSTRUMENTAL= implied by or with.

ABLATIVE = implies the idea of "away from", eg "she took the apple FROM him".

COMMUNICATIVE= Used following the prepositions "MEL" (WITH) or "DIMEL" (WITHOUT)

ALLATIVE = implies motion towards.

ELATIVE = implied movement out of or through.

It can be seen from the examples that in many cases, there is little difference between the various declensions, and the plural is the same for every type of noun.

Note the following:

1. The "a" of the accusative singular and dative singular in declension 1 (-an/-ant) vanished if the preceding noun ended in an "r" in the nominative singular.
2. Similarly the "e" in the locative singular ending of declension 1 (-esil) vanished if the preceding noun ended in -l, -r or -n in the nominative singular.
3. The "t" at the end of the dative singular and plural endings in all declensions (-ant, -unt) had become old-fashioned and largely literary by the time of Classical Atlantean. It was in any case never pronounced.
4. The nominative and vocative endings of declension 2b was originally -ei, but -e was increasingly used by the time of Classical Atlantean, especially in the case of nouns with three or more syllables.
5. Similarly, the form of the instrumentative case in declensions 3a and 3b was originally -ue, but the form -u, at first purely colloquial, was becoming common in the literary language after about 400.

There were a number of irregularities in declensions, which relate to regular historical phonetic changes. To learn about these, go to: Irregular Atlantean nouns

There are certain "fossilised" remains of obsolete endings still visible in some nouns. Details of these can be found in: Remains of obsolete endings in Atlantean nouns

ADJECTIVES

Adjectives agreed with the nouns they qualified in declension, to a limited extent, and number. Thus they had endings for the nominative and vocative singular like the noun they were qualifying . All other singular endings, whatever the case, were the same as the accusative case of the noun, while in the plural, the only ending taken by adjectives was –IX.

To form the comparative of an adjective (more...), add -iss to the root. To form the superlative (ie: most...), add -ilc to the root.

Examples are: suals (gentle), sualsiss- (gentler, more gentle), sualsisc- (gentlest, most gentle).

There were a number of irregularities in formations for adjectives and adverbs, as there were with nouns. these are detailed in Irregular Atlantean adjectives and adverbs

THE VERB:

INDICATIVE MOOD

Most verbs conjugated absolutely regularly, but they had different endings for person, number and tense, and are divided into two conjugations for the present tense only. The conjugations here depended upon the nature of the last vowel (or first of the two vowels if it was a diphthong) in the root, or basic, case of the verb. If it was a, e, i or y, an "e" was affixed to the root before the endings; if it was o or u, an "o" was added. Note that personal pronouns did not have to be used, as endings alone made the meaning clear. Here are examples of the present tense of the two types of verb.

PRESENT TENSE (Meaning: I take; I sleep, etc)

	CONJUGATION 1	CONJUGATION 2
SINGULAR	EI LEMB (to take)	EI SOUN (to sleep)
FIRST PERSON ("I")	LEMBENU	SOUNONU
SECOND PERSON ("YOU")	LEMBETU	SOUNOTU
THIRD PERSON ("HE")	LEMBETHE	SOUNOTHE
THIRD PERSON ("SHE")	LEMBESE	SOUNOSE
THIRD PERSON ("IT")	LEMBETHE	SOUNOTHE
PLURAL
FIRST PERSON ("WE")	LEMBENS	SOUNONS
SECOND PERSON ("YOU")	LEMBETES	SOUNOTES
THIRD PERSON ("THEY", masc)	LEMBETHEN	SOUNOTHEN
THIRD PERSON ("THEY" fem)	LEMBESEN	SOUNOSEN
THIRD PERSON ("THEY" neut)	LEMBETHEN	SOUNOTHEN

The other basic tenses were the past and the future.

PAST TENSE (Meaning: I took, etc)

For the past, an "a" was affixed to the root, for ALL verbs. Then the pronominal endings were affixed, similar to the present' i.e. NU, TU, THE, SE, THE, NS, TES, THEN, SEN, THEN.

SINGULAR	EI LEMB (to take)
FIRST PERSON ("I")	LEMBANU
SECOND PERSON ("YOU")	LEMBATU
THIRD PERSON ("HE")	LEMBATHE

THIRD PERSON ("SHE")	LEMBASE
THIRD PERSON ("IT")	LEMBATHE
PLURAL
FIRST PERSON ("WE")	LEMBANS
SECOND PERSON ("YOU")	LEMBATES
THIRD PERSON ("THEY", masc)	LEMBATHEN
THIRD PERSON ("THEY", fem)	LEMBASEN
THIRD PERSON ("THEY", neut)	LEMBATHEN

FUTURE TENSE (Meaning: I shall take, etc)

For the future, "ea" was added in all cases. Then the pronominal endings were affixed, similar to the present and past' i.e. NU, TU, THE, SE, THE, NS, TES, THEN, SEN, THEN.

SINGULAR	EI LEMB (to take)
FIRST PERSON ("I")	LEMBEANU
SECOND PERSON ("YOU")	LEMBEATU
THIRD PERSON ("HE")	LEMBEATHE
THIRD PERSON ("SHE")	LEMBEASE
THIRD PERSON ("IT")	LEMBEATHE
PLURAL
FIRST PERSON ("WE")	LEMBEANS
SECOND PERSON ("YOU")	LEMBEATES
THIRD PERSON ("THEY", masc)	LEMBEATHEN
THIRD PERSON ("THEY", fem)	LEMBEASEN
THIRD PERSON ("THEY", neut)	LEMBEATHEN

Other tenses were formed with auxiliary verbs and a participle of the verb, rather like English.

Perfective tenses.

Where English uses the past, present or future of "To Have" and the past participle (I have eaten, had eaten, will have eaten), Atlantean uses the equivalent tense of "EI TEH" = "to do", plus past participle.

The past participle of verbs was formed by adding an indeclinable –AXA to the root, eg LEMBAXA, "taken".

So, I have taken = tehenu lembaxa (past perfect)

I had taken = tehanu lembaxa (pluperfect)

I shall have taken = teheanu lembaxa (future perfect).

Continuous forms of the simple present, past and future tenses (i.e. I am, was, will be taking") are formed by interpolating syllables to the root of the verb, followed by abbreviated versions of the pronominal endings. The interpolated forms were EHUASE for the present, AHUASE for the past, and EHUANE for the future. T

The abbreviated pronominal endings were used in all cases when they followed multi-syllabic affixes to the root of the verb. They were: N, -, TH, S, TH, NS, TES, THEN, SEN, THEN. These were in fact used for all moods and tenses except the present, past and future indicative and subjunctive.

So,

I am taking = lembehuasen (present continuous)

I was taking = lembahuasen (imperfect [past continuous])

I shall be taking = lembehuanen (future continuous)

Continuous perfect forms of tenses could be made using the relevant tense of "EI TEH" plus the present participle of the verb, formed by affixing ONDUR to the root.

Thus:

I have been taking = tehenu lembondur (past perfect continuous)

I had been taking = tehenu lembondur (Pluperfect continuous)

I shall have been taking = teheanu lembondur (Future perfect continuous)

For further details on the verb, including additional moods and the passive voice, click here Details of the Atlantean verb

There were a number of irregular verb conjugations. These are dealt with in Irregular Atlantean verbs

NEGATIVISATION

To make a verb negative, prefix DE(H)- to the verb, whatever its tense. (Add the "H" if the verb begins with a vowel. Examples are:

I did not take = delembanu

I should not take = delembehen

I should not have been taken = dehaisahen lembaxa

A more colloquial use, and originally a stronger form, was to use a separate word after the verb, like English "not" = DEHLES (basic meaning was "never"), eg:

I should not take - lembehen dehles

To emphasise the negative, DEN (originally DEH EN = not a ) was put before any noun (declined as an adjective), and DEHLES was omitted in this case.

INTERROGATIVISATION

To turn a statement into a question, CIR (what?) was placed before the verb (and pronoun, if there was one). It could be combined with DE(H) / DEHLES / DEN. EG:

Will he take? = cir lembeathe?

Has she taken? = cir suie tese lembaxa?

Did I not take? = cir delembanu? OR cir lembanu dehles?

CHANGES TO THE LANGUAGE IN LATE IMPERIAL ATLANTEAN

Changes occurred to the language both in pronunciation and morphology, including the decay of grammatical endings throughout Atlantean history, and these were finally reflected in the new spelling rules of the 760s. So far as grammar is concerned, the complicated array of noun declension tabulated above gradually died out, as all the oblique cases were formed in the spoken language by means of prepositions and the accusative case. Already by 600, when the first (abortive) Republican spelling reforms took place, all three declensions had virtually been combined into one. By the time of the Fifth Empire reforms, the only remaining endings were as follows:

nominative/vocative singular: - or -a

all plural cases: -ix'

A similar situation arose with verbs. Just as prepositions were increasingly used with nouns in oblique cases after 500, so personal pronouns were used more with verbs in the various persons. This led to the decay or amalgamation of endings in both cases, and also forced a more analytical and rigid word-order on to sentences. With verbs, the "short" personal endings too over from the longer endings in spoken use by 550. By the 700s, all present singular cases ended in -e, while the present plural ran: -en, -e, -ethen. The past endings were as above, except that "-a" replaced the "-e" there. Elsewhere, tense endings vanished in favour of the use of auxiliary verbs and participles or infinitive. So the former past perfect (using TEH plus past participle) took over the above-mentioned inflectional past tense in everyday use, and a new future using the future of TEH and the infinitive superseded the old inflected future tense. The conditional and subjunctive both died out as well, except in purely literary conditions.

Pronunciation changed over the centuries as well, and this was reflected in a number of major spelling changes after 760.

1. M,N,L,S,+ voiced consonant > MM,NN,LY,SS
2. ZU,PU,BU+vowel> Z,F,V. (Note that these letters were originally pronounced ZH, F and V even in Imperial Atlantean).
3. S between vowels>Z
4. -NC- >-NG-
5. -PH->-F-. (Note that PH was always pronounced F in any case).
6. Final consonants of roots, following a short vowel, are doubled in writing when suffixes are added (as in declensions and conjugations).
7. Diphthongs changed to single vowels in all positions (including finally), i.e. OU>U, EI>E.
8. In triphthongs, such as AUE, EUA, the last vowel vanished. The surviving diphthong was also usually simplified, especially if final, eg AUE>AU>AO>A.
9. Most final short vowels became -e.

Examples of these changes are most easily seen in personal names of the period subsequent to 760.

So the Emperor Louron lustacin (762-768) wrote his first name as LURON (see sound-change 7 above). The Chief Minister of the 790s spelt his name MESTENSOS instead of MEISTENSOS. (Change number 7).

The Chief Minister of the 770s spelt his name VENTEL, rather than BUENTEL. (Change number 2).

The Emperors Sualopho Thildoyon and Pareon wrote their first names SUALOFO , and the Empress Lirinda Siphone as Lirinne Sifone (see changes nos. 1, 5 and 9 above).

APPENDIX: THE STRANGE CASE OF THE FIRST AND THIRD PERSONS.

One of the most unusual features of Classical Atlantean was its usage, or non-usage, of the first person singular with verbs ("I"). The way in which this was avoided, how it crept back in gradually to general use, and how it was treated in religious language links in to the whole Atlantean way of looking at the world. Moreover it can also be studied from the point of view of Atlantean philosophy, and ultimately Atlantean attitudes to life before birth and after death.

From earliest times, the Official Religion had deliberately used the third person, rather than the first, when addressing the gods, whether in speech or in writing. This was because the emotions and feelings of every individual were supposed to be entirely under the control of the different gods, and hence one should try to remain "neutral" in addressing one or more of them, or, more generally, when talking about oneself. This could be achieved by referring to oneself by name only, in the third person. Due to the influence of the Church, this practice of using the third person was taken up by the Emperors in written documents after the time of Carel I, around 220. It then spread more generally to Court use. Some more liberal Emperors, such as Siphirixo, objected to this usage, and reverted to the first person, but by the end of the Family Wars, and the accession of the conservative Ruthoyon I, the practice became permanently enshrined in Imperial and Court practice.

The practice continued to spread later in the century, as it became adopted into the canons of "classical" literary usage and taste after the 340s. By the time Atlaniphon I came to the throne in 361, he was unable to avoid the third person practice. He persisted with it throughout his Court because of its general adoption as part of the classical canon of good taste. This happened to coincide with the Church's practice as well, but this was really only coincidental for him. Throughout the 400s and also most of the 500s, all "cultivated" and higher Class people invariably used the third person instead of the first in all their writings; it was used as well by the Church, the Court, and in local government. It was not, of course, used in normal, informal conversation, but as soon as spoken language became "formalised", for example in prayers, in drama, or in set speeches, it would be generally adopted.

As part of their revolt against the Classical canon, Romantic artists deliberately reverted back to normal first person usage in the 500s, and of course the revolutionaries after 585 would have no truck with it. It lingered on amongst the Imperialists in the Church and in Court use, but had withered away elsewhere by the early 600s. It was resurrected deliberately by Ruthopheax I for formal Court use in the Third Empire, and also reappeared in very formal literature. In all cases, this was only in written language. The Church (State Theism) did not use it, adopting instead the first person plural ("We") in all cases when it would have been natural to use the first person singular ("I"); this was to indicate the people were part of a whole community praying together. Somewhat similarly, God was addressed in the second person plural ("You"), not singular ("Thou"), which was perhaps felt to be too familiar, and also too close to the usage of the Naturists. The latter had always used both the first person and the second person singular.

The practice of using the third person instead of the first died off completely with the fall of the Third Empire, having become moribund some decades earlier. For novelists of the Fourth Empire, indeed, the difference between the two persons was crucial, as many of them were involved in the study of the differences between the experiences and emotions of the "self", or first person, and the actions and outer appearance of people, viewed from the point of view of the third person. Philosophy of course took up the investigation of the self, its world, its role on earth, and possible life beyond the death of its body (often seen from the third person point of view). Finally, poetry also studied and wrote about the dichotomy between the two viewpoints after the 870s.

But there was a further twist to the story of the first person in this period. It was said above that the Naturists always used the first person singular within their religious ceremonies. But after about 760, they abandoned this in favour of a completely new formation, which they called the "eternal I". This was intended to remind users that they had been reincarnated many times before, and would again in the future. A similar usage had first been used by the South Numedeans in the time of their Empire, centuries earlier, and had been carried on by their descendants, who became subject to, or lived next to, the Yallands. In their language this "eternal I" usage involved a special form of the first person, with a particular ending (now lost to us). The Yallands, many of whom were much attracted to these beliefs, could not easily follow this practice, as there is no obviously equivalent usage in the Yalland language, and anyway probably did not understand it. However Gestil, who founded Naturism around 200, did understand the significance of the Numedeans' practice, and deliberately followed it in Yalland, by using the form of the old Juralic pluperfect case. This involved adding -evino on to the root of the verb. This formation was completely moribund in the Yalland of the third century, its meaning having been taken over by the use of the past tense of "to have" plus the past participle (as in English). Nevertheless Gestil succeeded in taking it over for his religion, with the meaning of an eternal, or ever-repeating I from the past to the present. Naturists who spoke Atlantean in subsequent years were not able to copy this form, and so used the ordinary first person singular, which was anyway very distinctive from the practice of the established Church, which used the third person only.

However, after 760, Naturism emphasised the importance of the doctrine of reincarnation by inventing an equivalent in Atlantean of the Yalland "eternal I" formation. This was done by changing the normal Late Atlantean form (post-Spelling Reform) of the first person singular verb suffix, -a to -an. This was taken from the earlier, classical form of this ending, -anu, which was still used in the literary language of the fourth Empire in the 750s, until the Spelling Reform. This form would later be taken over by the unified Church of Natural Theism in the 850s.

I discovered this very detailed history of Atlantis and her empire - "Sayatal atlantisayu ed atlanan ceriehayu" in the original tongue - as a handwritten document in a package on my doorstep! That much I know to be fact. Yet the history itself appears to be the work of an author describing the archaeological and literary discoveries about Atlantis and neighbouring countries found beneath the Sahara Desert. Is this truth - and if so, how can it be, as we know of no such discoveries being made in our world? Is it a document I have somehow received from the future, or perhaps from an alternate timeline? Or is it all a long invention by the unknown writer?

I can only reproduce the words as I received them, and leave it to you to decide if this whole magnificent story of the rise and fall of an Empire named Atlantis, with its detailed account of the societies, politics, military conquests, arts and languages of a whole Continent, is a true description of a real world of the past ----

1. Sources for the History of the Atlantean Empire

THE DISCOVERY OF ATLANTIS AND THE ARCHAEOLOGICAL REMAINS.

The existence of Atlantis and indeed of all the peoples and civilisations which flourished for centuries so long ago on the Great Continent was completely unknown to modern Western man until the most recent times. This is because of the massive geological convulsions which shattered this whole continent some 15000 years ago, (after the year 900 in Atlantean chronology) and buried it beneath the present Sahara desert in Africa. All living creatures, as well as every artifact of the period thus perished and vanished as if they had never been, and our whole world itself was tipped over so that an area well north of the Equator thus ended up buried under a region now very close to it. Myths of a great civilisation called Atlantis did survive and were written about by the Ancient Greeks, and again from time to time up until the twentieth century. But no real facts survived, other than that it perished in a gigantic geological catastrophe. Even its location was unknown: it was generally believed to have sunk beneath the waves of the Atlantic Ocean.

Now it has been rediscovered under the African sands, and all the time more and more evidence of the mighty history of Atlantis is being brought to light. Archaeologically speaking, the only part of the Great Continent that can actually be unearthed is the north-western corner, including the areas of Atlantis and Helvis, most of Ycïel Atlantis and a small part of the Marossan coast. To this can be added the north of the Province of Thainen Thissaindix and the N.W. corner of Manralia. All the rest of the old Continent lies either beneath the Ahaggar or Atlas Mountains in North Africa, or is otherwise completely irrecoverable. One exception from this Ancient World is the so-called South Island ("Trayanaxo"), which should lie some 250 miles north of Timbuktu in Mali, and there appears to be some recent evidence that a part of this may now have been found.

ARCHITECTURAL AND OTHER NON-LITERARY FINDS

Within these limitations, considerable architectural remains have by now been found beneath the sands, including the sites of the cities of Atlantis and Helvis and other cities in the area. Because of earthquakes and geological convulsions all buildings were toppled and damaged, and what remains are only the foundations and bases of buildings, rather like Pompeii. Evidence for the upper parts of these buildings must be garnered from literary sources and plans, which were often inscribed in clay or stone inside the entrances.

A drawing of an aerial view of the excavations of Helvis, one of the more complete cities so far discovered.

We are fortunate also that a few photographs have survived from the later period of Atlantean history, and these can provide us with pictures of complete buildings, normally in black and white. Examples of buildings and landscapes within this history are occasionally completely original but in other cases careful reproductions worked out from literary sources.

Evidence of everyday articles has also been found in considerable numbers - household goods, furniture, remains of food, machines from the eighth or ninth centuries (note that all dates relating to Atlantean times will be given according to Atlantean chronology). Some fabrics have survived and many works of art, mostly damaged, such as pottery, sculpture and paintings.

On the negative side, no finds have been made of human or animal bodies (though some preserved mummies exist), landscapes and gardens, and obviously the whole area east of Atlantis and Manralia is closed to us. Part of the former seas west of Atlantis, and also the "Helvengio" sea lie within our recoverable area, and this has allowed us to discover the remains of ports, parts of ships, and the cargoes of some vessels sunk at sea.

LITERARY EVIDENCE

We are here considering evidence of every aspect of Atlantean and other civilisations of the period discovered from writings, engravings, paintings, music and so on. Most of our literary knowledge comes from just four main discoveries of documents and remnants of libraries. But other important evidence can be adduced from chance finds of letters, coins and inscriptions.

1. Coins.

A few scattered coins have been found, most of which seem to have been buried in about 18 "caches", hidden in the ground by their owners at different times.

2. Inscriptions.

Only a few of these have been found, on tablets or in buildings, all of relatively minor interest. Funerary inscriptions are potentially more important, but again few have been unearthed hitherto.

3. Letters, bills and documents.

These have been found in scattered areas, surviving in sand or in decay-proof caves or holes. They are of great interest in giving us a picture of everyday life, though mostly only from the ninth century (Atlantean).

4. Books and manuscripts.

Though there are so far only four sites where these have been found, their importance cannot be overrated, and it is little exaggeration to say that our whole reconstruction of Atlantean history and art is based on the information provided by these finds. Recently, a few other finds have been made, which have been of exceptional importance with regard to the end of the Atlantean Empire.

The sites are as follows : firstly, a mass of documents deliberately buried in the 880s. These are close to the city of Atlantis, and a note in them states that the owner wished to preserve some literary treasures of Atlantis before all was destroyed by the ravages of the "barbarians" in the Final Wars of the 870 and 880s. Luckily for us most of them also survived the subsequent geological upheavals. The books include copies of many famous pieces of literature, as well as reproductions of paintings, and some general histories of Atlantis. For the purposes of discussing the books found in this site in the section Sources of Atlantean history, I shall use the abbreviation "A" for these documents.

A second cache consists in the remains of an old Atlantean library in the Province of Thoinen Thissaindix, taken over from Atlantis by the Southern Empire ("Rabarrïeh") around 800. This is overlaid with many Southern Empire documents and literary works, as well, which are still being translated. I abbreviate this library as "TT".

Thirdly, the remains of an old Manralian religious library has survived from western Manralia, evidently no longer used after about 740. It contains many Manralian and Helvran works of religion, philosophy and politics, as well as some Atlantean ones. This site will be abbreviated as "M".

Finally a part of the Great Library of Atlantis, badly damaged when Atlantis city was stormed in 888, has also come to light. The library was partly arranged chronologically according to the date of writing, and the surviving section is one that contains works from before 585. This part was below ground, and may well have been additionally protected in the 880s. It has provided us with valuable material on early Atlantean history. The abbreviation here is "GL".

Very recently, additional finds in the area of former Yciel Atlantis, or possibly Phonaria, have revealed notes apparently hidden by Atlantean refugees around 890, after the fall of Atlantis. Even more spectacular discoveries are now being made in the second site mentioned above, the library in Thoinen Thissaindix. These are hasty notes in Rabarran describing the fall of Atlantis from the Rabarran point of view, and then some separate, even briefer scribbles, perhaps written about 892, which relate to subsequent events within the former Atlantean Empire - fighting between Rabarran and Ughan troops, and the geological upheavals, which between them were evidently leading to the collapse of all order and civilisation.

Generally there has survived a considerable proportion of the acknowledged Atlantean literary classics, some miscellaneous music, a few technical works, and some Manralian, Helvran and S. Empire works. There are very few works in Chalcraan or any other language except for Eliossien. The history of the Atlantean Empire itself, over the centuries of its existence, can be filled in reasonable detail from all these sources, but some periods have much more written about them than do others. I give much more detail about these sources in the next section.

The history which I have written below is completely dependent on these incomplete sources (although more material is coming to light all the time), and for this reason some sections will be found to contain much more detail than others. Maps, too, as provided, are conjectural in many respects, especially for the more eastern and northern areas. Nevertheless, I feel that, despite its limitations, this history, the first of its kind ever written, will open the eyes of the present generation to the magnificent and tragic story of a civilisation whose very existence so nearly passed from the memory of mankind.

For more detail about the actual books discovered in the buried libraries and elsewhere, click on Sources of Atlantean history. This lists most of the Atlantean books themselves under various headings: general history, military history, literature, linguistics, philosophy and religion.

Prologue : the Peoples of the Great Continent before 200

THE EARLIEST EMPIRES

As far back into the mists of time as we are able to penetrate, there seem always to have been empires dominating large tracts of the Great Continent. As we delve back into the pre-Atlantean centuries, our information on the movements and residents of the peoples of the Continent becomes increasingly fitful. Our sources for these periods number three : archaeological survivals, written remains in the languages of these peoples, and historical reminiscences of later times, above all of the Atlanteans.

Using Atlantean chronology, which dates the theoretical beginnings of an Atlantean state to the year 0, we can venture back certainly as far as -1400 with some security. About that time, and in fact also for some centuries earlier, a vast tract of the continent was dominated by the Marossan Empire. This extended at its greatest extent from almost the eastern edge of the later Atlantean Empire north to include the subsequent Keltish areas, west into later Yciel Atlantis and Phonaria, and south to the Helvengio. However the western part of Atlantis itself, from the R.Rollepp to the west of the Lillerunix, plus the Numidis area of Helvrieh seems never to have been conquered by the Marossans. In Atlantean times there were still quite a number of impressive remains built by this people, especially in the NW. parts of the Continent, such as Marossan itself, and Phonaria. Quite a bit was also reconstructed of its language by the Atlanteans, mostly from inscriptions, names of places, and the study of Keltish, which was evidently a development of one particular dialect of Marossan. Thus we find in Atlantean times the mountain named Toill Caidhu in N.E. Marossan, where Toill is the Marossan word for Mountain , and Caidhu the Marossan for Old. The Keltish for these two words is Dol and Cadd, so the similarity is clear.

Some time just after -1400 the Marossan Empire disappeared, at least in part. Three new, smaller empires appear on the scene, all around the period -1400- -1300. These were the Dravedean Empire, which took over the later area of Chalcrieh, and further S.E. across the R. Gestes; the North Numedean Empire, which occupied the whole of later Helvrieh, Atlantidieh and the area of the Jutes; and finally the South Numedean Empire, which took over most of the area later ruled by Atlantis to the south of the Helvengio as far east as the R.Vulcan. This latter area was not in fact ever under the control of the Marossan Empire. The Dravideans, as well as the North and South Numedeans were evidently related, and the latter two languages were merely dialects of each other. Both later Jutish and Manralian were descendants respectively of North and South Numedean. As with Marossan, there remained into Atlantean times relics of these two empires, albeit less impressive than the Marossan ones - ruins, earthworks, and other archaeological features could be found in Numidis in the north, and Numedeas and other areas of the south. The original N.Numedean peoples later fled to Numidis and the N.W. parts of Atlantis when the Juralic invasions took place, while S. Numedean peoples became intermingled in the south with folk of Southern stock, and later on with Atlantean settlers. Many examples of the speech of the Numedeans can be found in place-names, for example Daigorunix in Numidis, where Daigor represents N.Numedean Doigos, old; and Numaipson, east of Numedeas in the south, where the first element is of course Numedean, and Ipson is Opson, the Numedean for Hill.

Ruins of a Numedeian building

The Dravedean peoples, whose empire bordered both the North and the South Numedeans, appear to have been somewhat distantly related to the Numedeans. This is most clear from their language, -of which we have the usual old fragmentary remains, but also slightly more continuous extracts preserved by the Atlanteans, as the Dravedean people itself survived fairly intact for centuries after 0, although its language died out soon after 500. An example would be the name of the wood Taucafembe where the element Tauca, meaning Old, is related to Daigos, Old in N.Numedeian (see above).

The final collapse of the old Marossan Empire must have come after -1200. The Kelts had already been living in the mountainous areas of the north for a long time, occupying that northern area between the Cresskor and the Nundor mountains, where they were to remain ever after. They themselves always denied they were originally Marossans, but their religion and culture was obviously closely related to the Marossans', and their language, as we know it in later times, is descended from Marossan. They were probably divided into two groups, the Northern and the Western, right from the beginning.

Around -900 the Liossan peoples appeared on the scene, descending to the west of the area occupied by the Kelts most probably from the NW. They were in three interrelated groups in later years, and the beginnings of this division probably go back to this time. The Eliossiens settled north and south of the R.Ereipha, the Phonerians in later Yciel Atlantis and the islands thereabouts, while the Lio-Marossans moved south of the R. Ruphaio as far as the R. Noilofa. All three peoples became great traders and sailors, especially the Phonerians, and the latter in due course made settlements on the large island of Phonaria. The fact that these peoples were originally one is clearly to be seen in their languages, which are obviously related, and go back to an earlier Old Liossan. The word for Hill for example is Leyassa in Eliossien, Lias(s)o in Lio-Marossan, and laso in Phonerian (cf. the town named Atalaso ). The Liossans remained in their original areas into Atlantean times, and different groupings of people gained hegemony over the others at various times. After about 150, there developed a Marossan empire, in which the Lio-Marossans took over Eliossie and the mainland Phonerians, and it was with this empire that Atlantis first came into conflict in the First Phonerian War.

THE ARRIVAL OF THE JURALIC PEOPLES

The earliest history of the Juralic people is shrouded in mist and legend, and it is extremely difficult to distinguish genuine historical truth from the legends with which Atlantis in particular was wont to drape over her pre-Imperial days. Atlantean stories tended to give the early Atlantean peoples a disproportionately important and indeed aggressive role in relation to other nations with which they came in contact. Moreover these myths, which formed the basis of the Atlantean Imperial religion, claimed that Atlantis established an heroic empire over vague areas of the Great Continent after she and the other Juralic peoples had overcome the Dravedean and Numedeans. This too is a gross exaggeration, indeed travesty of the facts.

In reality virtually nothing is known of the Juralic people at all before about -400, when they suddenly burst on the scene across the Gestix Mountains, and attack the Dravedean and S. Numedeans. It is clear from anthropological and linguistic research that the Juralic people were originally one group, which split into different linguistic and obviously geographic sub-groups after about -900. It is agreed that at about that stage the Juralic language began a process of change whereby it split into three main groups: Atlanchalcric, Old Helvrans and Old Yalland. These languages correspond to the later Atlantean and Chalcrans (still linked together at this stage), the Helvrans and the Yallands. The languages continued to develop and change over the following centuries, becoming more and more separate, as each underwent different phonological changes. Most notably, Atlanchalcric split into Early Atlantean and Early Chalcrans around -500. Throughout this period, until the migrations after -400, we know next to nothing concrete about the Juralics, and of their languages, we possess only a few stone-carved inscriptions, and some debatable evidence from place-names east of the Gestix Mountains. After the great invasions, we do also possess a few fragmentary grammars and word-lists written down by the Numedeans at the time and preserved in part by later Atlantean and Chalcrans linguists. In addition historical linguistical techniques have been able to reconstruct early forms of the Juralic languages from their later versions.

The cause of the sudden irruption of the Juralics west from the Gestix Mountains after -400 seems to have been pressure from the east by nomadic tribes. This was a pattern, at any rate, which would repeat itself in later years. It is also generally agreed, and vociferously championed by the Helvrans themselves in ancient times, that the Helvrans people, who may have been placed to the east of the Chalcrans and the Yallands, themselves then pushed west and in turn forced the other Juralic peoples to move. Certainly, also, to judge by the quantity of Old Helvran roots in the Atlantean, and to a lesser extent, Chalcran vocabulary, all of which date from the period prior to about -350, the Helvrans did indeed have a considerable sway over both these peoples at this time.

The Atlanteans always claimed they began the attacks on the Dravedean empire to the west, but in truth it seems to have been the Chalcrans who crossed the River Gestes in its middle course, with the Helvrans to their left in the Borepande region. At the same time, the Yallands moved south-west over the River Vulcan and struck the South Numedeans. As for the Atlanteans, they were probably involved in a minimum of fighting, and moved in great measure round the northern edge of the Dravedean empire through the Chalcran Forests.

It happened that at this time the Dravedean and South Numedeans were themselves at war and fighting across the River Vulcan. This must be one reason why the attacks of the Juralics seem to have been so quickly successful. The Dravedean empire collapsed within a very short time, perhaps eight to ten years, and the Chalcrans and Helvrans swarmed over its territory. The Chalcrans proceeded to settle to the north and west of the Crolde Mountains, there coming into conflict with the North Numedeans. The Helvrans moved south-westward and ultimately also collided with the Numedeans on the River Cresslepp. The Helvrans, and also the Atlanteans who were passing right round the north of Lake Chalcris, were evidently unwilling to settle to the east, and so began to attack the North Numedeans, along with the Chalcrans in the centre. This campaign probably took a long time, as the North Numedeans were in good shape, but in the end numbers must have told, and the Numedeans were either conquered or pushed further and further westwards, eventually ending up in the extreme south-west and north-west of Atlantis (note the name of the area Numidis in the south-west.) The Chalcrans now took over the eastern part of the defeated empire, the Helvrans occupied the area south of the Meilox Mountains, while the Atlanteans again sidled round the northern flank. They then settled in two main areas, each fairly distinct from each other: the area west of the River Bore, where the core of the kingdom of Atlantis would later emerge, and the region on either side of the River Rollepp, later to become the core of the Atlantid city-states.

Meanwhile to the south of the Helvengjö, the Yallands were fighting and migrating altogether separately from the other peoples. Having taken over the eastern part of the South Numedeans, some settled here and would later develop the Yalland City-states. Others continued to move west and south-west, the latter moving into desert areas which were never under the control of the Numedeans, but which were occupied by tribes and groups of Southern peoples. These Yallands moved down the valleys of the rivers Itheerdi and Gosal and some reached the mouth of the river Gosal, where they settled by the later city of Siphia, on the coast. The other migrants moved over many decades all through the Numedeans, settling along the south coast of the Helvengjö and throughout the northern part of the area later to be the Coastal City-states. Unlike their northern neighbours, the Yallands seem to have been less aggressive towards their Numedeans, and a pattern emerged of settlements and towns of both nationalities growing up side by side. The original indigenous Southern peoples were also able to live alongside their new neighbours. In later years, it is true, there would be tension and conflict between all three communities, not to mention later Helvran and Atlantean colonisers, but it is remarkable how different the situation was north of the Helvengjö, where the Dravedeans were reduced to a peasantry, completely intermingled with their former subjects.

The situation of the North Numedeans must have been even worse, as all trace of them in the central parts of their former empire has disappeared by around 200-300, and they linger on virtually unrecognised only in the coastal north- and south-western parts of Atlantis. Their greatest influence on their successors was simply to leave traces of their language in place-names here and there. There was one important exception to the general assimilation or massacre of the North Numedeans, and this was the Jutish people. In their remote and mountainous peninsula they were never overrun by any of the Juralic peoples, and thus they preserved their way of life and their language, which was a dialect of N.Numedeans, for centuries to come.

THE ESTABLISHMENT OF THE JURALIC PEOPLES

By about -300, all the Juralic people were in roughly the areas they would be occupying centuries hence in historical times. They continued to drift apart culturally and linguistically, although trade began to develop in due course between themselves and with other peoples. Linguists denote the forms of their speech after -200 (or -250 for the Yallands) with different titles to the languages as they were spoken prior to this time. Very significant sound-changes occurred to these languages just before and during the invasions, and the forms of them after -200 are quite different to their earlier manifestations. The Yalland, Helvran and Chalcran languages now develop the characteristics they will have right up to their confrontations with the Atlanteans after 250, which in the cases of Chalcran and ultimately Helvran would lead to their extinction. Atlantean itself changed again quite radically after about 300, when it is officially dubbed Imperial Atlantean.

As for the history of these peoples between -300 and the foundation of the Atlantean Empire in 200, our sources remain very sparse, most particularly so for the Atlanteans themselves, who had plenty of legends and stories, but very few hard facts. We gather that the Atlanteans near the western coast gradually spread inland and formed themselves into city-states and after 0 into bigger groupings of cities run by nobles or kings. There was a major war between the two main settlements of Atlanteans, round Atlantis itself and west of the Lillerunx and Dallase Fembe, which was won by the latter probably around 166. Traditionally this was seen as the conquering of a more pacific and artistic strain of Atlanteans by a more vigorous and aggressive type, leading to a somewhat uneasy amalgam of the two characteristics in the later unified Atlantean nation. This probably mythologises what was doubtless a very ordinary war, and may represent an "after the event" attempt to account for the rather contradictory traits of the Atlantean people. In any case there followed various wars between the Atlantean kings and subordinate nobles until in 199 Lir-Craonos overcame all his enemies and became the first Atlantean Emperor. Other Atlantean settlements remained completely independent of the rising kingdom, most notably the Atlantid city-states to the east of the River Rollepp.

To their east, a multitude of Chalcran states grew up from the lakes Chalcris and Oncia east to the Croiden Mountains, and north to the Chalcran Forests and the Keltish areas. These were at least as highly civilised as the Atlanteans by 150 or 200, and represented a kaleidoscopic array of forms of government, generally republics in the south, and kingdoms in the north. Their language and religion, though originally the same as the Atlanteans' of course, had now become quite different, although still obviously related.

In the south, the Yalland communities grew no larger than cities or city-states, usually close to similar Numedean and Southern settlements, with which they were intermittently at war. More often they formed trading relations with each other, and it was as traders that the Yallands became best known. Their main settlements were in the northern part of the western Coastal city-states, and in the Yalland city-states between the rivers Vulcan and Gairase. They also had smaller settlements all along the southern coast of the Helvengio.

There is no doubt that the Juralic people which was most successful initially was the Helvran. This warlike people had by -50 already developed into a strongly centralised and militarily successful empire, ruled by an absolute and very traditional monarchy. By 150 their powerful army and strong fleet had dominated the Helvengio, and conquered an empire out of the lands surrounding this sea. These included Manralia, the northern Coastal city-states, some areas north of the Meilox Mountains, and nominally at least, the Jutes. This empire would meet its match when it encountered the rising Atlanteans after 250, but only after a long and hard-fought struggle.

The link below will give a brief description of the Great Continent as described by Carel Zuaippo, a travel writer of the fourth century.

CERÏEH ENUL

THE FIRST EMPIRE

199 - 361

1: The Founding of the Atlantean State : Lir-Craonos and Carel I, 199-249.

The Founding Father : Lir-Craonos, 199-214.

It was in 166 that the Atlantis finally succeeded in unifying various small states, each run by the local nobles. The resulting large state became a kingdom, but in the 190's it was plunged into civil war as some of the nobles sought to overthrow the king and regain their ancient rights. The noble who won the war and inherited the whole kingdom was Lir-Craonos.

Within months of his succession Lir-Craonos, hitherto just a king (or "Duicco") declared Atlantis an Empire, and himself the first Emperor ("Cerex"). It is from this moment that the First Atlantean Empire, and indeed the whole history of Atlantis was generally reckoned to date. Before this time, indeed, we have no true history of Atlantis, but from now on an increasingly bright historical light illumines the tale of Emperors and people. Lir-Craonos, though an important person and later revered as the founder of the Atlantean Empire, is known really only through doubtful stories, myths and legends. His achievements are debatable but certainly they concerned establishing stability after the earlier years of turmoil.

During his reign he set about eliminating all potential rivals, and executed or banished all those who had not already been killed in the civil wars. All remaining important nobles were banished to their estates, and only about twelve were allowed to retain their traditional but much abused right of maintaining private armies - and then no larger than 5000 men at most. Lir-Craonos reduced quite considerably the authority of the great land-owning nobility and fostered lower-class nobles or townspeople to run local government.

Lir-Craonos spread his relations over all areas of the Empire, and was able to maintain his rule by relying on their support. He also appropriated a great deal of land for the crown, and by 214 Lir-Craonos was much the greatest land-owner of the Empire. We have records of a couple of revolts by individual aristocrats, but these came to romantic but disastrous conclusions.

As a person, Lir-Craonos was evidently a large and imposing man, given to sudden outbursts of anger. He could be cruel and forgiving by turns, and his character is generally agreed to have been devious and unfathomable and certainly never predictable. He died in 214 as a result of a horse-riding accident, and the succession passed smoothly and according to his wishes to his nephew Carel I, then aged 29.

The Creator of the Atlantean State : Carel I, 214-249

THE GREATEST OF THE EARLY EMPERORS

Carel I was always regarded by later Atlantean historians as the great founding-father of the Atlantean state, and the noblest of the Emperors of the First Empire. It was he who established the great liberal tradition in government, politics, law and the arts, which runs like a thread through all later Atlantean history, and was emulated especially by the great Second Empire emperors from Atlaniphon I onwards. Certainly Carel's character was very different from that of his uncle. He was of medium height, with sensitive features, great intelligence, and a tremendous intellectual curiosity in all fields - law, politics, geography, languages, religion, philosophy and the arts. He surrounded himself with able executives and also with an amazing variety of scholars, priests, foreigners, travellers and artists. He treated everyone as an equal with regard to their own brains and skills, and often shocked his conservative courtiers by his philosophical interests, religious speculation, political changes, and liberalisation of the law.

HIS ACHIEVEMENTS

His reforms were many and varied. In religion, he gradually reduced the great power of the priesthood. This was particularly true in the realms of moral law (adultery, theft, violence, blasphemy, etc.), where he eased many cases out of the prerogative of the priesthood and into civil law-courts. This was largely due to the influence of the philosopher-lawyers who surrounded him at court. These men included Liclencu, the first known non-religious philosopher, and Thulpas, the great legalist, who flourished in the 220's and 230's. They were seeking to understand how social life could be regulated by law rather than by religious precept. Carel always evinced intense interest in liberal religion, and was fascinated by the details of religious heresies, new faiths, such as Naturism (Natural Religion) which emerged in Helvrïeh in the 230's, and astrology.

Law was the nub of Carel's social reforms. In 221 he abolished human sacrifice in religious ceremonies, and in 224 set up courts of justice (the Royal Courts) throughout the country. In 223 he made all citizens, including himself, equal before the law (in principle), and abolished slavery. He also set up a regular system of local government, based on a number of large towns, and placed the organisation of taxation in the hands of newly founded counties. The first parliament, of sorts, was created in 246 when the Great Council for Atlantis was set up, initially purely as an advisory body. He also began the building of a great Imperial Palace in the northern part of Atlantis city, and improved the capital's harbour facilities.

In foreign affairs Carel was chiefly concerned to spread his ideas on social welfare and progress and the rule of law to the Atlanteans of the Atlantid City States. This was achieved peacefully in the 230's and 240's, and many City States formed close alliances with Atlantis. In 244 some were united in a separate Province (Atlantidïeh) with an Atlantean Governor. These states happily accepted the civil benefits of union, which included full citizenship rights in the western states after 248, but the county taxation system led to some opposition.

WARS OF THE REIGN

The only real war of the reign was the First Phonerian War of 241-245. This was due largely to Phonerian raiding Atlantean territory, and Carel really only wished to teach the Phonerians a lesson - he was one of the least imperialistic of all First Empire Emperors. The Phonerians, who, like all the Lio-Marossan states, were a sea-faring and trading republic, and at this point were led by a man called Eiruton Ouphote, The war was hardly successful for the Atlanteans, and ended with only minor territorial gains in NW. Atlantidieh, and the agreement by both sides for specific limits on trade and travel.

Further conflict potential developed in the later 240's with the Helvran Empire, as Atlantis tried to "reclaim" Atlanteans in the south Atlantid City States, the Rundes area, and the River Fellepp border, all of which were seen by the Helvrans as part of their empire, or at least as subservient satellites or independent buffer states. "Illegal" trade with the Coastal City States of the Helvran Empire by Atlantean merchants also caused tension, and diplomatic exchanges in 247-8 were becoming increasingly fraught. Then in 248, very suddenly, Carel I fell gravely ill, and within three days he was dead.

Carel II, 249-252.

THE SCANTY EVIDENCE OF THE EMPEROR'S PERSONALITY

Carel I's designated successor was his son, Carel II, who was 39 years old in 249. His short reign was dominated by the war against Helvris, and a disastrous series of defeats leading to the death of the Emperor himself. As a person, we have little information about Carel. He was evidently not gifted militarily and left fighting to his generals until his first and last appearance on a battlefield at Cennis in 252. He seems to have been dominated by his younger brother, who fought in the war, was made his heir, but was also killed at the battle of Cennis. Carel is said to have had some artistic pretensions, and later writers also embroidered tales around his love-life. One girl - friend died in 249, and in 251 he fell in love again, but never married as he was killed next year at Cennis. Such is the threadbare narrative of Carel's private life; but in any case everything was dominated by foreign affairs.

The quarrels between Atlantis and Helvris, mentioned above, came to a head in 250. War was largely due to the Helvran Emperor's refusal to put up with an overbearing neighbour on his northern border. Carel, though somewhat colourless as a person, was stubborn over his refusal to give way on Helvris's demands, and he was backed by a warlike clique at court. In fact the outcome of any major war between the two empires seemed certain to be victory to the Helvrans. They had a huge empire all around the Helvengio of ten million people, and an army of 70000 in peacetime and 120000 in war. This army was a veteran and well-trained force, whose main tactical weapon was its use of phalanxes of bristling pikes. To oppose this force, the Atlanteans had in peacetime virtually no army, although a sizeable force could and was raised in wartime. Things were initially very ad hoc, and it is clear that Atlantis at first only expected a few small-scale fights, to trounce the Helvrans, and then a satisfactory peace-treaty. When it became clear that the war was going to be longer, harder and far more dangerous than had ever been expected, Atlantis finally put all her powers to raising a strong, disciplined and well-generalled army. By 260 this was 135000 strong. At sea, too, the Helvrans had an unsurpassed navy of some 300 oared ships in the Helvengio, based at Giezuat and elsewhere. The Atlanteans had only some 75 ships on 248, but again by dint of furious efforts this total was increased to over 200 by 255.

THE HELVRAN WAR

(This is a summary version: a detailed history is given here: The Helvran War )

War began late in 250 after a series of small skirmishes. To the Atlanteans, this great conflict would be simply the "War with the Helvans" ("Crehei ante Helvranix"), but the Helvrans afterwards named it the "War of the Heroes" ("Vulgenel Greux" in Helvran). An Atlantean army invaded (Helvran) Numidis in 251, but was beaten back, while a Helvran force took Rundes. The Helvrans now prepared an army of 30000 men in Numidis which invaded Atlantis in 252. After one defeat near the River Fellepp, Carel himself joined the army. There followed the in August the Battle of Cennis.

This proved to be a crushing defeat for the Atlanteans, and its army lost 10000 men, including the Emperor himself. Fortunately the Helvrans made no attempt to advance on to the capital, although its navy did move up to institute a brief blockade.

Carel III, 253 - 261.

THE EMPEROR

We know little about Carel as a person, other than that he was very dark, tall, with piercing blue eyes, but not very robust in health. He was very young - only 19- when he came to the throne, and 27 when he died. He never married and seems to have made no attempt to provide for an heir in the case of his own death : this would lead to trouble when he did die unexpectedly.

Carel found time to carry out a lot of building work within the Atlantis city during his reign. These included a new temple, as well as improvements to the harbour defences of the port. He also created a considerable military base on the island ("Atlano Mandengio") across the narrow channel from the city of Atlantis. This island had hitherto been inhabited by a religious community, with a number of holy sites and temples. It also had a small port for the Atlantean navy, opposite Atlantis city itself. The war with Helvris gave the island a vital strategic role to Atlantis, and henceforth it would always contain a military garrison, and also developed into the main naval base for the Empire named "Mandengatlan."

The war with Helvris dominated Carel III's reign, and Carel himself, a more able administrator than his uncle, managed gradually to find more capable generals and ministers to run the war. One of these was Cao-Melion, Carel III's cousin, who was only 24 in 253 but already a gifted war-leader. He would later become Carel's successor. From 253 general military training and some conscription was introduced, and by 258 the first long-serving, professional and paid army was in being.

THE HELVRANS' EARLY SUCCESSES

The war with Helvris see-sawed to and fro for the first years of Carel's reign. After their victory at Cennis, the Helvran army leisurely advanced on Atlantis itself, but the Atlanteans had managed to concentrate an army of 22000 men on the Algrunix to defend the capital. The Helvrans attacked with 30000 men but were unable to storm the strong Atlantean defences. (First battle of the Algrunix). They then retired back south across the river Fellepp.

Atlantis tried unsuccessfully in 254 to get Helvris to agree to a peace-treaty, but the war went on, now with an Atlantean army taking Lillouth and advancing to besiege Ugholtis (as it would later be named). This siege became a set-piece in 255, but was later broken by a Helvran relief army forcing the Atlanteans back to Lillouth. To the east, Helvran forces occupied the whole of S.W.Atlantidieh.

In 256 the Helvrans again forced the Atlanteans back from Lillouth. Now Carel III personally took command, united two armies to a total of 41000 men and held the Helvrans to a draw when they attacked at the Battle of Yeldis. At the same time, in the east, the Atlanteans retook Gentes after a siege.

This can be said to end the first part of the war. The Helvrans would never again make incursions into Atlantean territory, and Atlantis now took the initiative in a second phase which lasted till 261.

ATLANTIS TAKES THE INITIATIVE

Over the next four years, the Atlanteans gradually reconquered south Atlantidieh. In the centre around Lillouth there was something of a stalemate, and not until 260 was Lillouth retaken by the Atlanteans. At sea, however, the Atlanteans gained the upper hand by defeating a Helvran fleet off the Cressix Mandengix islands, which now became a permanent Atlantean naval base. With their command of the sea now assured, the Atlanteans landed an expeditionary force of 18000 men in Numidis in 258. The following year, after their forces in Numidis had been increased to 45000, 25000 of them were moved amphibiously to Mjolrel on the south of the Helvengjö in the W.City States. This led in 260 to the rebellion of many of these cities, and their espousal of the Atlantean cause. Rebellions, too, broke out in Manralia, which was a partially independent kingdom in the Helvran Empire, with its own religion and religious hierarchy, which went right back to the South Numedeans.

It seems that by 259 and 260 the Atlanteans had groped towards their strategy for ultimately defeating Helvris. They clearly planned to foment or encourage rebellions in Helvris' southern provinces by landing Atlantean forces there, and then, gaining naval command of the Helvengio, strike right to the heart of the Helvran Empire at Giezuat and Helvris themselves.

THE CAPTURE AND DEATH OF THE EMPEROR

However there now, in 260-1, occurred some major defeats which imperilled the whole of this strategy. In 260 the Helvrans defeated the Atlanteans in a sortie from their naval base at Giezuat in the First Naval Battle of Giezuat. Then in 261, as an Atlantean army of 40000 men advanced from Numidis on Cennetis across the River Numeras, it was taken by surprise half-way across and defeated with the loss of 19000 men. Most serious of all, Carel III, who was leading this force, was injured and captured. This was in September. Carel was subsequently badly treated by his captors and died in December.

"Ceriul thaidiens annienayun e dao": The Imperial Clock maker and god : Atlaniphon I, 361 - 409

THE AIMS AND IDEALS OF ATLANIPHON I

Iustus Atlaniphon I was the first of the Emperors to be given a throne-name (Atlaniphon), a practice which most subsequent emperors followed. He came to power as a result of the civil wars of the previous few years, and was supported chiefly by the Civil Governors, Class 2s, plus the "middle classes" of the main towns. Atlaniphon, in a series of measures, now deliberately reduced the powers of the Military Governors of the Empire, and instituted a proper Imperial government, based on the Controllers, who formed a sort of Inner Cabinet with the Emperor, overriding the Civil and Military Governors of the Provinces.

Atlaniphon came to see his own role, partly through the influence of political philosophers of the time, as one which involved minimum interference in the way the Empire was run. He liked to call the Empire a gigantic clock, and saw himself as a sort of imperial clock maker, who only needed to interfere very occasionally with the running of the empire, which should be able to work almost automatically, just like a clock. (Note that clocks, as such, had quite recently been invented, and were large, cumbersome, spring-driven affairs in this period.)

"Iustus aiseathe ena dao, per ca exehe, ena ditehesuya dao. Teahē en can ca damuasierathe ceriehesil"

"I shall be a god, but if possible, an inactive god. I shall act only if something goes wrong in the Empire."

(Atlaniphon I, 362) [Note the classical use of the third person in the original Atlantean.]

In particular, he set up the Court of Ethics in 368, led by the "Chief Philosopher of Atlantis". This body was manned by a number of eminent thinkers, philosophers and divines, and was to act as a Court of Appeal, a "think-tank", especially on legal matters, and, most famously, a judge of all new inventions (e.g. gunpowder, print, steam power) and forms of art and behaviour. It had the power, with the Emperor's approval, to ban or censor, - or approve - any of these things. Despite this ideal, Atlaniphon kept a firm grip on the government, along with his personally chosen Advisers. The Council, and the Court of Ethics, were intended to act as counterbalances to an over strong and over-centralised government (i.e. the Emperor, his Advisers and the Controllers), but in fact they lacked any real, independent powers.

Atlaniphon himself was a highly cultured man, typical of the best of his class at this time. He was a true polymath, highly educated and enlightened, in the sense that he followed the up-to-date philosophers of the period in accepting nothing on trust. In religion, he was a sceptic, like most of the upper classes, though he believed religion was necessary and useful for the population as a whole, and that it served as backing for morality. He thought that the government should not interfere in people's private lives, nor with their political opinions any more than was necessary, and he was himself liberal and tolerant according to the standards of the time. Nevertheless, like most "enlightened" rulers in all periods of history, he applied this tolerance more to his own upper class than to the vast majority of the population of the Empire. Certainly this period, and especially this Emperor's reign, was looked back on in later years, as the greatest and most glorious period in Atlantis' whole history.

THE EMPIRE EXPANDS TOWARDS ITS NATURAL BORDERS

Atlaniphon believed whole-heartedly in the mission of Atlantis to extend its empire and the benefits of its rule as widely as possible, at least as far as its natural borders (i.e. the Gestix mountains in the east, the great deserts in the south). Though he himself rarely led or even accompanied his armies, as he did not consider this to be the role of the Emperor in his new order, he nevertheless oversaw the expansion of the Empire eastwards and southwards with efficient armies led by a number of brilliant generals, of whom Giallonni was perhaps the greatest. New Provinces were created - Yallandix Thissandix, Meistayieh, Nunkeltanieh and Dravidieh, and the Atlanteans came up against the formidable Ughans, led by their emperor, Yrultzik, in wars in the 390s.

Atlaniphon did not wish to be a destroyer - on the contrary, he wanted to be seen by posterity as a creator, and he oversaw and encouraged the rebuilding and improvement of many Atlantean and Chalcran cities. These included a great new Palace and government offices, as a summer residence for the Emperor and Court, in what was soon to become Cennatlantis ("New Atlantis") hundreds of miles inland from Atlantis city itself. He also built new roads throughout his expanding Empire, created a new naval base at Meisting in Th.Thiss to protect the Empire's southern Provinces, and set up lighthouses, dockyards and harbours all round the coasts. He was particularly keen on memorial statues and monuments, thereby initiating a trend which would continue throughout the history of the Empire. He had many monuments put up around the fringes of the Empire, extolling the virtues of Atlantean civilisation, and also as memorials to those Atlantean soldiers killed in the wars to expand the Empire.

Atlaniphon wished above all to be tolerant to the customs of the many different peoples now within the Empire, especially those of Juralic background. One of his particular passions was for languages, and apart from learning all four main Juralic tongues, as well as the basics of Keltish and Phonerian, he maintained a great interest in the survival of these languages. In particular in 372-3, he finally removed all restrictions on the use of the Helvran language, as well as many other political limitations, he gave the province full citizenship in 372), which dated back to the victory of the Atlanteans in the Helvran War a century earlier. Of course, Atlantean remained the language of government and the ruling classes throughout the Empire, but from now on, Helvran (and Chalcran and Yalland) were used freely in local government, literature, and names of people and places. Indeed, most imperial and provincial government documents and decrees were deliberately issued in one or more of these local languages, as well as Atlantean, until the 530s. The local tongue of the citizens of the future Cennatlantis was Chalcran, but after the 530s it was ignored, and despite a revival in the time of the Republicans, it declined to extinction in the seventh century. .

ATLANIPHON I's PRIVATE LIFE - THE RELATIONSHIP WITH CARAYA

Atlaniphon I was married twice, the first time in 355 when he was 21. This seems to have been a genuine love-match, though little is known about it, partly because his first wife died very young (only 26) in 360, leaving no children, and partly because of the more interesting romantic entanglements of Atlaniphon's later life. He remarried in 366, his wife this time being a "suitably" well-bred young woman from the family of one of his closest Advisers. This wife had four children, two daughters, and two sons, the eldest being Lasso, in 374. The whole family was deliberately not kept in courtly isolation, as was the practice of earlier Emperors. Imperial sons and nephews and cousins were placed in the Empire's governmental structure as Advisers or Governors, or on the military staff. The Council did object to such nepotism, from time to time, but Atlaniphon ignored such criticism, and in view of his increasing popularity over the years, opposition dwindled away. It did, however, lead to true nepotism under later Emperors.

The Emperor's home life appeared conventional enough, and he certainly retained a real affection for his wife, and their children, all his life. However he had another love in his life, famously and endlessly retold by historians and dramatists of later generations. In his own lifetime, though, this liaison was kept completely secret, certainly from the public at large, but also from his own family (although it is generally accepted his wife knew of it in later years). He came to know, and soon love the novelist Suyosa Caraya (344-407). Caraya was a very talented author, who virtually invented the psychological novel of character, from what had been merely short stories up until the 360s. She founded a school of novelists, nearly all of whom were women, as a sort of opposition to the generally accepted (male) traditional literary art-forms of poetry and drama. Atlaniphon was himself very interested in all the arts, and thus had ample chance to spend time alone with Caraya. He became so infatuated with her after 374, that he asked her to marry him, proposing to divorce his wife.

Caraya, however, had entanglements of her own, which the Emperor was not at first aware of. Firstly she too was married, with a family of, ultimately, 5 children. Secondly she, like Atlaniphon, also had a secret relationship of her own, which went back to 368, with an up-and-coming philosopher, who from 370 was a member of the Court of Ethics. Caraya refused to abandon her husband for the Emperor, but was willing for their secret relationship to continue - as it did until her death 30 years later. Atlaniphon accepted her decision. Later he came to know of her own secret liaison, and this at first greatly shocked and upset him, especially as she admitted that she had had a child by him, which was being brought up as one of her family, and as if the child were hers by her husband. Again Atlaniphon came to accept the situation, for the sake of Caraya, whom he knew to be greatly in love with this man, - but was equally in love with Atlaniphon himself. Atlaniphon showed his true magnanimity in 383, when Caraya's lover was elected to become the new "Chief Philosopher" of the Court of Ethics. The Emperor could so easily have forbidden this out of pique or jealousy, But he allowed the election to go ahead. What is more, he took his advice, after 405, on subordinating the Chief Justice, and hence the whole legal system to the Court of Ethics.

Caraya died in 407 (and the Emperor's wife had died earlier in 405). Atlaniphon then seems to have lost interest in life, and almost quietly slipped away in 409, literally beloved and revered by the whole Empire.

1 : The Establishment of the Republic, 591 – 610

THE EMPIRE SPLIT BETWEEN REPUBLICANS AND IMPERIALISTS

After the execution of the Emperor Crehonorex in 591, the Republicans in power in Atlantis knew, and exulted in the fact that they had burnt their boats. There could be no going back now - it was all or nothing, the Republic or death. Pranonni, the Leader of the Council, now stretched every nerve to organise the Provinces under Republican control, and all their inhabitants to achieve victory over the Imperialists on the battlefield, and the establishment of a true Republican system of government.

Between 591 and 592, the Republican armies advanced steadily eastwards through Chalcrëih I, conquering nearly all the Province. But in the end, the Imperialists regained their morale, and with superior numbers and larger, heavier forces pressed the Republicans back westwards later in 592 and 593. The Republicans found that the advantages that their lighter, more mobile, and more enthusiastic forces had over the demoralised Imperialists in the earlier years, was of less avail to them now, as the battles became more in the way of slugging matches, in which numbers, weight and experience told most. The Republicans fell back to some earthworks and small fortifications, which had been built years earlier to protect Cennatlantis from an attack from the east. The Imperialists were unable to progress any further, and in early 593 began to settle themselves in entrenched camps opposite their enemy, a mile or so to the east.

Fighting continued in other Provinces of the Empire, however. Between Lakes Chalcris and Oncia, the Republicans held on to the fortress of Gasiroto, and also Encetes to the north-west of Lake Chalcris. In the north of the Empire, several Provincial Governors had tried to remain neutral in the conflict, maintaining a vague loyalty to the Imperialist government, but without committing troops to fight the Republicans. The Emperor Norro (formerly General Lingon of the Imperialists) now reasserted his control. In 593 he replaced the Governor of Nunchalcrëih and occupied it with loyal troops. He also pressurised Naokeltanëih, but was forced to fight for this Province, as Republican troops had occupied much of the west of it. By 595, the whole Province was in Imperialist hands, as, after another year, was the north of Nundatlantidëih, as far as the Decanda Runix (mountains). By 599, after years of campaigning, Marossan also fell to the Imperialists, leaving Yciel Atlantis perilously isolated as a republican outpost between Imperialist Marossan and Phoneria. In the south, Manralia was gained completely for the Republicans after some more fighting, but the Province of Th. Thiss. was split north/south between the two sides, Finally, in Meistayëih, the Republicans advanced from Helvrëih as far as the rivers Burtounna and Helvenslepp. After this, there was little more serious fighting for at least a decade. Both sides protected their lines with entrenchments and fortifications, and carried out occasional manoeuvres to take a particular position which might give their side an advantage, or distract the enemy from its own plans. Usually such a move would be countered by a parallel stroke by the other side somewhere else on the front, and rather as in a game of chess, this ended the campaign, often without any serious fighting. In fact this suited both sides at least until around 610: the Republicans wanted a peaceful co-existence in order to firmly establish republicanism in the west, while the Imperialists required stability to prevent their state fragmenting and to ward off increasing attacks from barbarians and other states.

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE REPUBLIC

"Ian teheans siurg theh atlanan sinateyun"

"Now we shall begin the building of the Atlantean Republic."

(Pranonni, 591)

Note that Pranonni was Chalcran and proud of it, and during his time in power, he tried to revive the Chalcran language, and make it of equal standing with Atlantean in the government. He regularly used it for his speeches, and the original statement above was made in Chalcran, viz:

"Ian silogiranni tech atlane sarinalle."

Until 594, Pranonni remained Leader of the Council, and the radical and religious party ruled the Republic. In 591, immediately following the execution of Crehonorex, a new constitution for the Republic had been drawn up and agreed by Gorzen Proinen, a well-known female politician, and Giesti, who would become Honorary Leader of the Republic, as it was now called, after the fall of Pranonni in 594. The constitution was much more democratic than ever before in Atlantis. The republican Empire was governed by the Inner Council, members of which were elected by the Council of Government, which itself was elected by local, district and provincial assemblies. The Inner Council also appointed twelve "Atlantean Leaders", five of whom were the most senior, and one of whom was supreme, as the Leader of the Republic. As a group, these Leaders guarded the Republic and supervised the constitution and the law. The five senior Leaders were responsible for the Provinces, the Armed Forces, Finance, Foreign Affairs, and Home Affairs (the latter being the responsibility of the Leader of the Republic himself). The executive arm of government, including the civil service, were chosen from the higher assemblies and the Council, with the heads being appointed by the Leaders. The army was under the direct control of an Atlantean Leader.

The constitution aimed to allow all citizens complete freedom of thought, action and belief, and the equality of all before the law. The old Class system was completely abolished in 592, and all the practices and beliefs of the old elite of the Second Empire were discouraged or actively abolished. The liberal side to this republican government was most in evidence before 591 and between 595 and 600. While Pranonni was in control, especially after 591, the Council was dominated by a very radical and religious group. These enforced their views on the country. They placed a priority on fighting the war, and also abolishing all traces of the old Imperialist regime. All aspects were affected: the State Religion was discouraged, in favour of the republicans' own religious beliefs. All art-forms of the old days were disapproved of, especially esoteric art and also the more traditional art-forms of the Empire - Total Works of Art, landscape gardening, dramatic landscapes and wargame landscapes - all ceased by 600. A number of artists of the old era were killed in this period. Buomusse, a great writer of hermetic poetry and prose, and an ardent Imperialist was killed in 589. Giestizzi, a Chalcran composer of hermetic music, was executed for refusing to write music that suited his Republican masters in 608. Only popular and nationalistic works of art were encouraged.

The most notable feature of the period between 587 and 600 was the persecution and expulsion of all the Class 1 and 2 big landowners in Republican territories. Attitudes to Class 3s, the lowest level of the old nobility varied over the years. The more extreme religious Republicans, who were themselves of Class 4 origin, tended to persecute them, but the less bigoted politicians, who were often of Class 3 background themselves, and took power after 594, preferred to leave them alone. After 590, all the privileges of the old aristocracy were abolished. Everyone was encouraged to own some land, and the noble landowners still living in the Republic were attacked, and either killed or driven off their property after 590. The great Palaces of the Emperors in Atlantis and Cennatlantis were vandalised and taken over by the State, while Thildo's hated Palace in Gentis was completely demolished. Many of the monuments of the Emperors were also pulled down, though sometimes they were simply replaced by Republican statues. A more tolerant regime came in after 594, but then after 606, persecution set in again, and any remaining large or even medium-sized landowners were expelled. Land thus gained was redistributed to poorer people.

THE OVERTHROW OF PRANONNI AND "RELIGIOUS REPUBLICANISM".

As the war between the two sides died down by 594, the more moderate party, which had started the Revolution, sought to regain power again from Pranonni and his religious extremists. Although they were very militantly opposed to the Imperialists and the Class 1 and 2 landowners within their reach, Pranonni's group made no real attempt to purge the government of these moderates - unlike Robespierre and the extremists in the French Revolution in 1793-4. As a result, Giesti and Fembel were still able, along with younger men like Tuaingeyu, to organise a coup against Pranonni.

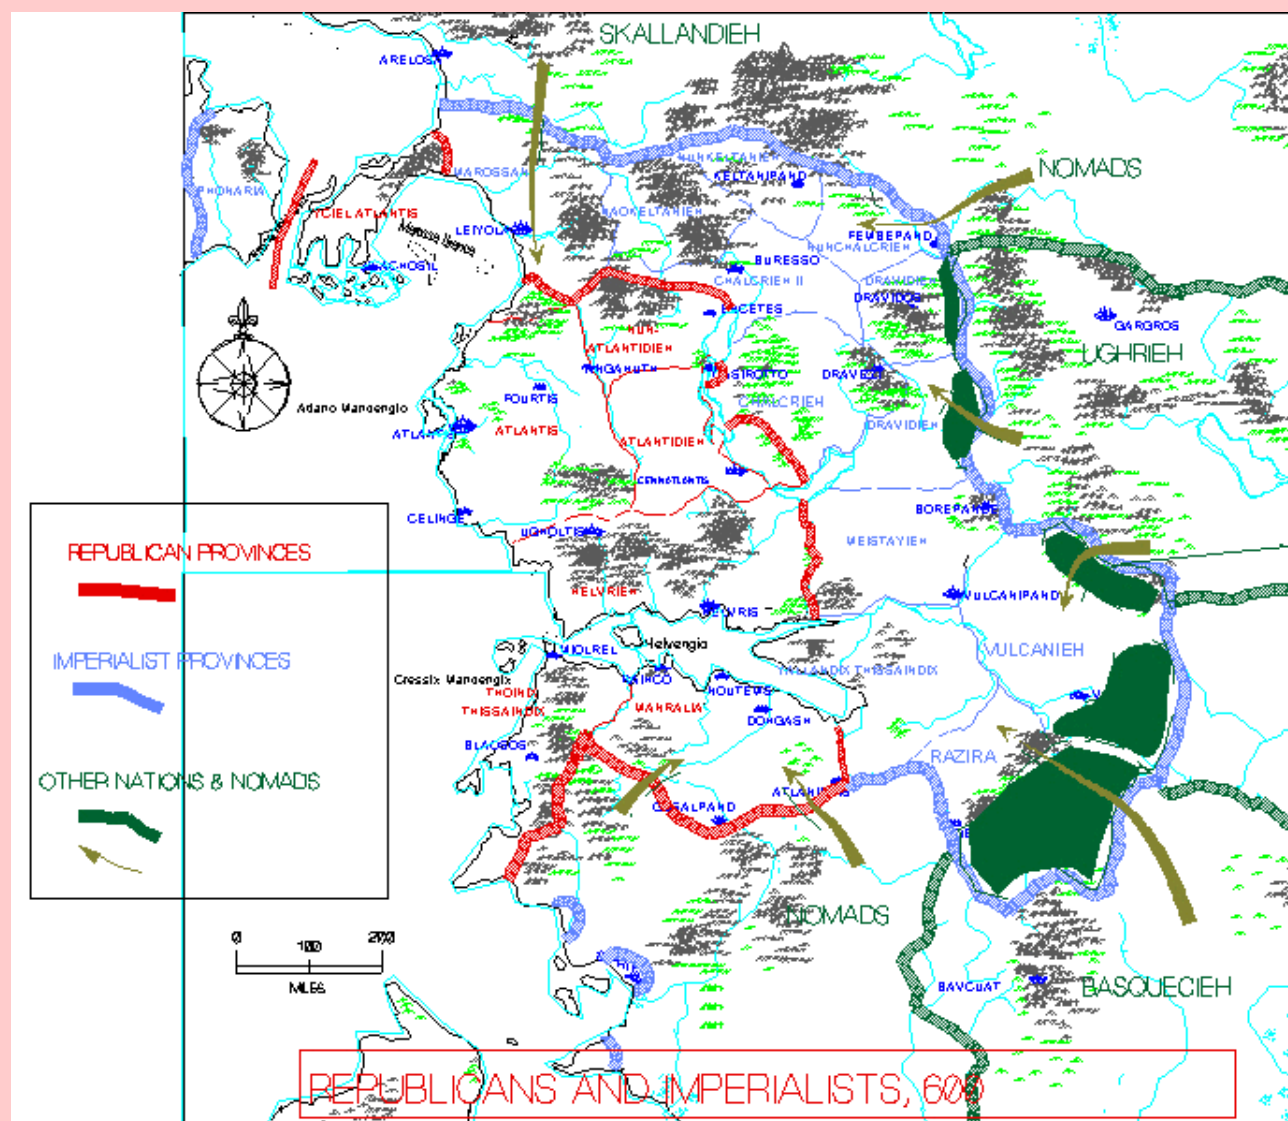

In March 594, this group, which called itself the "constitutionalists", overthrew Pranonni, and ousted him from his position as Leader, and from republican government. The coup was bloodless, and Pranonni was left to retire into private life - as was hoped. But he, with friends and a group of soldiers, then tried to overthrow the new government in a far from bloodless coup in June. He failed, however, was imprisoned, tried and executed later that year. He was succeeded as Leader by Tuaingeyu. However he did not stay in this post for long. The execution of Pranonni and some of his confederates in September earned him the bitter hatred of the religious party. In October one of them walked up to him in the Council chamber and calmly stabbed him to death. He was succeeded as Leader by Giesti, until 596.

THE IMPERIALISTS UNDER PRESSURE

While the Republic was thus becoming firmly established in the heartland of the old Empire, the Provinces which still looked to the Emperor were becoming subject to an ever increasing strain. On the borders, old enemies were showing themselves again, keen to take advantage of the weakened state of the Empire. The Basquecs resumed war after 594, and overran half of Razira Province by 597. The rest had fallen by 606, and then they invaded Vulcania, and joined local tribes and pirates in attacking Atlantean ships in the Eriphicko or Southern Sea. Other tribes in the south, previously friendly or allied to Atlantis, raided the south of Th. Thiss. and the southern Atlantean colonies. The Ughans also broke the peace after 599, crossed the river Gestes, and during the next ten years occupied territory on the west bank of the river, and even started moving settlers in there.

In 596, a group of south-eastern Provinces - Vulcanieh, Razira and Yall. Thiss. refused to recognise Norro as Emperor any more. Their Governors did not wish to continue sending their armies north to fight the Republicans at the behest of the Emperor in Atlandravizzi (the Imperialist capital since the loss of Cennatlantis). Their priority was the defence of their Provinces against the Basquecs; and they created their own Emperor, Yeasor, based at first in Ceriultis in Yall. Thiss. There was no serious fighting between the two Imperialist camps at this stage, however, after some early attacks from Meistayieh across the river Gestes were repelled. Yeasor was captured by the Basquecs when defending Razira in 604, and his place was taken by General Proinen, who did not even bother to style himself Emperor.

1. The Idyllic Facade. 648 - 714

Tilournosilco cencco sayatalayu ("The greatest soldier in history"): the foreign conquests of Ruthopheax I, 648 - 670

THE PLAN TO CONTROL THE WORLD

After the final defeat of his rival, Tuondo, in 648, Louron Ruthopheax was absolute ruler of the Atlantean Empire, now termed the Third Empire. He had established the government of the Squires, fixed a rigid social hierarchy, based on the absolute separation of town and country, made State Theism the compulsory religion of all citizens, and had reorganised and centralised the army. Over the next 20 years of his life, Ruthopheax developed and enforced all these aspects of society, as well as reorganising the political system of the Empire. His achievements in these civilian areas are tremendous, though very controversial, and will be discussed in the Interludes below.

However his greatest fascination was for military matters, and there is no doubt that he was a military genius of the first rank - quite possibly "the greatest soldier in (Atlantean) history", as his contemporary biographer called him. At any rate, he was fascinated by war, and everything connected with it.

"Crehei en can aithe tehinettu enan bourban cerexayu."

"War alone is the suitable pursuit of a great Emperor."

(Ruthopheax I, 651.)

He had by 648 reconquered the Atlantean Empire, but he was in no way satisfied with this. For a start, parts of the old Empire were still under foreign control - Razira and Vulcanieh in Basquec control, parts of the eastern frontier east of the river Gestes occupied by the Ughans, Marossan independent as Anauren, and considerable stretches of the northern and southern borders in the control of other peoples. Ruthopheax determined to regain these areas, but also to stretch Atlantean domination far further, so that never again would the borders of the Empire be threatened by foreign Powers. This would involve either annexing or setting up puppet rulers in as many of these countries as possible, and keeping the peace thereafter by a series of international conferences and treaties. Ruthopheax said that he would have liked to rule the world, but as he thought that was probably not quite within his abilities, he would have to settle for controlling it. That way, too, he thought that he could pass on a powerful and peaceful Atlantean Empire to his successors for decades to come.

THE DEFEAT OF UGHRIEH, 653 - 655

Ruthopheax had one tremendous advantage over his enemies militarily - his army was trained and honed to perfection, and was an extremely potent offensive tool, because of recent technical innovations. These included the use of muzzle-loading, smoothbore cannon, which could easily smash any of the old fortifications, the use of heavily-armoured cavalry and rockets to charge bombarded infantry, and a large amount of horse-drawn transport to quickly move infantry forces from one place to another. In all these areas the Atlanteans were immensely superior to any of their enemies, and of course none of their old forts could long withstand Ruthopheax's attacks.

Lowering skies over the foothills of the Gestix Mountains and the river Kakrepp.

Ruthopheax spent some time before and after 648 clearing his flanks, as it were: he ejected or pacified the nomads in Nunchalcrieh, and on his southern-most borders. Then in 653, reacting ostensibly to Ughan support of revolts in the north-east, he declared war on Ughrieh. In a brilliant two and a half-year campaign, he defeated successively the four semi-independent armies of the partly independent Ughan kingdoms, including the king, and so-called emperor, of the largest one, Cepsuzuk. He occupied Gargros, capturing Cepsuzuk, and in 655 was able to dictate peace. He took over large portions of territory on the east bank of the Gestes, as well as a large chunk of the north-west, and also split off some parts of the north into independent states. He placed some of his own Atlantean nobles or Ughan puppets as tewaik in the (now) five Ughan kingdoms, and greatly limited the size of Ughan armies. The overall Ughan emperor – the zuka -remained, as he had been, a puppet.

THE DEFEAT OF BASQUECIEH, 658 - 661

After some time for recuperation, Ruthopheax next plotted the downfall of the Basquec Empire. In 658, he declared war on Basquecieh, without giving any real reason. The Basquec armies were stronger than the Ughans, having a large contingent of rockets and a reasonable transport system. but the Atlanteans were and faster and harder-hitting, with their cannon and heavy cavalry, and besides, Basquecieh was now ruled by a civilian government, which disliked military matters, led by the Emperor Saschvic. Ruthopheax marched into Vulcaniech, occupied it, and swung south-west from Vulcantil across the rivers Baccuel and Gvondhat on to Razira from the east. Basquecieh sued for peace in 660, but Ruthopheax was determined to occupy the heart of the empire. He crossed the Och Therult mountains to the east, and marched on to Bavcuat. The Basquecs made their final stand near their capital, and it was here that the decisive battle of the war, the First Battle of Quachach, was fought, in 661.

THE FIRST BATTLE OF QUACHACH (BICIV CUACHACCH) AND THE DEFEAT OF THE BASQUECS

Ruthopheax's army amounted to 108000 men, divided into five "cennpueggisix" of 22000 each, plus 15000 light and medium cavalry, 5000 heavy, armoured cavalry, and 200 cannon with additional repeating crossbows. The Basquecs' army, or soccoth, was organised similarly to the Atlanteans', with eight infantry units, or corps, each about 17000 men, and considerable medium and light cavalry, though few heavy. It did not have as many cannon as the Atlanteans, but had a large rocket corps. About a quarter of their infantry was armed with ineffective hand-guns. In all they had about 119000 men.

The Basquec army was positioned on a series of low hills on its right and centre, while its left was protected by a small river and some marshy ground. Ruthopheax, whose army was mostly on a long diagonal hill a mile or two west of the Basquecs, spent some time spying out the lie of the land on the afternoon and evening of the day prior to the battle. He saw that the hills apparently held by the right centre of the Basquecs were the key to their position, and planned to firstly try to attract their forces off this hill, then seize it himself. The Basquecs' plans were vaguer, but involved an advance on their left across the river, and on their right to seize the small hill there. They would then try to envelop the main Atlantean army on their hills.

Next morning, the Basquecs advanced their left wing, where some Atlantean forces had deliberately and provocatively already crossed the river. They overwhelmed the inferior Atlanteans, and over the next hours forced them right back over the river. (See map: the numbers show the order of the armies' moves in the battle). At the same time, an Atlantean corps and two Basquec corps on the other flank collided over the small hill there. Ruthopheax next advanced another corps on his centre right across marshy ground up to the river, which successfully attracted a Basquec counter-attack from the hills in their centre. By late morning, he judged the time ripe for his critical stroke against the Basquec centre. While a massive array of guns had been pounding the Basquecs on their right centre on the hills, one "cennpuonda", followed by some heavy cavalry, moved quietly forward into position, then stormed up the hill; a second corps, to the right, also engaged the enemy on the rest of the ridge. The Basquecs resisted fiercely on the right, but apart from one corps in rear, had no other reserves now available. Further Atlantean heavy cavalry and infantry now moved decisively against the centre of the hills, while to their left, the Atlanteans were gradually forcing back the defenders. A counter-attack here was thrown back, and by early afternoon, the centre of the ridge was in Atlantean hands. Their heavy cavalry on the left had struck the right corps of Basquecs in flank from the hills, and halted their whole attack on the hill on the right. Atlantean forces now pursued fleeing Basquecs off the central hills, and the whole Basquec position collapsed. By the end of the day, the Basquecs had lost 20000 men, the Atlanteans only 9300. Soon after, Ruthopheax captured the capital itself, and won the war. He then dictated his peace-terms, annexing all of Vulacanieh, parts of former Yall. Thiss. and Razira, and placed Atlantean advisers in the Basquec government. Again he imposed a minimum size on the Basquec army, though he agreed to decrease Atlantis' army correspondingly on this front. Finally in 662, he made both Basquecieh and Ughrieh agree to recognise him - or the Atlantean Emperor to follow - as arbiter over any major foreign policy initiative, or any internal constitutional change.

THE SECOND INVASION OF THE EAST, 664 - 666

Ruthopheax had thus by 662 overcome all the foreign enemy powers to the immediate east of his Empire. He now considered turning against Anauren or Skallandieh, in the north, but his thirst for a real foreign adventure led him to try to repeat Lasso's expedition against the towns and empires of the Far East. In the 200 or more years that had passed since Lasso's death, the political and trading organisation of these eastern countries had of course changed quite considerably. The four independent ports that Lasso had tried to conquer had been swallowed up by the Empire of Losang. On the other hand, there were three smaller kingdoms, Marat, Hantan and Zeithu, which had sprung up between Losang and the east of the Ughan Provinces inland from the sea, which were trying to maintain a precarious independence from the encroachments of Losang. Trade with the Far East from Atlantis now went by land directly via Losang, or by sea past this area to the kingdoms and islands far away to the east of Losang. Ruthopheax determined to regain a presence in the area of the former four ports, by seizing them from Losang, and also to try to form an alliance with the intervening kingdoms against Losang, which they would then jointly invade and conquer. Of course, Ruthopheax's knowledge of this whole area was very poor: quite good as regards the route there and the area of the ports, but very hazy with regard to the other kingdoms.

THE DEFEAT OF LOSANG

He set off in April 664 with an army of 140000 using the same route as had Lasso. At the same time, a navy also sailed off to the east. Warning of his approach and his great military reputation, as well as advanced diplomatic contacts, allowed him to march through the intervening states unscathed. The whole area here was more civilised than it had been in Lasso's day, with the tribes organised into small kingdoms. Ruthopheax also secured small allied armies from Basquecieh, which included some Atlantean troops as well, to guard his southern flank. He forced the Ughans to have an army prepared on their eastern frontier to threaten Marat and Hantan, if need be. The Atlanteans reached the region of the formerly independent ports and easily defeated a Losang army. Similarly, the Atlantean navy arrived at the ports, defeating an attempt to intervene by the weaker Losang navy. Losang was at a considerable disadvantage now, both on land and sea, compared with Lasso's era, because of the Atlanteans' use of artillery. Gunpowder was known to Losang, and barely to other kingdoms of the area, but Losang's guns were weak and few compared with those of Ruthopheax.

Ruthopheax now halted and sent envoys to the three kingdoms, asking for support straight away for an invasion of Losang. However, except for Marat, the furthest and northernmost, there was now no response. In August, the Emperor sent a force of 60000 directly into Losang, to see what the situation was. This army, after some initial successes, met a large entrenched Losang force, and dared go no further. Frustrated by Hantan and Zeithu, Ruthopheax now threw his whole army into Losang from the south. He defeated the enemy, harried and pursued them, and finally forced Losang to agree to terms. However, Losang refused to make a permanent peace, and Ruthopheax had to accept the cession of some territory in the west.

THE MARCH INTO ZEITHU AND HANTAN

Ruthopheax refused to call it a day. He dared not press any further into Losang, and so he decided to march northwards against the recalcitrant kingdoms of Zeithu and Hantan, inviting Marat, his reluctant ally, to attack Hantan from the north. He also required the Ughans to join in against Hantan from the west. In December he attacked Zeithu, and was soon able to defeat and occupy it. To the north, Marat waited to attack Hantan until Ruthopheax was ready, which, due to the winter, was not until March. Then he marched, abetted by a small Ughan force to the west. Hantan collapsed after three months of fierce resistance, and she also called on Losang to rejoin the fight against the invaders. By now Ruthopheax had lost some 25000 men in combat, 15000 from illness, and 20000 were in garrison. He had received 18000 reinforcements, so by June 665, had about 98000 men left. He divided Hantan up between Ughrieh, Marat and himself, having already taken over Zeithu, lock stock and barrel. He moved on north with a small force and spent some time in mutual celebrations with the King of Marat. But now, suddenly and terribly, everything began to go wrong.

THE NARROW ESCAPE AND THE END OF THE ADVENTURE

Rebellions had already started in Zeithu, and others began in the occupied parts of Losang. Ruthopheax largely ignored them leaving his 35000 occupying troops to quash them. However, in July, the scene became much darker: his forces suffered two admittedly minor defeats in Zeithu, and then Losang, aided by troops from Hantan which had escaped across the border, declared war on Atlantis, and marched in to help the rebels in the occupied territories. Ruthopheax finally turned round his army from Marat, taking along a small allied army of 17000. He returned to Hantan, and spent six weeks there trying to bring a growing guerrilla war under control. By now, Zeithu forces were besieging some of the Atlantean occupying troops remaining in the country, while others had been forced to retreat southwards. Here they joined the troops in the four ports zone. To the east, Losang forces and rebels were rapidly taking control again of the occupied area, and were threatening the ports area.

Ruthopheax was now almost cut off, hundreds of miles north of the rest of his army and his main line of communication. He considered marching back through Ughrieh, to the west, but this would be to admit defeat. So he decided on a bold move: to cut loose, and move eastwards into Losang, then south, where he hoped he would surprise the Losang forces by attacking them from the north. The march was long and hard, crossing unknown country through hostile peoples. The weather in September and October was unseasonable hot, and many men suffered from thirst and exhaustion, and were left behind. Finally later in October, he reached the (formerly) occupied southern part of Losang, and came up against the enemy, though now with an army of only 60000. Ruthopheax's strategical genius gave him two quick victories, but he dared not chase the enemy far to the south-east, to which he was retiring, as he would again be cut off from his communications and remaining troops in the ports area. So he marched to join them, only to have a Losang army in this region bar his way. He was unable to join up with his garrisons to the west, many of which were either blockaded or destroyed by now, and had to fight one of the most difficult battles of his career. He finally forced the enemy aside, at the cost of 17000 casualties: the Losang army lost over 27000 out of 65000.

Ruthopheax, like his great predecessor, now decided to cut his losses and retreat back to home territory. Firstly, he tried to come to terms with Losang, and keep hold of the ports area. Losang refused. He learned from Lasso's example, and determined to evacuate the whole army. With great difficulty he collected as many of his scattered garrisons as he could, though the forces left in Hantan were ordered to escape back through Ughrieh on their own (few succeeded). It was winter again, but at least his army was not harried once he got away from the Losang forces. By March of 666, some 50000 troops were back at Vulcanipand - all the rest were dead or prisoners.

THE FINAL YEARS IN POWER AND RUTHOPHEAX'S RETIREMENT, 667- 670

Ruthopheax easily glossed over this defeat, and by 667 was eager to go campaigning again. Between 667 and 670, he fought further campaigns in Th. Thiss, and gained territory to the east of Numedeas, as well as creating independent states even further east. He also regained those southern colonies which had been lost over the previous decades. At the same time he was preparing a campaign against Anauren, which he wanted to take back into the Empire, and against the Northern Empire (Skallandieh). However his soldiers had finally had enough of fighting. The Internal Security Army, his main fighting Army and most of his Advisers all objected to yet more fighting, and a number of small-scale rebellions finally forced him to change his mind by 670. A number of his Advisers believed he should now retire in favour of his son, but such was their fear of him, that the most they dared do, with his son's support, was to politely ask him to consider retirement. To everyone's surprise, he consented. Almost certainly he had realised that he could not do much more on the military side if his armies were unwilling. He probably hoped to continue to pull the strings of government from his retirement. But of course he was now 72, and he was possibly just exhausted from his life's work.

THE GREAT CONTINENTAL WAR

743 - 750

The Years of defeat – the invasion of the Empire, 743 – 746

Gossalt's attack on the Atlantean Empire, and the overrunning of the south-eastern Provinces, 743

THE WAR-PLANS OF GOSSALT

The Great Continental War began with a crushing surprise attack by Gossalt, the political and military leader of the Basquecs on the Atlantean fortress of Atlaniphis in the extreme south-east of Manralia. Gossalt had planned his invasion meticulously and over many years. More or less since he had come to power in Basquecieh twenty years earlier, Gossalt had aimed to defeat Atlantis, and place Basquecieh in her pre-eminent position. Almost certainly he did not intend to conquer the whole of the Atlantean Empire: rather, he aimed to invade its south-eastern Provinces and occupy Manralia, Vulcaniech, and some of the Provinces north of the river Gestes, ultimately capturing Cennatlantis by the second year of the war. He believed this would force the Atlanteans to ask for terms, as a result of which he would deprive her of all the occupied Provinces, perhaps including Cennatlantis. After he had digested all this, he might well declare war on Atlantis again some years later, and seize more territory.

He knew that he could not do this just with the Basquec Army. He intended that his principal ally would be Ughrieh. During the 15 years prior to the outbreak of the war, he wooed Emperor Yrultak of the Ughans, promising to make sure that they would gain large swathes of territory east and west of the Gestes and in Vulcaniech, if they would join him in his campaign against the Atlanteans. Later he took over all the little states between his borders and Ughrieh's, and secretly sent an army into Ughrieh to join in the attacks against Atlantis.

His armies were now partly armed with rifles, and he was sure that this, together with his surprise attack, and clever strategic plans would enable him initially to hurl the Atlanteans out of Vulcaniech, back to the Gestes. He lined up one army, totalling 60000 men in Razira, to attack the strong Atlantean forts in the Raziris mountains. These would be aided by a huge strategic flanking attack, using 90000 men, across the rivers Gvondhat and Baccuel round the eastern flank of the main Atlantean defences in the mountains. The Atlanteans would be crushed between the two forces. These Armies would be flanked in the north by another small army, which would march on Vulcantil, and north to the river Thawril. The Basquecs would then exploit northwards across the river Yalldairu to the Gestes.

Gossalt intended to actually begin the war, however, by an all-out attack on the strategically important fortress of Atlaniphis, which guarded the estuary of the river Gairase, the boundary between the Provinces of Vulcaniech and Manralia, and indeed the main route into Manralia itself. This would occur at the same time as the flanking army, mentioned above, outflanked the Raziris Mountains. Once Atlaniphis had fallen, 120000 men would invade Manralia. At the same time, up to 60000 men would cross the Gairase and move north and west, acting as a left wing to the main forces, and then moving west across the river Gayvot to conquer the mountainous lands of the Jutes. The Ughans, meanwhile, would move down to the Gestes, and generally occupy the attentions of the Atlanteans in Dravidiech. A joint crossing of that river would follow, once the main Basquec armies had reached it from Vulcaniech. Gossalt was aware that there existed an alliance between Atlantis and Rabarrieh, and he therefore had 2 armies (120000) men on the river Gosal, and another 2 armies in the south, both to remain on the defensive to begin with.

Tactically, Gossalt had inculcated speed of manoeuvre and pursuit against the enemy. Whole units were now armed with rifles, usually breech-loaders, and they were to pin the enemy, whilst other units, including cavalry, worked round their flanks. Massed cannon would bombard them at close range, while heavy cavalry would wait to give the coup de grace. Armies were usually about 60000 strong, divided into two corps, then divisions and so on downwards.

THE POSITION OF THE ATLANTEANS

It was only since the later 730s that the Atlanteans began to take seriously the threat of a Basquec attack. But attempts to improve the defences were much too little and too late. The total size of the Imperial Atlantean army in 732 as 550000, of which 95000 were internal security Forces. In the south, there were 41/2 armies (108000 men) in Vulcaniech, 5 Armies (120000) in Dravidiech, and 2 Armies (48000) in Manralia. Following Basquecieh's successful war against Rabarrieh, and Gossalt's increasing use of warlike threats against his neighbours, the overall armed forces were gradually increased to 650000 by 743, of which only 70000 were now Internal Forces. The Armies in Vulcaniech grew slightly to 120000, and in Manralia to 72000. But the problem was that Atlantis had to have defensive forces ready all round the perimeter of her Empire, which meant it was very easy for one particular enemy to concentrate overwhelming offensive forces in one or two particular places on the circumference. Thus the Basquecs had 150000 men to the south of the Raziris mountains, opposing 72000 Atlanteans there; and 72000 defending the whole of the southern Manralian border, against 120000 Basquecs concentrated opposite Atlaniphis.

The Atlanteans had made some attempt to increase the production of muskets and rifles, but whereas by 743 the Basquecs had whole units armed with breech-loading rifled handguns, and muzzle or breech-loading rifled cannon, the Atlanteans, having experimented with, and rejected muzzle-loading rifles, were only beginning to produce and arm their forces with breech-loading rifles. Their cannon were still nearly all muzzle-loaders, though quite a few were now rifled.

Finally, quite vigorous attempts were made to prepare and update forts and defensive positions, especially in the Raziris Mountains, in the highlands in Dravidiech, and most significantly, as far as events in the coming war were concerned, in the areas around Cennatlantis.

THE BATTLE OF ZHADVECH AND THE BASQUEC CONQUEST OF VULCANIEH

On 22nd July, 743, Basquec forces attacked the Atlantean fortress of Atlaniphis in south-eastern Manralia, beginning the Great Continental War. At the same time, 60000 Basquecs demonstrated against the strong Atlantean positions in the Raziris mountains, while 60000 more marched unseen round the eastern flank of those heights, across the rivers Gvondhat, Baccuel and Vulcan. 30000 more protected their right flank, and attacked a smaller number of the enemy in Vulcantil. Overwhelmed by Basquec firepower, and a sweeping movement by superior Basquec cavalry round to their rear, the Atlanteans here were crushed, and over the next month were chased headlong back to Versciun in the north and to Faiddir, and ultimately the river Gestes to the west. In the mountains, small Basquec forces infiltrated themselves into the wood-cloaked slopes of the eastern heights, and took Snarun. The main Atlantean forces were to the south, between Gedvoxis and Aggorpand, as well as about Zhadvech. They kept the Basquecs in front at bay with great difficulty, being constantly outranged and overwhelmed by their rifle-fire. As news of the flanking Basquec force reached it, the Zhadvech Army of about 25000 men disentangled itself with difficulty from the Basquecs to the south, turned north – and was attacked on August 3rd by 60000 men. It was comprehensively smashed at this Battle of Zhadvech and the Basquecs pressed on south-westwards. Now the Atlanteans in the southern mountains took fright, and most moved off to confront this threat to their rear. In a series of poorly co-ordinated attacks on the enemy, they were all beaten, and their remnants retreated to Blouth and then Faibaddo. The remaining Atlantean forts in the mountains were now bypassed and besieged later at leisure. Of 60000 Atlantean defenders of the mountains, 19000 had become casualties, 12000 prisoners, and just 24000 escaped back to the river Gestes.

So by the second week in August, the Atlantean defenders of Vulcanieh had effectively been eliminated. There followed a period of exploitation by the victors, as they fanned out across the Province, and made their way north to the river Gestes, mostly following the road through Faiddir. At the same time a force of 30000 crossed the Gairase near Atlaniphis, and, as planned, exploited to Ceriultis, Grolodairo, and then west to Ophinoutho and the river Gayvot. The first Basquecs reached the river Vulcan by the beginning of September, where south of Vulcanipand, they encountered the first fresh organised enemy defences. After some tough fighting, the Basquecs won, and gradually collected all their armies opposite the powerful fortress of Vulcanipand, on the north bank of the Gestes.

THE SECOND BATTLE OF ATLANIPHIS AND THE DEFEAT OF THE ATLANTEANS IN MANRALIA

The Basquec attack on Atlaniphis was not wholly unexpected by its Atlantean defenders, who had seen the Basquecs collecting to the south for weeks. However the suddenness of it did take them by surprise, as did the overwhelming numbers of the attackers, and their superiority in weaponry. The fort had been updated in the 660s to withstand a siege by non-rifled cannon, and strengthened by some outlying works in the 710s and late 730s. But the Basquec rifled cannon could fire on it from 2 to 3 miles, rather than 1 to 1 1/2 miles, as had been foreseen by its designers. At the same time, the Basquec rifles were able to crush the defenders in the outlying works and trenches. Quickly the fort was cut off and being pulverised. Mobile forces swept past it, westwards into Manralia, and eastwards across the Gairase and into Vulcanieh. Cut off, the Atlantean defenders died bravely, making several forlorn sorties, which were mown down by Basquec riflemen. The city was stormed on August 11th, and captured the next day. Thus ended the Second Battle of Atlaniphis, with casualties of 8000 and prisoners of 10000 Atlanteans.

Thereafter the two Basquec Armies, commanded by one of Gossclat's best generals, Vacchic (or "Vagic", in Atlantean transliteration) moved 200 miles north as far as the city and fortress of Noehtens on the Helvengio, and west to the fortress of Nostohs. The former, easily reinforced by sea, held up the Basquecs for the rest of the year, but the latter, after a brief resistance, was scandalously abandoned by its commander. Basquec forces then spread out widely, and moving north-westwards, crossed the river Tophyens, and were only finally halted on the river Trothyum by Atlantean forces from the west of the country (some 30000 men). The Basquecs had thus succeeded in overrunning over half of the Province, for the loss of only some 10000 men. But the original 120000 men, concentrated before Atlaniphis, were now scattered over hundreds of miles throughout the Province. So, for example, in November, there were 50000 men spread out over 100 miles on the river Trothyum, 25000 around Noutens, 15000 in the south of the Province, and the rest in the rear.

UGHRIEH AND RABARRIEH JOIN THE WIDENING CONFLICT

At the time when Gossclat declared war on Atlantis, there was already a sizeable Basquec Army in Ughrieh, to the east of the Atlantean fortress of Borepande. So Ughrieh did not delay long in joining her ally in war against Atlantis – she declared war on August 1st. The Ughan Army, though numerous, was far less well-organised than the Basquecs, and had considerably fewer modern weapons – in that respect, it was about at the same level as Atlantis. The frontier with Atlantis stretched some 400 miles along the river Gestes; it lay some 30 miles to the east of the river for most of the distance, although south of the river Galos, it bordered its eastern bank. Its armies, which were divided into corps of about 28000 men, and then into smaller units, like the Basquecs and Atlanteans, were grouped in three main areas opposite the Atlanteans. To the east of Borepande lay two corps, plus the Basquec Army; Around Bradghus, to the east of Pueggathis, were three corps; and spread further north were two more corps, making about 200000 soldiers. About eight corps protected the northern and eastern frontiers. The Atlanteans had five frontier armies (110000) in Dravidieh along the same front.

The Ughans began by occupying the Atlantean strip of territory on the east bank of the Gestes, to which the Atlanteans made little serious resistance. They had prepared plans for a war with the Ughans for years, and their intention was initially to stay on the defensive on the west of the Gestes, basing themselves on the strong fortress, which dotted the riverbank – from north to south, Fembepand, Dravipand, Pueggathis, Atlanipand, Borepande, with the hill defences as a fall-back position to the rear – Dravidos, Dravizzi and Atlandravizzi. The strategy worked for the rest of the year, and the Ughans' attempts to besiege and take Pueggathis and Borepande, in particular, failed with very heavy losses.

Rabarrieh was very keen to get her revenge on Basquecieh, after her defeat in the war in the 730s. So, somewhat rashly, her king, Basalzi Alitheeri, declared war on Basquecieh only two days after the latter country attacked Atlaniphis. Her army had been much improved and increased in size over the previous few years of peace. Traditionally she used light infantry and fast-moving light cavalry to harass her enemies, while her main armies tended to be less reliable, and lacked discipline and organisation. Following her defeat by the Basquecs, many old commanders were sacked, and she sought to create a stronger, better-motivated main army. In fact she carried this too far, and insisted that nearly all infantry must march in strictly-drilled formations, shoulder to shoulder, upright at all times. As a result, her forces were at first mown down by the Basquecs, who made much greater use of skirmishers, and whose breech-loaders allowed the infantry to fire from a prone position. Rabarrieh had experienced the effects of rifled guns in the war, and by 743 had equipped a proportion of her infantry with muzzle-loading rifles, many sold to her by Atlantis, after she decided she needed breech-loaders.

As a result of gains made during her first war with Rabarrieh, the border with Rabarrieh lay close to the mouth of the river Gosal in the north. Basquecieh had expected Rabarrieh to turn against her, and stayed carefully on the defensive at first. After October, she made several attempts to take the Siphians Ugholix, a high range of hills, which dominated the estuary of the Gosal on its western bank, as well as the great fort on the river itself – but these failed. However, various attacks by the Rabarrans here, and further south along the long border, were beaten back with considerable loss to the attackers. Atlantis was quite closely involved in the attacks near the Gosal, as just to the west of the Siphians mountains, and also to the south of the Gosal estuary, lay two Atlantean colonies, the northern one including the great port and naval base of Siphia. She had one army of 30000 to defend these colonies, plus her southern fleet, and some of these troops joined the Rabarrans in a defensive role against the Basquecs.

VI:

THE FOURTH – DEMOCRATIC – EMPIRE 750 – 805

1. Democracy and Industrialization, 750 – 789

A new style of government: Sualofo Thildoyon, 750 – 761

THE REPUBLICAN REBELLION, 750 – 751

Thildoyon was made Emperor in 750, after the military defeat of the last remnants of the Fourth Empire, with a mandate to wipe out all the remaining legacies of the Squires, and set up a new much more democratic style of government. Plans for such a new beginning had been worked out in secret during the 730s and 740s, and now Thildoyon was expected to put them into practice at once. The problem was that many of his supporters expected him to be much more radical than he, and the majority of the former upper and middle classes, wished. Roughly speaking, the lower classes of the Third Empire – the workers, peasants and small independent groups of people, wanted full-scale democracy, equality of property and opportunity for everyone, and either the abolition of the Emperor, or at least, his reduction to a figurehead. The middle classes (the old Class 3s and some 4s), who were to become more and more prominent over the next decades with the growth of industry, as well as much of the former nobility, were by and large willing to see the dismantling of the old Squirearchical set-up, and the introduction of partial democracy into government, but wanted to keep the working classes in their place, and retain the (somewhat reduced) role of the Emperor and Court.

"Ergain tontix dehles dimeu".

"For all, not for the few."

(Thildoyon, 750, supporting greater democracy.)

Thildoyon began the demolition process with great eagerness and much acclaim. Within the last months of 750, he abolished the rights and ranks of the Squires, did away with the whole Class system, and stripped the State Theist Church of all secular power. He set up a "Democratic Constitutional Council", largely middle-class, and led by himself, to oversee these changes, and to agree the new constitutional set-up. To symbolise the changes, the Council declared the establishment of a Fourth Empire from the date of Thildoyon's accession in 750, and called it the Dynasty of Celam-Thestel. However, it was agreed that the new Dynasty would be in no way hereditary, and much more power than ever before would reside in a democratically elected Council. But then things seemed to go wrong, as far as the working classes and radicals were concerned. The Council became bogged down in argument over just how democratic and representative the new local councils and Great Council should be. At the same time, unemployment continued to grow, and as a result of wartime destruction, harvests were poor, and the economy generally seemed to be in a bad way. In particular, the new government refused to grant equality of rights to land ownership, and made no clear commitment to creating employment in the new industrial towns, or in the army.

In May, isolated riots and demonstrations took place, which Thildoyon at first treated with conciliation. Then, with frightening rapidity, further riots, arson, and full-scale armed rebellions sprang up in a number of towns. The rebels, led by radicals and, in some cases, by unemployed soldiers, demanded food, the vote for all, land for all, and, most worryingly for the authorities, a return to the Republic. The main uprisings occurred in Atlantis, Cennatlantis, Helvris, Gentes, Nosinge, Celingé and Tilrase – all areas of industry and high population. The army generally remained loyal to the government, and with the help of modern artillery and breech-loading rifles, they were able to crush all the rebellions. However, the rebels caused much damage by arson and the destruction of upper-class property, and the revolt in Cennatlantis, the centre of government, was particularly frightening. What with the damage caused by the fighting there in 750, by the end of August 751, much of Cennatlantis lay in ruins, particularly what survived of the Imperial Palace and the noble quarters. Up to 20000 people died in the fighting, and Thildoyon had been thoroughly scared. In a display of great ruthlessness, and against the advice of some of the Council, he executed nearly 10000 of his prisoners during September, and after brief mass trials, imprisoned or exiled 15000 more. Others involved in the revolt were conscripted to help reconstruct the building damaged or destroyed in the fighting.

A "MODERATELY" DEMOCRATIC FOURTH EMPIRE IS CREATED

One immediate result of these rebellions was to convince the Emperor and his government that they would have to limit the amount of democratization and the voting rights of the lower classes. At the same time, Thildoyon made a number of gestures of goodwill to these workers, which nevertheless, would put his government in no danger. So during 751 and 752, a new Great Council was set up, plus urban and district Councils, along the lines of the Second Empire structure. But this time round, there was much greater democratization, though with limitations. Candidates for government and local government needed property qualifications, which prevented lower classes being elected. The various District Councils each elected two Imperial Councillors to the Great Council, and these elections were held openly in the chief city of each District. All citizens with certain property qualifications could vote. However, executive Ministers of the Government were chosen by the Emperor, with the assistance of the other Ministers. One of these became the Chief Minister to the Emperor, and this post became more and more important as the decades passed, eventually overshadowing the role of the Emperor himself. However, the Emperor also kept complete control of the Army, had the prerogative of declaring war and peace, and maintained the final say in finance and taxation. But the Council can censure these decisions, and was able to approve other types of legislation put forward by the Emperor or his Ministers.

In foreign affairs, the Emperor shared the prevailing post-war mood of pacifism and anti-imperialism, and personally disliked the Army, which he held responsible for many of the Empire's troubles since 700. At the same time, though, he had to recognise that it was only because of the Army, that the Fourth Empire had survived the 751 rebellions. He continued to reduce the size of the Army, down to 680000 in 752 and dropped conscription. He reorganised the military structure into a series of Fronts covering the Empire's borders. He also finalised the series of treaties and border changes, which ended the Continental War. He had to put up with the Basquec territory annexed by Rabarrieh, as well as her influence in that country. Similarly, he could do little to prevent the takeover by Gestskallandieh of the former Skallandieh (which united state was then simply called "Skallandieh" again). He also made no attempt to stop or even object to the takeover of the supposedly independent state of Anauren by Skallandieh in 760. In 755 and 758, he made agreements with Naomandix (the Western Empire) to garrison parts of Phonaria and local islands on behalf of Atlantis, which saved him military commitments in those areas. (Note that "Naomandix", literally "Western Lands", was only used by Atlanteans till the 750s. Thereafter they used a slightly altered version of the actual word used by the "Naomands" for their land – Quendelieh. The actual word was "Quendelie").

Within the Atlantean Empire, he granted a measure of independence to the Keltish Provinces, Phonaria and Penedrin. He conciliated the workers by lifting all limits of factories and industrialization, and finally reversed the pre-war subordination of towns to the Squire-run countryside as part of his abolition of the ranks and influence of the old Squirearchy. This liberalisation soon led to an industrial and economic boom, which put paid to any lingering discontent with the Fourth Empire. Thildoyon invested much time and money in rebuilding Cennatlantis and other cities ruined by the recent fighting, and encouraged the setting up of factories and industrial centres. The result was that, simply put, any potential working-class republicanism or radicalism was washed away by the economic success and full employment which took over the Empire after the mid 750s.

THE EMPEROR AND THE SUCCESSION

As a person, Thildoyon was a strong-minded man, whose early ruthlessness slipped away in later life, as he became fully involved in his new regime. He was a "moderate" radical, a pacifist, an agnostic, an enthusiast for "modern life", and a conventional family man. He was also very pragmatic, and soon realised how to balance a "democratic" and modern industrialising society, with a degree of authoritarianism for himself. He abolished the automatic hereditary Imperial succession of the Third Empire, but was determined to maintain control over the choice of his successor, and keep it in the Imperial family, if he could. He set up a small committee from the Imperial Council, presided over by the Emperor, and this group would choose an heir from, in order of preference, the Imperial family, the committee itself, then Ministers, and finally the Imperial Council as a whole. This method of succession, like the constitution as a whole, was written down and made binding on future Emperors. Thildoyon himself had a son and a daughter, but the latter died young in 750, and the son refused to be considered. So Thildoyon's sister's son, Louron Iustacin (aged 31 in 761) was chosen in 756, as he was giving a good account of himself in provincial government. In 761, Thildoyon died of a stroke.

VII:

THE AGE OF THE TYRANTS

805 - 829

1. "Atlantis aisea thaisul annon" ("Atlantis will be great again"): Thun Celeuos, 805 – 812

THE BROTHERHOOD PARTY TAKES CONTROL:

Thun Celeuos was a right-wing, authoritarian-minded soldier, of fairly low class and upbringing, who had become an officer in the Guard by a mixture of talent, hard work, personal magnetism, and making friends in the right places – particularly in the Brotherhood Party. In 805, he was 36, married for ten years, and had two sons (a daughter followed in 807). We know very little of his wife, who stayed very much in the background, nor do we hear much of the children, until they all died in 812. Celeuos had at his back the great organisation of the brotherhood Party, already semi-military; now the Guard and other military units became the "executive" arms for the Party. As we have seen, the Party had a distinct political programme, and Celeuos meticulously carried these out.

Celeuos' first aim was to smash the organisation of the Fourth Empire, and make himself and the Party all-powerful. He made himself "Leader", announcing that for the time being he would not replace the Emperor. (In fact he crowned himself Emperor in 810. None of the later Tyrants followed suit, and Celeuos' title is not recognised in the later Atlantean official histories of the Emperors). He suspended the Council at once, and "reconstituted" it, so that it was permanently dominated by the governing Brotherhood Party. In any case it was shorn of many of its powers, being purely advisory, and met only when Celeuos required. The Empire was actually run by a small coterie of military colleagues of Celeuos, who were given the old high-sounding Ministerial posts. The Brotherhood Party gradually spread its tentacles into all areas of government – provincial, local, the law, the Army -, and no appointments or promotions could be made without its agreement. All higher positions indeed required membership of the Party, whether in civilian or military life. Provincial Governors were appointed by the Leader, and even local government at the lowest tiers was vetted by the Party. The leadership of the Army was thoroughly overhauled, as the Brotherhood Party had always demanded, and Celeuos' own appointees were put in as Generals, while he himself took command of the forthcoming campaigns.

He also built up a much stronger police force, which became an Internal Security Army to rival the Regular Army as the years passed – indeed after Celeuos' time, it came to have much more prestige than the "Frontier" Army, as it would be called. This internal force succeeded in eliminating S. Empire and ethnic terrorism within a year, which was regarded as a major achievement on Celeuos' part. On the other hand, this same force was given increased powers of surveillance over the civilian population, and more and more people were arrested for "political" crimes (talking, agitating or writing in any way contrary to the Government's own policy). As time passed, this political terror cowed any thoughts of opposition to the regime. But in the first few years, Celeuos' actions were generally popular, after the miasma and corruption of the end of the Fifth Empire. Celeuos carried out a number of needful reforms – improvements in the conditions of workers in factories, increased State ownership of factories, State running of Guilds, mortal legislation, proper and effective policing against crime, less political corruption, economic improvements, and military victories abroad (at first).

MILITARY COUNTER-OFFENSIVES AGAINST RABARRIEH

A major plank of Celeuos' stated policy was a vigorous offensive in the war against Rabarrieh, and the reconquest of as much territory as possible south of the Helvengio. Above all, of course, it was the Atlantean and Yalland communities down there with which Celeuos was concerned. The army and its command were thoroughly shaken up and reorganised in 805-6, and in 806-7 Celeuos led the army in attacks into Manralia. These were at first very successful in fighting in the open country, and the Atlanteans advanced first south-west from Raihco, and then, south-east from Noehtens to Dohgash. But once the Atlanteans came up against prepared positions, such as the defences in and around towns like Dohgash, or, later, Atlaniphis, Celeuos ground to a halt. Modern rifles and cannon, coupled with the widespread use of trenches and fortifications, lent great strength to defenders, even if they were considerable inferior to their assailants. The Battle of Dohgash in March 807 lasted over a week, involving 45000 Atlanteans at the beginning, as well as armoured tanks, against 35000 Rabarrans, and ending, after both sides had been reinforced, with 75000 Atlanteans and 55000 Rabarrans. The Rabarrans defended their trenches, and later the town itself, with great tenacity, causing the Atlanteans over 12000 casualties. Modern rifles and cannon meant that the battle spread itself out over eight miles in the end. This was also the first time that the Rabarrans had fought a set-piece battle against the enemy, instead of hit-and-run, guerilla attacks, and both they and the Atlanteans were astonished by their success. Dohgash was an eventual Atlantean victory, but at Atlaniphis in 807, Celeuos was completely unable to defeat the Rabarrans, and, with his supplies under constant attack, he finally had to retire. This was the end of his offensive against the Rabarrans in Manralia, and in the end, he had regained virtually no ground other than the largely ruined city of Dohgash.

In late 807, before he called off his offensives, Celeuos formed a military alliance with "Uariltecoth" against Rabarrieh, by promising it a share in any territorial gains made. This was a shock to Rabarrieh, which always considered "Uariltecoth" as being within its own orbit. In 808-9, campaigns took place in the south of Yall. This, led primarily by "Uariltecoth". These were indecisive, and in 810 Celeuos agreed to a cease-fire with the Rabarrans.

CONFLICT WITH THE UGHANS

By 811, there were increasing numbers of raids by the Ughans across the Gestes, where much surreptitious support was offered by the Ughan refugee communities there. Emperor Kubli of the Ughans, in particular, was furious with the way the Atlanteans were treating Ughan communities within the Atlantean Empire. This led the Atlanteans to undertake military operations against the Ughans on both sides of the river. Celeuos persecuted the Ughans within the Empire with ever-increasing ruthlessness, as he came to see them as potentially subversive, and giving aid and succour to the enemies of the Empire. In this, he believed himself to be following the precepts of the Brotherhood Faith, which claimed that the Empire should be run for and by Atlanteans alone – other races or nations were of less importance in the scheme of things, and should be kept, by force if necessary, in a state of subjection. This belief in the ethnic superiority of the Atlanteans, which, initially, really included all the Juralic peoples, was to become more and more ferocious and intransigent under the later Tyrants.

THE "TRAGEDY" OF THUN CELEUOS' ?

In later years, Celeuos seemed to lose his way, and certainly began to lose the trust of the more die-hard Brothers. By 810, he was aware that the efficiency of the army was rapidly declining, and at the same time, a serious plot by a coterie of Yalland and Manralian officers against Celeuos was exposed. These things persuaded Celeuos to agree to a cease-fire with the Rabarrans, and then a purge of the Army. He rooted out all non-Juralic officers, and proclaimed that henceforth only men of Juralic background could reach the upper reaches of the Army command. Units of lower-rank soldiers recruited in non-Juralic areas of the Empire were to be regularly moved around the Empire. Meanwhile the Internal Security Army was built up still further at the expense of the Frontier Army. All of this was applauded by Celeuos' more extreme supporters. But they were shocked and angered when he partially abandoned much of it later in 811, because he thought that the Frontier Army was being totally undermined by this policy, and its quality and numbers were declining too rapidly. Then in 812, he seemed to backtrack on another side of the Brotherhood's policy, when he declared that if the Ughan "terrorists" laid down their arms, he would grant them a degree of autonomy, and cancel some of the existing anti-ethnic discriminatory policies.

To his supporters, Celeuos had become a traitor, and modern historians have also been puzzled by his wayward actions in these years. We need to try to understand his character. In essence, Celeuos was an ordinary, patriotic, indeed nationalistic soldier, intensely conservative and traditional, and believing fully in the original Brotherhood Faith. He thought that the Fifth Empire had lost its way, and become corrupt, immoral and impotent from a military point of view. He thought, in common with many other Brothers, that "democracy" had been taken too far, that the Empire need a firm, authoritarian hand, to root out corruption, crime, Nihilist and other terrorism. It also needed to have its industries and factories sorted out, with a strong curb being applied to rich, self-indulgent industrialists. To this end, he appealed to the lower classes and workers, though without intending to give them any more rights or freedom.

However, when he put his beliefs into practice, things did not work out as intended. He produced a harsh dictatorship, and gave his more extreme lieutenants the freedom to become self-indulgent, cruel and corrupt in their turn. He put into practice anti-ethnic policies, which backfired. He tried to revitalise and reorganise the Army, but his military offensives failed in the end, and the Frontier Army became weaker than before. He tried to backpedal on some of his policies, and only attracted the ire of his more extremist followers. Morally, too, he seems a genuinely tragic figure. He aimed to tighten up public and private moral behaviour, with regard to crime, immorality and business corruption, but the general amoral malaise of the time made this impossible. Philosophy and science had led to the near collapse of traditional moral and religious beliefs and codes of conduct, and the atmosphere of the time was "do what you want". Art followed this trend, as artists now belonged to one of two schools: nationalist, that is, toadying to the regime, or art for art's sake, in other words, an amoral aesthetic decoration of any topic or event, however crude, pointless or immoral. Celeuos thus found that his initial attempts to crack down on immorality in behaviour or art was soon widely ignored or ridiculed. Lip-service was paid to rooting out corruption in public office, or blatantly immoral sexual behaviour in life or art, but all these things in fact continued and increased in private, and later in public amongst the more powerful of the Brothers, who could be considered, as superior beings, to be allowed to behave differently from the general run of humanity. In due course, Celeuos found he had no objective support against which to fix his codes of morality, and by 811 had virtually abandoned the attempt. Indeed he was himself tragically moved along by the "Zeitgeist". While personally he remained traditionally upright in his personal life, he followed the trend for more violence and cruelty in government. His despotism led to widespread arrests of anyone who disagreed with his policies, and they were more and more often tortured before being released or executed. Brotherhood beliefs were instilled into the population at every opportunity, at school, in festivals and in art and propaganda.

Thus the tragedy of Celeuos is perhaps simply that he simply could not live up to or conscientiously carry out the beliefs and policies he supported to their logical extreme. As a result, he was to be overthrown and replaced by other, more single-minded and ruthless men. In 812, Borbar Measel, the Helvran commander of the Regular Army in the provinces of Atlantis and Tuainnatlantis, plotted a coup. He was backed by fellow Helvran officers in the Helvrieh Army. While Celeuos was in the east of Dravidieh, Borbar declared him a traitor and criminal, and inviting all other armies to join him, marched with a small force on Cennatlantis. If the main Frontier Army in the east had supported Celeuos, Borbar would have quickly been overwhelmed. But Borbar had made careful preparations, and by promising favours to the Internal Security Army, had swung much of it to his support. Moreover, he was also able to draw on a strong groundswell of opinion against Celeuos amongst Brothers. Borbar moved fast, and reached the capital, before Celeuos could react. Celeuos approached from the east, and hesitated. There was some half-hearted fighting, which Borbar won, and then, as his support began to trickle away, Celeuos lost his nerve and retreated eastwards. His supporters now completely evaporated, and his troops revolted, imprisoning him, and then handing him over to Borbar. Borbar at once personally executed him, and, as an illustration of the growing barbarity of the times, searched out and put to death every other member of his family.

THE FIFTH EMPIRE

1. The re-invention of Empire, 829 – 844

The reluctant saviour: Pareon Gestil, 828 - 831

PAREON GESTIL: HIS CHARACTER AND IDEALS

With the death of Brindor, Pareon Gestil became the effective controller of the Atlantean Empire. For the past months he had declared his aim of restoring the traditional form and constitution of a true Atlantean Empire, as well as a moral Government for it. He immediately abolished Brindor's title of "Great Leader", banned the brotherhood Party, arrested numerous officials within it, and declared the initiation as from the previous February (his revolt) of a Fifth Empire, to represent a complete break with the past. For similar reasons, he also started a new Dynasty, the Celam-Rayustel, a purely formal gesture. Clearly the new Empire needed a new Emperor, but Pareon himself was at first unwilling to be that Emperor himself. He saw himself as a straightforward military man, able, perhaps, to smash the remains of the Tyrants' regime and save the Empire from the invasions of its enemies, but not of sufficient ability and stature to establish and rule an n equable new Empire. He insisted that to avoid committing any immoralities while in Government he must have all his actions vetted by a committee of equals. Only after this sort of government proved ineffective and then after considerable persuasion, did he finally agree to being declared Emperor in April 829, again back-dated to February 828. (This leads to the curious situation that the period of the Tyrants was reckoned to end in February 828, yet Brindor himself was still admitted to be ruling part of the country until January 829.)

Pareon wrote a self-analysis as a reluctant candidate for the throne in his autobiography after he "retired" three years later. His comments on himself were generally just, but even so his achievements while Emperor were considerable. He was 41 years old in 828, was married, for the second time, and had three children. In himself, he was indeed a conservative soldier, of strict moral beliefs and behaviour, old-fashioned religion (Theism), and was horrified by the violence, immorality and lack of respect for traditional Atlantean values evinced by the tyrants and generally by increasing numbers of citizens. There were indeed at least three separate crises facing the Empire by now. There was the obvious political one, caused by the downfall of Brindor, but the remaining vengeful Brotherhood gangs in the east of the Empire. There was military crisis caused by the collapse of the traditional Atlantean Army, and the increasing incursions by other States on to Atlantean territory. And finally, there was indeed a spiritual and moral crisis within the Empire: crime and immorality had rocketed throughout the past 15 years and more, as more and more people took their lead from the abominable behaviour of the Tyrants. Pareon may well have been daunted by the tasks that seemed to stand before him.

THE MILITARY SUCCESSES

Not surprisingly, Pareon's greatest success in re-organising the Empire came in sorting out the military problems which faced it. He had been an able general, and succeeded in instilling new morale into the demoralised Atlantean Army. He quickly abolished the old Internal Security Army, and incorporated many of the soldiers, though not the leaders, into the new, voluntary, regular Army. He faced chaos caused by rebels, fighters for independence, supporters of Brindor, and occupation forces from surrounding States all round the Empire. But the direst crisis was a result of a massive invasion of Nunchalrieh by the armies of the military leader of Skallandieh, Golumen Gishi.. This had begun in February 829, and in the absence of organised resistance by the regular Atlantean Army, most of which was still rounding up Government troops in the interior, enemy forces soon overran most of the province as far south as Runnates. The fort of Buresso held out against them, but other forces moved south-east towards Dravidieh. Pareon set up a defensive line on the river Chalcratoura, and in the late summer of 829 delivered a decisive defeat against the enemy's forces south of Runnates. Still rebuilding the strength and morale of his Army, and having simultaneously to deal with reorganising a whole Empire, Pareon spent the rest of the year securing the latter Provinces, and making minor attacks from the Keltish mountains on the Skallands' flank. Then in 830, he attacked them from the east. In a brilliant series of attacks and manoeuvres, he defeated the Skallands and worked his way north-west back to Buresso and then northwards. The war was not won, but the Skallands were forced back to the edges of the Empire.

As mentioned, Pareon also faced the remains of Brother supporters in the east of the Empire. These included many who had never agreed to the defeat of Brindor, as well as many soldiers who had been thrown out of the Internal Security Army recently disbanded. Pareon fairly successfully brought law and order back to these eastern Provinces by the end of 829. Elsewhere he succeeded at least in preventing further incursions by the Uariltteccoath in the south-east (with which he agreed a peace-treaty), or by the Rabarrans in the south. Nevertheless he was unable to retake much of the territory conquered over the previous twenty years, let alone the island of Helvrmon in the Helvengio. This, most embarrassingly, had been seized in 828, when the defenders deserted their posts, and the navy had left the Helvremon. In the north-west he agreed with Quendelieh that they should continue to keep troops in Yciel Atlantis and other parts of Marossan, as well as the seas thereabouts, in order to protect Atlantean interests.

POLITICAL AND MORAL FAILURES

Pareon was desperately anxious to restore a proper representative and democratic government to the Empire, and he spent most of the two years from 829 to 831 trying to recreate a parliament of national unity. He quickly declared complete toleration for all nationalities within the Empire, reversing the Tyrants' cruel racism, and in particular rebuilt the Army as fully multi-ethnic again. However, many people in the previously persecuted races of the Empire – Helvrans, Kelts, Jutes, Ughans – immediately demanded complete independence. The Jutes, indeed, had already effectively succeeded in this some years earlier, and many of the Kelts who had survived the Tyrants, were also refusing to obey the Emperor. Pareon was unable to settle this situation, nor was he successful in producing a more accountable form of government for the Empire. He tried to set up a Council representing the peoples of the Empire, and called several elections. The members assembled, but were then dispersed due to chronic inability to agree on any topic at all put to them by the Emperor. Indeed many these Council sessions ended in complete chaos and rowdiness. In the end, Pareon was forced to rule by imperial decree on his own.

Pareon did try to settle accounts with the past by arresting a large number of Brothers, officers and civilians. He originally wanted to concentrate on just bringing the leaders to trial, trying to achieve some sort of reconciliation with the lower-ranking members, but such was the hatred felt against the Tyrants and their supporters in the hearts of most of their victims, that he was forced to widen his net to include many ordinary supporters of the Brothers. These people were tried in batches between 829 and 831 in courts whose judges themselves had to be firstly thoroughly purged. The courts had to be well protected by the new Army, as there were a number of attempts to rescue the defendants by attacks from outside. In the end, a considerable number of Brothers were executed or imprisoned, but earlier on, some were released (who quickly fled abroad, usually to "Uariltecoth"), due to the connivance of judges left over from the previous regime.

Pareon was scarcely more successful in producing a change in the moral and spiritual atmosphere of the Empire. Crime and violence, immorality of all sorts, and a lack of belief in any traditions were rife in 828, and the best that could be said of the situation three years later, was that they were perhaps no worse. Pareon tried to set a good example himself, and appoint only morally upstanding Ministers to run the country, but by and large, much of the Empire did not notice, or was so distracted by the general unrest, that higher moral standards and a greater spiritual ethos was the least of its interests.

PAREON "PERSUADED" TO RETIRE

By 831, it was becoming clear that Pareon was unable to realise his ideals for a new Empire. His plans were being frustrated at every turn, and it looked improbable that, while he was in charge, the Empire would ever emerge from stagnation and chaos to restore its former prestige and greatness. According to his memoirs, he had made up his mind by 831 to resign power in favour of a better-qualified successor. The event which finally forced a changeover occurred in April 831, when a renegade military force of brotherhood sympathisers attacked guards in a courtroom and released 18 Brotherhood officers being tried, causing six deaths and many injuries. Pareon immediately announced his intention of retiring and handing over power to Thildo Gailonex. It also seems that Quendelieh, some of whose troops were present in Atlantis, had also been pressurising Pareon to go. Some Quendi soldiers were actually on duty at the courtroom during the attack, and four were wounded.

Gailonex had been Pareon's Commander-in-Chief in the recent war against Skallandieh, and was thereafter made Chief Controller, that is to say, Pareon's chief Minister. Although only 34, Gailonex was obviously extremely able and ambitious, and what was more, had deeply held views about the future of the Empire, which corresponded to many of Pareon's own, more confused notions. It is unlikely, however, that Pareon, or anyone else at this time, guessed just how successfully Gailonex would be able to carry out his plans for the Empire.

On 9th May 831, Pareon resigned, and Gailonex became the new Emperor. Pareon retired into private life and wrote his memoirs. Then, in June 834, one of the Brotherhood members who escaped in the courtroom drama of April 831, and had never been recaptured, assassinated Pareon and his wife at home, before shooting himself. In August, Gailonex ensured that he was given the Throne-name of Atlaniphon IV, as a true saviour of the Empire, and a link to the admired Second Empire. This name was not regularly used by later historians, however.

THE FIFTH EMPIRE:

THE EARLY AND MIDDLE FINAL WARS

865 – 882

3. The dusk of Empire and the Early and Middle Final Wars, 865 – 882: the reigns of Gaistuyex (865 – 880) and Gaiduiccon (865 – 883).

1. "Past into Future" ("Buaimaxan silin Yoyan") and "Past and Present" ("Buaimaxan e Ianette") – Atlantis' internal quarrels on the edge of the precipice, 865 – 870.

THE FAMILY BACKGROUNDS OF THE YOUNG EMPERORS.

The opposing characters of Gaistuyex and Gaiduiccon emerge very clearly from their family backgrounds. Gaistuyex, 27 years old in 865, had married five years earlier. The marriage had been arranged by his father for reasons of state, and involved the daughter of his closest Adviser. There seems to have been little love involved in it. His wife duly provided Gaistuyex with two sons and two daughters by 872, and then was "put away" on an estate and only rarely received visits by her husband. In 875 rumours began that she had a lover and when this was substantiated, at least to Gaistuyex's satisfaction, he brought her to trial, and in the full glare of publicity, she and her lover were found guilty of adultery. This had not been a crime, as such, in Atlantis for over a century, but recently Gaistuyex's conservative regime had imposed strict punishments for moral misdemeanours. He now exacted exemplary punishment on the two lovers, under the pretext that the adultery involved the Imperial Family. The lover was executed, and the wife banished to Skallandieh, from where she later fled to Phonaria. (After Gaistuyex's death in 880, Gaiduiccon invited her back, but she had become ill, and died in exile in 881.) Gaistuyex spent his remaining years at the front until his death. Rumours later circulated after 880 that he had had secret mistresses, but Gaiduiccon deprecated them, and their truth remains unproved.

The young Gaiduiccon - a bust from 865

Gaiduiccon made no such pretence of being a paragon of all the virtues in his private life. He was 29 in 865, and had not married, but was notorious for his many love-affairs and frequent changes of mistress, a reflection of the free morals of the circles in which he moved – liberal politicians, artists and writers. He was persuaded by his advisers and by Gaistuyex himself to get married, once he became joint Emperor. He could not make up his mind whom to marry for some years, until in 869 he met someone he truly loved. In the 870s, as his power was taken away from him, he devoted himself more and more to home life, and abandoned many of his earlier bohemian ways – he even took up Natural Theistic Morality at this time, in place of his earlier avowed atheism.

His wife had two children, a boy in 874 and a girl in 877 (who died young in 880). She was of mixed Chalcran and Ughan background, which made her unpopular with the conservatives. When her home area was overrun by the Ughans in 880, her parents and daughter were caught and killed, while other members of her family were taken prisoner. She became a focus for demands for a truce or peace from the Ughans to Gaiduiccon. She went on an unofficial mission to Ughrieh in 881, and was kept hostage there. In 882, Gaiduiccon did agree to a truce – many said, in order to free his wife. She then rejoined him, but in 883 he was overthrown as Emperor by Crehonerex IV. He and his wife were allowed to retire to private life in SW Atlantis, near Celing, on the coast, despite demands by conservatives that he should be put on trial. But others realised he knew too much for this about the opinions, conduct and morals of many leading conservative politicians for this to be risked. When war began again in 884, Gaiduiccon threatened to speak up again. Within a month he and his wife were killed in a massive explosion and fire in their villa, almost certainly the work of frightened Atlantean enemies, but blamed on a seaborne raid by Rabarran forces. Gaiduiccon's son, now 10, was looked after by one of his sisters, on the Government's instructions.

POLITICAL TENSIONS – COUP AND COUNTER-COUP.

Internally, a degree of reform and a loosening of authoritarianism took place. The liberals, led by Gaiduiccon, and based on the "Past into Future" movement, ("Buaimaxan silin Yoyan" in classical Atlantean, which is how it was often written) sought peace abroad, more industrialisation at home, as well as social and moral liberalisation. Gaiduiccon, who had personal control over home affairs, tried, with some success, to push forward political, social and moral liberalisation, but he was opposed by his brother, Gaistuyex, who was the figurehead for the conservatives and supporters of his father. This group formed a party parallel to the "Past into Future", which was called "Past and Present", ("Buaimaxan e Ianette") which wanted to keep things exactly as they were. There was also a more moderate group in the Council, which wanted to loosen the current authoritarian political structure, while retaining the traditional moral controls which had been a feature of the Fifth Empire hitherto. Gaistuyex became increasingly annoyed at the growing success of his brother and the support for him amongst a majority of the Council.

This reached a head in 868, when the Council voted for Gaiduiccon to become sole Emperor, as well as for more control over local government. Gaistuyex refused to agree to this, but the Council in turn rejected his refusal. This led to stalemate, as Gaiduiccon also had no intention of giving in to his brother. The elements of the State were now disastrously divided between the two extremes. Gaiduiccon had the support of much of the Council, other members of the Imperial Family, and the liberals of the "Past into Future" movement. Gaistuyex was backed by the Army and some Provincial Governors, as well as the conservative "Past and Present" movement in the country at large. The religious establishment largely, though rather reluctantly, lined up behind the conservatives, because they generally supported or gave lip-service to the tenets of Natural Theistic Morality. The moderate centre was reduced to impotence. Gaistuyex thus had the most effective backers, and called a State of Emergency, and put the Army on alert. Gaiduiccon appealed to the Army to stay neutral. There followed a period of cautious manoeuvring, but no actual bloodshed. The crisis was partly resolved by an upsurge of assassinations inspired by Rabarrieh including some Governors and members of the Imperial Family. This inspired demands for revenge from the Army and others who normally supported Gaistuyex, but also produced an urge for compromise, in order to deal more effectively with the potential threat from abroad. Gaistuyex made an agreement with his brother, by which he gave way to him on social affairs and politics, but retained control of the Army, foreign affairs, and kept an overall veto.

For the next couple of years, the two parties worked separately. Gaiduiccon replaced many Governors, while Gaistuyex built up the Army and purged its commanders, preparing for a war with Rabarrieh, which to him at least, seemed inevitable. Gaistuyex agreed to some of Gaiduiccon's reforms, but vetoed others. By 870, he was using his veto regularly, and the Council, now dominated by liberals, demanded the right to "out-veto the veto". It was really demanding full executive power for itself, with the support of one Emperor only, Gaiduiccon. Gaistuyex saw the real possibility looming that he would soon lose all power. At the same time, he was desperate to prepare the Empire for war with Rabarrieh, and had already planned an advance strike against Rabarrieh, to force war, and thereby unite the country behind himself. However, he was beaten to it by Rabarrieh itself, which had its eyes on seizing the last remaining bastion of Atlantis on the Southern Continent, Miolrel. The king of Rabarrieh, Athulco Alibixo, thought that the Atlanteans must at this moment be concerned solely with the internal struggles between the two Emperors, and would be unable and unwilling to offer much resistance to a Rabarran take-over of Miolrel. In fact, this event stirred Gaistuyex to action. He decided to carry out a counter-coup against his brother and the Council, claiming dire necessity and the need for the Empire to unite under one leader, himself, against the Rabarran threat. In July, he occupied the Council Chamber with troops, imprisoned Gaiduiccon, set up military rule, and arrested many liberals, including Councillors. There was some scattered resistance on the streets, but the Army dealt ruthlessly with this. Immediately afterwards, war was declared on Rabarrieh, and Gaistuyex seized the opportunity to imprison, torture or execute many more Councillors, and replace all Provincial Governors who supported the liberals.

Essentially now, Gaistuyex and the conservatives had triumphed for good, with the backing of the Army and almost permanent war abroad. The religious establishment was initially behind him too, but many had qualms about his ruthlessness and willingness to torture and murder, and this later led to a falling-out between them. In fact, Gaistuyex paid only lip-service to Religion, and after 876, it was Gaiduiccon who converted whole-heartedly to the faith. Gaiduiccon was in fact released from imprisonment in 872, shorn of nearly all his powers, and he agreed to concentrate on helping to create a "militarised" economy at home, while Gaistuyex fought the war and effectively controlled the Empire. Gaiduiccon did not disavow his liberal views, and in the war truces of 873-5 and 882, briefly gained more influence. However, there was no freedom any more to express liberal views in public, which were against the Government. Most people now reverted to the quietism on the 840s and 850s, overwhelmed as they were by the growing disasters of the war.

2. The Early Final Wars: Dittuix Crehix Scatissix: 870 – 875

THE SHAPE OF THE EARLY FINAL WARS AS A WHOLE

After 870, Atlantis was to be almost permanently at war with one or more of her neighbours until her final overthrow in 889. These Wars are traditionally divided into two halves – the Early Final Wars, until 882, and the Later Final Wars from 884 to the end of Atlantis. These Wars are punctuated by two truces, which in fact seem only to have made the antagonists prepare themselves for even larger scale fighting. The first part of the early Wars lasted from 870 till 873. The combatants were Atlantis and the Far Southern Continent on the one side, and Rabarrieh on the other. The war began when the Rabarrans tried to take over the sole remaining Atlantean city south of the Helvengio, Miolrel. Neither side mobilised very fully, and the war consisted of a series of disconnected and relatively small-scale attacks by each side. A truce was agreed in 873, which suited both sides, and enabled them to seek additional allies and to mobilise much greater armies for the inevitable resumption of the conflict. Rabarrieh managed to persuade the Far Southern Continent to agree to a cease-fire in 874, and then make complete peace. She also induced Skallandieh to try to regain the lands lost in the Great Northern War by attacking the Quendelien forces on the Marossan border, though not for a few months after war had resumed with Atlantis. On the other side, Atlantis got Quendelieh to agree to actively defend the frontier against a possible attack by Skallandieh in the north, a much firmer defensive alliance than had ever existed between the two Empires in the past. However, Ughrieh insisted on maintaining neutrality. This second phase of the Early Final Wars lasted till 882. For the first couple of years, Atlantis and Rabarrieh fought with huge armies to and fro across hundreds of miles on both sides of the Gestes. Then other countries began to join in, all on Rabarrieh's side. Firstly, Skallandieh, who was fended off by Quendelieh, then in 878, Ughrieh. The same year, Quendelieh gradually withdrew from the fray, leaving Atlantis to face the armies of the Skallands. However, in 880, the Far Southern Continent joined in on Atlantis' side, against the Rabarrans.

As a result of the mounting opposition to Atlantis, her forces were gradually forced further and further back into her Empire after 878. Finally in 882, the (now solitary) Atlantean Emperor, Gaiduiccon, agreed a truce with all his enemies. This is the end of the Early Final Wars: the Later Final Wars began in 884 under his belligerent successor, Crehonorex IV, with a massive Atlantean offensive, and then, after 886, the final enemy counter-attack, which led to the utter defeat of Atlantis within two years.

THE ARMIES AND PLANS OF THE COMBATANTS AND THEIR WAR AIMS.

The war began with both sides armed very similarly, with no great changes in weaponry or tactics since the Great Northern War. Both sides possessed tanks, but these were little used in the first three years of war. Atlantis had a total fighting force of about 1600000 men, or sixty armies (FEGGISSIX), each roughly 25000 strong, (20 BORFEGGISSIX of 80-90000 men), plus separate units of tanks, artillery and cavalry, as well as reserve forces. However, these were of course spread all around the perimeter of the Empire, and in the initial Atlantean attacks, only small armies of 80000 or less were employed. Rabarrieh had also to defend against the Far Southern Continent, and had overall slightly fewer forces throughout her Empire. She also only used small armies in the attacks of 870-873.

Rabarrieh had become more actively expansionist and aggressive against Atlantis since the accession in 860 of a new king, Athulco Alibixo. He wanted to cause as much damage as possible to the Atlanteans, forcing them back north of the Helvengio, and then, with the aid of allies such as the Ughans, and then seizing all the territory he could north of that sea and the river Gestes. He began by making an agreement with the Ughans to hand over Borepande and the surrounding area, strategically placed athwart the river Gestes. He also tried, unsuccessfully, to make alliances with Ughrieh and Yciel Tuaince Mandagge. In the middle years of the decade, he was distracted by internal troubles, and hence missed the opportunity, as had been his original plan, of securing Miolrel at the moment when Gailonex died, and the Atlanteans were ruled by a new and inexperienced Emperor. However, the discord between the two new joint Emperors gave him another chance, which he seized in 870 by moving into Miolrel. Thereafter, Rabarrieh's main aims were to hold Miolrel, the Blue Isles (at the mouth of the Helvengio) and Helvremon island, as well as conquering the Jutish peninsula. As we shall see, she succeeded in achieving only some of this, and then decided on a truce before resuming the war on a bigger scale. Then, as both sides' armies, greatly increased in size, swept across vast swathes of each other's territory, Rabarrieh aimed to eject the Atlanteans from Helvrieh and lands east of the Great Lakes. This only became feasible once other countries joined in the war against Atlantis, above all the Ughans. Thereafter, as the Skallands too started fighting Atlantean troops, Rabarrieh, and to a lesser extent, Ughrieh, extended their war aims to the complete destruction of Atlantean rule on the Great Continent.

Gaistuyex was aware from the time of his accession that Rabarrieh would certainly try to seize Miolrel in the near future. He realised that realistically it was indefensible as a small island of Atlantean property surrounded by and incorporating Rabarrans and other southerners. He did not expect it to defend itself for long against an enemy attack, but if this happened, he aimed to take it back by an amphibious invasion on the root of the Miolrel peninsula, taking it, ejecting all inhabitants, and turning it into a fortress to guard the entrance to the Helvengio. Atlantis would also send out an expedition, with her anticipated ally, Yciel Tuaince Mandagge, to occupy Siphya and the local islands. Gaistuyex hoped thereby, in a subsequent peace, to retain at least some of the ground thus gained. He did not expect to be able to seriously reoccupy much of Rabarrieh's, and formerly Atlantis' territory, in the south, but neither did he expect Rabarrieh to try to take over much of Atlantis' lands north of the Helvengio. During and after the truce of 873-5, he, like the Rabarrans, realised he must plan on a much larger scale, with bigger armies and grander strategic objectives. He now aimed to utterly defeat the Rabarrans, and take back as much of the former Atlantean territories seized by them over the past 90 years, as he could. This plan soon proved to be unattainable, and after 878, as more and more Atlantean territory fell into enemy hands, his only aim was to defend and preserve as much of it as possible.

THE "PHONEY WAR" ALONG THE RIVER GESTES

As mentioned above, the fighting in the first two or three years of war was uncoordinated and indecisive on both sides. There was no conflict at all across the river Gestes, because of the anomalous nature of the border here. At the outlet of the river into the Gestes, Atlantis owned the Provinces both north (Meistayieh) and south (Iutieh) of the river. Then, as far east as Vulcanipand, the area south of the river was technically part of the Rabarran Military Border and hence could only contain a limited number of troops, by international convention. This would hardly have prevented the Rabarrans using it to invade Meistayieh, if they had wished to, and indeed the area was used as a base for invading westwards into Iutieh, but the Gestes was very wide to cross at this point, and the Rabarrans contented themselves with trying to take over Iutieh, the last Atlantean Province south of the Gestes or the Helvengio. The next stretch of the Gestes, up to near Borepande, was strictly an independent kingdom, and both sides found it convenient to keep their troops out of it, at this stage. The Rabarrans did not want to attract the Atlanteans across the river, thereby also threatening their territory around Borepande (see below), while the Atlanteans also considered the neutral country here provided their provinces north of the Gestes with some protection.

Matters were most complicated around Borepande. In 861 Rabarrieh had "bought" this fortress and some 5000 square miles of land on both sides of the Gestes from the Ughans, who had owned it ever since they wrested it from the Atlanteans during the rule of the Tyrant Brindor. This exchange of territory had been the result of a deal between Rabarrieh and Ughrieh, in which the Rabarrans had helped the Ughans crush an invasion by forces of several small kingdoms south of her territory and north-east of the Rabarrans', north of the river Baccuel. At the same time, Rabarrieh obtained a rather vague agreement from the Ughans that they would join in a war against the Atlanteans on the side of Rabarrieh, if the Atlanteans captured. The great virtue of Borepande for Rabarrieh was that it gave her a foothold across the Gestes in the case of an all-out war against Atlantis. However, the territory was completely cut off from the rest of Rabarrieh, and Atlantis refused to allow any supply line to be traced through the neutral lands to the south of it, threatening immediate war if Rabarran troops crossed this territory. As a result, Rabarrieh had to make an agreement with the Ughans allowing supplies only to be traced, at certain pre-arranged times, through Ughan territory via Versciun and the Versciun and Thawril Passes. Troop movements were limited to once a year, with prior notice, with some increase possible in case of war, but again only by mutual agreement. So here again, Rabarrieh was anxious not to provoke the Atlanteans to conflict on this front, until she was ready to strike across the Gestes with overwhelming strength, via the neutral territory and using Borepande as a crossing-point. Equally the Ughans did not want to provoke the Atlanteans by allowing the Rabarrans to send many troops through their territories, nor did Atlantis want to seem to threaten her borders in any way. This delicate diplomatic game lasted until the truce of 873. So the fighting in this first part of the war was concentrated around the Helvengio and the Eriphicko to the south.

870 – 873: THE FALL OF MIOLREL, THE INVASION OF THE SIPHIYAN ISLANDS, THE ATTACK ON IUTIEH, AND THE BATTLES OF THE BLUE ISLES.

Miolrel, the last lonely outpost of the Atlanteans on the south side of the Helvengio, was already a seething hotbed of Rabarran sympathisers even before the war, and it fell to the invaders in August 870. Atlantis was able to evacuate the army and a large armada of terrified Yallands and Atlantean settlers flooded across the narrow channel of the Helvengio to the peninsula of Numidis. Atlantis immediately blockaded the main Rabarran ports in the Helvengio, Noehtens and Raihco. Meanwhile, before reinvading Rabarran territory on the south side of the Helvengio, she prepared a great naval invasion force to steam to the Siphian islands, linking up with reinforcements from Yciel Tuaince Mandagge. The main aim of this was the seize the great Rabarran naval base at Siphia, which would provide some protection for Yciel Tuaince Mandagge, and threaten the communications of the Rabarran capital, now at Kharadis, down the river Gosal to the Eriphicko. The expedition had some initial success in 871 in that it landed on two of the Siphian islands, and later captured a third, but the Atlantean navy was unable to destroy the Rabarran fleet, although part of it was hemmed in Siphia. By mid-871, 70000 men (three Atlantean Armies) plus 40000 allies were involved in this operation, which later involved a short-lived landing further along the coast from Siphia.

Further north, Atlantean troops dug in along the Gestes and around Borepande, and crossed the river, strictly within Rabarran territory, to try to cut the Rabarrans off from the south. However, there was not sufficient room to manoeuvre, and the Rabarran defences eventually forced the Atlanteans back across the Gestes. Rabarrieh's major offensive was across the Jutish border, as they wanted to conquer this final piece of Atlantean territory on "their" side of the Helvengio. The mountainous land was, however, ideal for defence, and the Rabarrans' force of 130000 men found the invasion very hard going. By the time of the truce in 873, they had forced their way across the Avlotans hills, and got as far west as the river Gayvot. But they could penetrate no further against the 80000 defenders and the local inhabitants, led by General Rahpos, a Jute himself, who defended their kavotans hills to the west ferociously. (Ironically, the Rabarrans had thus seized the avlotans, which means "mighty hills" in Jutish, but been thrown back from the kavotans, which means only "great hills". In fact, the latter hills were higher and more rugged than the former, and were protected at the front by the river Gayvot, and all round the other sides by the sea).

Later in 871, the Atlanteans landed a strong force from the sea to the west of Miolrel, hoping to cut Miolrel itself off by seizing the base of the little peninsula on which it was placed. However, this was pinned down in its bridgehead by the Rabarrans, and hastily evacuated early in 872, as the Rabarran threat to the Blue Isles became much greater, in turn threatening the seaborne communications of the invasion force. By this time, the Rabarrans had regained command of the Siphian area, almost hemming the Atlanteans in on their islands. In March, the Atlanteans decided to cut their losses, especially as the Rabarrans were making increasingly successful raids on the Blue Isles, the main Atlantean naval base protecting the Helvengio. The troops were withdrawn, but the expedition suffered considerable losses on the way back north from minefields and raiding Rabarran fleets. It was quickly followed up a large Rabarran fleet, which had been waiting for just this opportunity. Its troops invaded the Blue Isles (Zueltix Mandengix) and in the Second Battle of the Zueltix Mandengix, the Rabarran navy crushed the remains of the Atlantean Siphian navy, which was moved south from Atlantis to challenge it. However, an immediate attempt by the Rabarrans to enter the Helvengio and seize control of that sea met disaster at the Naval Battle of Giezuat. In August of 872, the Atlanteans made another landing near Miolrel, this time to the east, but again they were unable to advance beyond a bridgehead.

THE TRUCE OF 873-875

By the start of 873, deadlock had been reached between the two sides. Rabarrieh had made some gains, in Iutieh and the Blue Isles, but could get no further with her limited mobilisation of troops. Atlantis was in a worse state, having suffered severely in the Siphian expedition, and lost the Blue Isles and some of Iutieh. She had maintained control of the Helvengio, but with the Rabarran fleet holding the Blue Isles, she was unable to support the navy in the sea from outside. The Rabarrans now took the initiative and suggested a cease-fire, with both sides retaining what they had, pending a proper peace-treaty. Athulco Alibixo wanted to prepare much stronger forces to strike into Iutieh and take control of the Helvengio by seizing Helvremon. He would follow this up by an attack over the Gestes. He was not happy with the way his commander-in-chief, Qedif Alakultire, had conducted the war so far, and replaced him with the more aggressive Iltozamma Alatheinuqo. He also wanted to get the Ughans into the war as soon as possible, and to detach Yciel Tuaince Mandagge from her alliance with Atlantis, as she was causing the Rabarrans considerable trouble in the southern waters. The truce proposal was entirely cynical, and the King had no intention of reaching any sort of permanent peace-treaty at this stage.

Gaistuyex was aware that the war was not going as well as he had expected, and the enemy had taken Miolrel, occupied some of Iutieh and seized the Blue Isles, while all Atlantis could show for her efforts was a bridgehead near Miolrel. He too had purely practical reasons for agreeing to the truce offer, hoping that thereby he could halt Rabrrieh's successful advance for a while, while he fully mobilised his army and prepared strong counter-offensives against the enemy. He tried to haggle with the Rabarrans to return some of their war-gains, but they refused. Gaistuyex now concentrated on preparing his government and the population at large in the Empire for a renewed and much larger-scale war, with full commitment by industry and general conscription – exactly the same procedure as was occurring in Rabarrieh at the same time.

The Rabarrans took their time preparing for the next round of fighting, concentrating at first on diplomatic initiatives. In 874, they succeeded, by surrendering some territory and playing on her abandonment by Atlantis, in persuading Yciel Tuaince Mandagge into neutrality. They also were working hard on suggesting to Skallandieh that once the war between Atlantis and Rabarrieh resumed, she might consider it an opportune moment to fall on Marossan, across the Ereipha. This was defended solely by Quendeliens, and therefore should not necessarily involve the Skallands in conflict with Atlantis. For the Rabarrans, in any case, such a war would at least tend to distract the Atlanteans from the campaign in the south, and make them a little fearful of their northern frontier and its defences. However, Rabarrieh had no success with the Ughans, who were also being pressurised by Atlantis. They were determined to maintain their neutrality unless they, or Borepande, were actually attacked by the Atlanteans.

Rabarrieh had set her sights on gaining control of the Helvengio, when war recommenced. By 875, she had concentrated a large proportion of her navy within the Helvengio, so as to wipe out the Atlantean fleet based at Helvris and Giezuat, guarding the entrance to the sea with her navy in the Zueltix Mandengix and the forts and guns at the mouth of the Helvengio. As can be seen, this strategy was the exact opposite to Atlantis', and led initially to a disaster for the Rabarrans. On land, in the east, she left about four armies (around 400000 men) in and south of the Rabarran Military Border, south of the Gestes and west of the river Vulcan. There were also the defenders of Borepande completely separated up the Gestes. Further forces were being collected south of the Helvengio for seizing Helvremon, wiping out the Atlantean bridgehead near Miolrel, and generally serving as a reserve.

Gaistuyex, realising that Rabarran diplomacy was gradually isolating Atlantis, determined to strike the first blow in a resumed war, in August 875. He worked out a plan of attack with his new Commander-in-Chief, Zaippo. This involved both a land and a sea campaign. In order to protect his fleet in the Helvengio, and hence his planned amphibious attacks round Iutieh, he first planned that the Atlantean fleet based at Atlantis and Celing should move south, find and defeat the Rabarrans, who were based in the Zueltix Mandengix. Chasing them off south, he would then enter the Helvengio, and with the united fleet, defeat the Rabarrans there. On land, meanwhile, he was to collect behind the lower Gestes a massive force of eight BORFEGGISSIX, divided into three FEGGISSEMMIX, and backed up by large numbers of tanks – nearly 650000 men. While simultaneously completely shielding the Rabarrans in Borepande with 80000 men, this massive force would cross the river at Vulcanipand into neutral territory. It would then sweep south down the Vulcan, and cross it behind the flank of the Rabarrans to the west, their location being well known to Atlantean intelligence. At the same time, an amphibious force would land south-east of the rive Gayvot, at Duccorase, and attack the other flank of the enemy force. Small forces would also demonstrate across the Gestes, west of Vulcanipand, and across the Gayvot river from Iutieh. This great manoeuvre should surround the vast majority of Rabarran forces in the east, as well as trapping those on the borders of Iutieh, after which the Atlanteans could continue west along the southern Coast of the Helvengio, mopping up the enemy in the former Manralia.

THE WAR AT SEA – ATLANTEAN SUCCESS AND FAILURE, AUGUST 875

Atlantis abruptly broke the cease-fire in August 875, and sent a large fleet south to bring to battle the Rabarran navy, which was in and around the Zueltix Isles. Gaistuyex's excuse for thus breaking the cease-fire was that Rabarran troops had entered the neutral territory east of Vulcanipand. In fact some civilians were in this country, and two of them were later found to be spies, but they were certainly not in the armed forces. This fleet had been weakened, as a result of the concentration of Rabarran ships within the Helvengio, and the Atlanteans achieved a surprise. In the Third Battle of the Zueltix Mandengix, on August 8th-10th, the Atlanteans fought and defeated the surprised Rabarrans in a piecemeal series of fights, and chased them off south, as planned. Meanwhile, the Rabarran navy within the Helvengio moved quickly to blockade the smaller Atlantean fleet in Helvris and Giezuat. Outside the Helvengio, while most of the Atlantean navy was still following the defeated enemy down the coast of Yall. Thiss., a small part of the Atlantean force had started to bombard the guns and forts planted by the Rabarrans around the sea edge of the Miolrel peninsula: they were simultaneously bombarded by Atlantean guns from the Numidis peninsula some miles to the north. The Atlantean forces in the bridgeheads north of Pruoddos also tried to fight their way westwards to seize Miolrel by land. But the Atlanteans spent too long in this bombardment, with a navy split into halves.

They were unprepared for the quick reaction of the Rabarrans, who, having swept the Atlantean navy into port in the Helvengio, moved three quarters of this force speedily to the mouth of the sea. It emerged past the guns of Numidis, to strike the Atlantean ships still happily engaged outside in banging away at Miolrel and the neighbouring gun emplacements. These were scattered, and the Rabarrans moved back to their base in the Zueltix Isles, defeating a small force of Atlantean ships there. The Rabarrans now turned north to threaten Atlantis itself, denuded of naval protection as it was. This was in fact only a manoeuvre on the Rabarrans' part to bring the pursuing Atlanteans back north, so that they could be picked off by the Rabarrans. The plan worked well, the Atlanteans turning back north, after receiving an urgent recall by an alarmed government in Atlantis. The Rabarrans sparred with the returning Atlanteans, but avoided any full-scale battle by remaining within the protection of the Blue Isles. The Atlanteans skirted past the islands to the west, and moved back towards Atlantis, but by now, of course, the Rabarran ships here had long gone. The Rabarrans left a considerable proportion of their navy now outside the Helvengio. The time was now well into August. The Atlanteans decided to start the second phase of their operation, the land attack over the Gestes. For although they had failed to secure the protection of the Helvengio from the outside, they had largely emptied the sea of the Rabarran navy. There remained only the fairly small forces supposedly blockading the Atlanteans in their ports. On August 26th, the Atlanteans in Helvris sortied, and forced the Rabarrans back to Manralian coast. They were thus able to keep control of the eastern end of the Helvengio, allowing them to carry out the amphibious operation detailed below.

THE ATLANTEANS CROSS THE GESTES: THE FIRST BATTLE OF THE YALLODAIRU, AUGUST - SEPTEMBER 875

ATLANTEAN INVASION OF YALLTHISS, 875

At the end of August 875, Zaippo set the Atlantean armies pouring across the Gestes, according to plan, led by an unprecedentedly large force of tanks. The Atlanteans quickly overcame the feeble resistance here, and while one Army (from now on, that means Atlantean "borfeggissix", about 80000 men, or Rabarran armies of 100000) turned north to surround Borepande, the rest streamed south, accompanied by large numbers of tanks. The Rabarrans to the west were transfixed by Atlantean attempts to cross the Gestes between Vulcanipand and the Helvengio, and too late realised that huge forces were moving up the Vulcan round their flank. The Atlanteans soon gained several bridgeheads over the Vulcan on both sides of its junction with the Yalldairu, and were pressing against the Rabarrans in the north, in the narrow strip of land between the Gestes and the Vulcan. The Rabarrans began to retreat south-west, aiming to link up with reinforcements south and west of the Gairase. At this point (September 6th), the Atlantean amphibious force landed near Duccorase. It was at first hemmed in its bridgehead, but its very presence forced the Rabarrans to veer off to the south-east as they retreated, across the Yalldairu. By late September, the Rabarrans had suffered heavy casualties, but had got most of the remnants of their armies over the Yalldairu, moving generally towards the Raziris mountains to the south-east. In the middle of September, the Atlanteans at Duccorase had managed to break out of their bridgehead, and moved initially northwards to join up with the other forces moving south towards them, and aiming to cut off as many Rabarrans as they could in the Avlotans area. As many of the Atlanteans were also looking south and west in this area, there were only two armies left to follow the Rabarrans as they retreated eastwards. The result was that by the beginning of October, while large numbers of Rabarrans had become casualties or prisoners west of the Yallodairu, probably about 150000, at least another 200000 had escaped south-eastwards, while 50000 or more crossed the Gairase to the south. The Atlanteans lost only about 25000 men all told in this First Battle of the Yallodairu.

THE OVERTHROW OF GAIDUICCON, 883

As soon as the peace was agreed, Gaiduiccon faced continual criticism for ending the war with such large concessions to her enemies. At least half his advisors were against it, as well as much of the army, despite the fact that Atlantis had obviously been steadily losing ground for several years. It was whispered that the Emperor had always been a pacifist at heart, and only wanted to rescue his wife from Ughan captivity. At the same time, Gaiduiccon's old supporters gradually re-emerged as well, making their old demands for peace with democracy. They rejoiced that Atlantis had been shorn of much of her Empire, but were not really able now to demand more industrial and technological progress, as they had in the 860s, as this had been thrust on them by the war, and they did not much like it. So now they sought a return to a way of life which perhaps had preceded industrialisation, with small-scale industry and settlements. Meanwhile the Believers, whom Gaiduiccon now after all supported, were themselves split, as half of them still hated the agnostics and the democrats, and found themselves willy-nilly in the war camp. Gaiduiccon wavered as a result of this pressure, and in the spring of 883, permitted the armed forces to remain on standby for a possible resumption of hostilities.

By the middle of 883, Gaiduiccon was becoming ignored and bypassed by the military and their allies, who continued rearming and making preparations for war, whatever he said. However, from time to time, he objected and held things up, and so plots began to overthrow him, and replace him by one of the military, specifically the general in command of the central Front. The Commander-in-Chief, Zaippo, a supporter of the peace and a friend of the Emperor, remained ignorant of this plot, and was looked on with disgust by the plotters for his unmanly pacifism.

On July 23rd 883, Gaiduiccon was quietly arrested, and told he had been deposed in favour of a new Emperor, to be called Crehonerex IV. Simultaneously, all Gaiduiccon's supporters were arrested, and to show its determination, the army, with Crehonerex's approval, shot many of these leaders, and put down a series of rallies in favour of Gaiduiccon with great brutality. Gaiduiccon himself was threatened with a trial, and according to his own later comments, with torture, unless he retired from the scene, and told his supporters to support the new regime. Whatever the reason, this is what he did, retiring with his family into private life. Later, he regretted his weakness at this time, and spoke up again, claiming he could reveal secrets about the private behaviour of the new members of the Government, and other scandals, financial and moral. Certainly pamphlets were secretly produced over the next two years, accusing Crehonerex and his cronies of secret immorality. The Government went to great lengths to quash these rumours and writings, and was very probably behind Gaiduiccon's in the mysterious explosion at his house, just after the war began again, which killed him and his wife, and destroyed all the writings he had committed to paper.

CREHONEREX IV AND THE PREPARATIONS FOR A NEW WAR, 883 - 884

Crehonerex was one of Gaistuyex's favourite generals, who until 881 had commanded quite successfully in Helvrieh. He was then transferred to the northern front, and conducted the brief, successful counter-offensive against Skallandieh, when that country alone refused to take part in the truce which ended the Middle Later Wars. Crehonerex was an outspoken critic of the 882 Peace of Gasiroto, and a vocal opponent of Gaiduiccon. He led the military rearmament, which Gaiduiccon was forced to concede in 883, and was now appointed to the central Front. He led the plot to overthrow the Emperor, and was then crowned Emperor himself in January 884, forming a new Dynasty and taking the name Crehonerex IV.

We know little of his personal life, and there is probably little to know. He was born in 851 (and was thus 33 in 884), and married in 875. He rarely saw his wife afterwards, although they had one son in 878. His wife was slightly injured in Cennatlantis in 880 (at the same time as Gaistuyex was killed), and at the end of the war, in 888, both wife and son were killed with Crehonerex in the storming of Atlantis. According to rumour, Crehonerex had many mistresses during the wars, but generally he seems to have shown no interest in any emotional matters, nor artistic ones. He was certainly most at home with his military comrades.

He was a fanatical believer in Atlantis and Atlantean regeneration, and had worshipped Gaistuyex. He was now determined to continue fighting Atlantis' enemies until Atlantis regained her former boundaries - and this meant for him as much territory south of the Helvengio as possible. He refused to recognise that Atlantis must ultimately be overwhelmed by the sheer numbers of her enemies.

Over the next few months, Crehonerex worked furiously to re-equip the Atlanteans, and by means of rigorous conscription, increase the size of her armies. He planned to strike suddenly and unexpectedly against the Ughans, while maintaining the truce with Rabarrieh and Skallandieh. He would assure them that he only intended a limited attack on the Ughans, to regain ground which they were supposed to have given up anyway by the terms of the Peace of Gasirotto. (In fact both Ughans and Rabarrans had withdrawn some troops from the front line back towards the areas they had been granted in the Peace, but both sides were too suspicious of the Atlanteans to fully demobilise. Moreover, arguments over Cennatlantis and Helvrieh meant that Rabarran troops did not withdraw at all from those places). He would strike the Ughans in front across the Ruphaio, and in flank across the Chakratoura, surrounding them in the Cresskor Mountains, seizing Buresso and Runnates. This would be followed by an amphibious attack over Lake Chalcris, and then the rolling up of the Ughans from south to north, forcing them back to the Chalcran Forests. If they had not already declared war, Crehonerex then intended to turn on the Rabarrans, attacking east from Gasirotto, and at the same time south from against their eastern flank via Micazzo and Yellis, cutting them off from their communications. eastwards. To carry out these manoeuvres, he dismissed Zaippo as Commander-in-Chief, and replaced him with Norindel, a faithful supporter and very aggressive general.

The number of Atlantean armies in 884 was sixteen, the same in fact as in 882, but whereas then they had been worn down to under 1,000,000, they were now raised to 1,300,000, and this despite the fact that Atlantis had lost half her recruiting grounds over the past few years. In comparison, the Rabarrans had had 12 armies (about 1,100,000 men) in 882, the Ughans 6 (600,000) and the Skallands 7 (650,000). This made a total of 25 armies or about 2,350,000 men, over double the size of the Atlanteans. In 884, Atlantis' enemies had considerably fewer men at the front, and by attacking them one at a time, he would always be able to outnumber them. Above all, he hoped to keep the Skallands off his back, and tried throughout 884 and 885, quite successfully, to negotiate a permanent peace with them. Crehonerex was not able to hide his preparations from his enemies, but he did initially persuade the Rabarrans to remain neutral while he attacked the Ughans suddenly in July 884.

THE LAST ATLANTEAN OFFENSIVE. 884

THE DEFEAT OF THE UGHANS, 884

On July 28th 884, two Atlantean armies attacked and held the Ughans frontally in their positions on the mountains across the Ruphaio, while another two armies swung round through the Taigeheill woods, seized Buresso and moved over the Chakratoura against the rear and flank of the enemy to the north. The Ughans were fairly scattered about in the mountains, north of Buresso, and east of Encetes, with others still further east, so the Atlanteans were able to isolate and defeat them in small groups in the Second Battle of the Cresskor Mountains. The troops on the high Gedandolix were forced back and partly surrounded, while south of Buresso, a second strike nearly encircled the enemy west of the Chakratoura, forcing the remains of them over the river at Runnates. The time was now mid-August, and the Atlanteans hoped to carry on their attacks against the Ughans as planned, and prepared the amphibious crossing Lake Chalcris. However, Rabarrieh had decided that enough was enough as far as the Atlantean advances against Ughrieh were concerned, and on August 10th peremptorily declared war. Her relations with Ughrieh were still pretty frosty, and her strategy now was decided without any discussion. She threw parts of two armies against Gasiroto, and then struck north-west from the Cennatlantis front. Rundes was retaken here, but Gasiroto was completely impregnable, and the Rabarrans suffered incredible casualties during their assaults throughout August and September.

Meanwhile, Atlantean troops carried on their manoeuvres against the Ughans, deliberately remaining on the defensive against the Ughans. The amphibious attack crossed Lake Chalcris near Ronhusso and moved north, as other troops met them coming southwards. Further northwards, the Ughans were gradually forced back eastwards out of the mountains, and during September and October, the Atlanteans retook Gedancairn and Caddan, and their forces bulged out in a salient towards the Chalcran Forests. In September, the Rabarrans saw the chance to hit the Atlanteans advancing eastwards in flank up the east side of Lake Chalcris. However, their attack here towards the Chakratoura and Runnates was very badly organised and piecemeal, and while it forced the Atlanteans back some way, it in no way seriously impeded them. By the beginning of October, the fighting had died down everywhere, and while the Ughans and Rabarrans tried to organise their defence, the Atlanteans prepared for the next stage of their offensive.

THE UGHANS DEFEATED AGAIN, JANUARY - APRIL 885

The Atlanteans paused only for a couple of months. Then, on January 16th, they resumed their offensive. Once again, they began by hammering the Ughans. Five armies struck again south-eastwards towards the river Merros in the north and the Chalcran Forests to the south, and after a tenacious defence at first, the Ughans collapsed. Atlantean tanks appeared on the scene, and joined in the chase, and gradually the Ughans fell back. However, the weather and time of year, as well as a toughening Ughan defence meant that the Atlantean advance was slower and more costly than had been planned. By April the Forests had been taken and the slopes of the Dravidos hills finally slowed down the Atlantean advance to a crawl. On the southern flank of this advance, two Atlantean armies at first continued to remain on the defensive against the Rabarrans, who themselves made no further attacks here. They also seem to have been unaware of how the Atlantean advance was extending past their right flank, and by April, the Atlantean capture of Micazzo should have been a real warning to the Rabarrans to guard the communications of their armies to the west before Gasiroto and north of Ronhusso.

Rabarrieh, in fact, had her mind on a bold attack from the Rundes position directly north-westwards into Atlantidieh, a move which she hoped would stymie Atlantis' advances to the east of the Lakes. This campaign began in March, and within two weeks, Rabarran armies had forced the thin Atlantean line back almost to Failbloua. Atlantis, however, completely ignored this threat, and now struck hard at Rabarrieh, striking south on Ronhusso with two armies, and preparing two others to wheel southwards from the Micazzo area. The two armies north of Ronhusso turned the Rabarrans' right flank, and forced them back up the hills towards Sirottis at the end of April. For the next month the Second battle of Sirottis raged, as the Atlanteans gradually forced the Rabarrans southwards through and past Sirottis, and on 4th May, they relieved the fortress of Gasiroto. The Rabarrans were becoming aware by now of the threat to their right, or eastern, flank, and had spread out elements of three armies between Sirottis and the Croiden Mountains and Dravizzi hills. Crehonerex and his staff now saw their chance to strike a really decisive blow, and break the Rabarran communications, while cutting them off completely from the Ughans. Gradually during April and May, the Atlanteans sidestepped their armies southwards down their easternmost flank. While three armies remained facing the Ughans on and north of the Dravidos hills, one army moved on to seize the Croiden Hills, and two others grouped south of Micazzo with many tanks.

CAN THE COURSE OF HISTORY BE REVERSED? THE UGHANS AND RABARRANS ON THE BRINK OF DISASTER, APRIL - JULY.

On May 27th began the great Lake Trannolla campaign. To the east, the army on the Crolden Hills assaulted the Dravizzi position, more to keep the Rabarrans occupied, than in any expectation of seizing the position. Although sparsely defended at this stage, the Rabarran positions held, and the Atlantean attack was called off after ten days. No-one could know it then, but this would be a fateful failure, for the hills were never again going to be within the grasp of the Atlanteans, and that fact next year would allow the enemy to rebuild their forces from a position of near-defeat, and ultimately counter-attack the Atlanteans right back to the gates of Atlantis itself. But apart from this, the Atlanteans now had a great success. Their armies sped south on Yellis and Triallana, and then into the Babemme, catching a Rabarran counter-attack on Sirottis in flank. On they advanced, down to Rontisso and down the west bank of the Burastoura. Gradually the Rabarrans were being forced south-westwards away from their communications, and back on to Cennatlantis and Lake Trannolla.

Simultaneously to the west of Cennatlantis, the advance of the Rabarrans had run into difficulty. With the relief of Gasiroto, the Atlanteans had an army spare, and with this they struck the Rabarrans from the north in a battle north of Failbloua. Being still outnumbered, the Atlanteans should not have prevailed, but the Rabarrans were now transfixed by what was happening in Chalcrieh, and pulled back their armies to a defensive ring yet again. In Chalcrieh, the Atlanteans swung round west from Rontisso on Gilliso and Snattarona, and by the end of June, their armies to the east had reached the Lake. Rabarrieh's forces were thus sliced in two.

THE BATTLES OF CELINGE AND SECOND DRAVIZZI, AUGUST - OCTOBER

At sea, meanwhile, Rabarrieh launched an amphibious invasion of Atlantis itself. A large army landed near Celing in August 5th, and at first easily held off the sparse Atlantean defence in the Battle of Celing. But now the Atlantean navy emerged from Atlantis city, and crushed the Rabarran naval support force at sea. Without support, the Rabarrans on land were forced back into Celing, and forced to surrender on September 23rd.

In the east, Atlantis made what in retrospect was the mistake of trying to force her way westwards to the Dodolla, but was held off by the Rabarran armies on the hill positions around Gilliso and Snattarona. Only in August did she turn to the eastern flank, to try again to seize Dravizzi and Atlandravizzi. But she had been anticipated by Rabarrieh, who had quietly been moving up to three armies out of the Snattarona-Gilliso position south round Lake Trannolla and on to the Atlandravizzi hills. Thus the Atlantean attack here, when it finally came, was too late. Again and again, in September and October, her troops were thrown against these hills in the Second Battle of Dravizzi, but she lost huge numbers to no avail. Finally she admitted defeat here, and the whole vast front of conflict fell quiet - but not for very long.

The nations around the Empire, and their relationships with Atlantis.

ATLANTIS AGAINST HELVRIS

From the time of its initial expansion after 200, the Kingdom, later Empire, of Atlantis, was always surrounded by foreign powers, whether full states or anarchic tribes or nomads. Between 200 and about 450, Atlantis was able to swallow up many of these into her Empire, but thereafter, she was unable to expand much further, or conquer other peoples on any permanent basis. But at the same time, none of these surrounding states was able to conquer very much of the Atlantean Empire, either, whether acting singly or in alliance with others, at least until the time of the Final Wars. Here we shall try to account for this, and to outline the character of these other states and their relationship with Atlantis.

In the third and fourth centuries, Atlantis came up against, in turn, the Helvran Empire, the various Chalcran kingdoms and republics, numerous Yalland city and other states, the Keltish kingdoms, the Phonerian, Marossan and Eliossien republics, and the Dravidean peoples. All of these she incorporated into her Empire, usually by military conquest. In most cases, Atlantis achieved this by superior military skill and organisation, and often better weaponry. Distances were not too great: these countries were within relatively close, or at least reachable, distance from Atlantis city. Finally, many of these nations were Juralic like Atlantis, and had many aspects of their culture in common; hence they were not too difficult to absorb.

The first of Atlantis' conquests, Helvris, was in some ways the most formidable. The Helvran Empire was a long-standing and highly centralised state, a kingdom run in a very authoritarian way, and also strongly militarised. At the same time, it shared a number of common Juralic traits with Atlantis, such as languages, and a set of religious beliefs which were related to each other. At the same time, Helvris stood for a number of practices which were utterly inimical to Atlantis, and which she believed it was her duty to extirpate – these included human sacrifice, which had never been part of the original Juralic mythology, torture of prisoners of war, and a frighteningly efficient, phalanx-style method of waging war. The war of 250 onwards was almost inevitable, given the closeness of the two countries, but it took 17 years for Atlantis to finally beat the Helvrans, and then attempt almost to wipe them from the face of the globe.

OTHER PEOPLES CONQUERED UP UNTIL 450

The Chalcrans and Yallands.

The Chalcran states, a mixture of republics and kingdoms, presided over by extravagantly living rulers and an exotic and disparate array of customs and armies, proved less daunting on the battlefield. Moreover, they were much more closely related to Atlantis, both in language, customs and religion, and were more malleable when taken into the Empire. The Yallands were the other peoples of Juralic origin, which the Atlanteans came up against south of the Helvengio. Distance was more of a problem here, but on the other hand, Yalland states were small and scattered, and quite easily overcome either by battle or by diplomacy. Once the Atlanteans reached defensible borders here, they made little serious attempt to go beyond, and hence took over only those peoples of Southern origin who were intermingled with the Yallands.

Eliossie and the Lio-Marossan states

There were other, relatively small, nations to the north of Atlantis, which were also quite close to the heart of the expanding Empire, and again Atlantis felt the necessity of incorporating these. The Phonerians were essentially a trading people, but militarily adept, and part of the Lio-Marossan group, which were usually staunchly republican and rationalistic in their beliefs. Conquest of the Phonerians was difficult and long-winded, and involved the development by Atlantis of a navy and good cavalry. The Marossans, often at odds with their neighbours, proved less of a problem.

The third of the Lio-Marossans, the Eliossians, were never taken over by the Atlanteans. They were, for one thing, too far north to worry about from a military point of view. But the Atlanteans also developed a strange awe, almost reverence, for this country. They saw them as philosophers, a naturally "good" people, who did not believe in religion or the gods. They evidently lived in republican and rationalistic peace, taming the nearby barbarians in the Protectorate to the east. The liberals of the later fourth century, especially Atlaniphon I and his circle, admired their political constitution, their freedom from religious dogma and superstition, and their whole way of life, and were content to stay in a perpetual amicable alliance with them.

In fact, the Eliossiens still preserved the superstitious and astrological beliefs which characterised all the Lio-Marossans, but had managed, at least amongst the better-educated, largely to bury them in favour of philosophical rationalism. In any case, traditional Lio-Marossan astrology led the Eliossiens and Phonerians, in particular, to study astronomy as well, and learn much about the stars: this was very useful to the sea-faring Phonerians. But in the centuries preceding their contact with Atlantis, Eliossien thinkers and artists had built on the idea that there was no such thing as the gods or a God, and astrology, whether true or not, reflected the natural and basically chaotic structure of the universe. They proposed that humans should create their own morality, way of life and culture, by living according to man-made rules, which formulated an orderly rationalism. The arts followed suit, and artists, especially, architects, sought a cool and light-filled classicism. Marossan followed Eliossie's lead to some extent, although it was usually the leading power from a political point of view. The invasions of the barbarians in the sixth century eventually did for Eliossie and Marossan. The Eliossiens had hoped at least to be able to pass their rationalist and artistic ideals on to their conquerors, but the Skallands had little understanding of or interest in the pursuits of the Eliossiens, and within 50 years or so, the culture of the Eliossiens had sunk out of sight, and the people themselves subsumed in the Skalland Empire.

The Kelts.

It was a different matter with the Kelts nearby, a naturally warlike and unsettled people, who were descended from the ancient Marossans and placed themselves voluntarily under Leaders or Kings. Their greatest strength was the rugged nature of the country they occupied, especially the North Kelts, who lived amidst high and half inaccessible mountains. The Atlanteans might have been content to let them be, but the Kelts themselves repeatedly raided into Atlantean territory, and finally war led to the conquest, first of the West Kelts, and after 400, of the North Kelts. However, it was only at this point that the Atlanteans really began to understand something of the remarkable society and beliefs of this people. The West and North Kelts were in fact far from being simply wild and simple-minded warriors, who eked out a primitive existence amongst cold mountains. Their highly sophisticated beliefs and world-view actually moulded their whole societal order and way of life. These beliefs evidently were akin to and probably came from those of the ancient Marossans. The Kelts believed that the whole of life and our waking world is in fact a dream or simulation, and not reality at all. We are able to approach the real world in our dreams sometimes, or by thought and meditation, or at times, in everyday life, if it involved hard and tiring action, for example trekking across mountains or fighting. Keltish society was thus divided into three groups: the scholars or thinkers, who lived a life of seclusion in isolated buildings, often towers; the warriors, whose purpose was partly to protect the thinkers, and other Kelts, but partly to attain knowledge of reality for themselves; and the rest of the ordinary Kelts. The latter lived ordinary family lives, of course, but were also supposed to make an effort several times during their lives to "see" reality, and escape the dream-world by study or fighting or travelling over the mountains.

The North Kelts were perhaps more extreme than the West Kelts with regard to every aspect of this way of life: their warriors fought more ferociously, their thinkers mortified themselves, (whereas West Keltish meditators tended to believe that personal comfort helped their thinking), and ordinary North Kelts spent more time trying to escape from this world. The thinkers, especially the West Kelts, also included scribes, who wrote down the insights of the thinkers, and these written texts had long percolated west to the Eliossiens, who also came across the Kelts across the Protectorate. Although the beliefs of the Kelts were very different from their own the Eliossiens valued them and studied them. The Atlanteans, up until around 400, tended to see the Kelts only as ferocious warriors, although they were aware that buried in the mountains, there was also a hard core of what they believed to be seers or druid-like priests. Later in the Second Empire, the Atlanteans came to a truer understanding of the Kelts' beliefs, but there was no real resonance in Atlantean minds until the time of the Romantics after 500. After 600, the Atlanteans again tended to press down on these "deluded" heathen, but recognised the military strength of the people, and their perpetual desire to escape from the overlordship of other nations. Many were killed or persecuted at this time, and by the marauding nomads of the north. A deeper understanding of this people only developed again in the Fourth Empire, by the philosophers of that time. But it was almost too late, as the Tyrants subsequently persecuted them almost to annihilation. The sad remains of the Kelts were finally valued at their true worth by the spiritual thinkers of the Fifth Empire after 828.

Finally, in the years before and after 400, the lands of the Dravideans were overrun – these people were naturally of strong military stock, but had no formal political or military organisation, and hence were easily taken apart and overcome individually.

THE UGHAN STATES

1. Till 600.

So it was that around 400, Atlantis had made the last of its permanent conquests, and came up against the Ughans. There is little doubt that Atlaniphon I or II would have been quite content to attempt to conquer this people too, if they had been able. But now geography put a spoke in the wheel, and the distant and mountainous areas that the Ughans inhabited made a conquest of the whole of their territories unachievable. The Ughans themselves were part of the Basquatic peoples, which included the Basquecs, Vulcans and Razirans – their affinity is obvious from their related languages. Initially a haphazard group of tribes occupying the northern part of the area west of the Gestix Mountains, the Ughans gradually spread down to Psajegargros after 300. By 350 the northern region consisted of one large kingdom, containing a loose federation of fiefdoms and a precariously placed king, the Waka. They were essentially a "tribal" people, fiercely independent and keen on their traditional ways. This included a religion which recognised the king as the head of their faith. But the king himself was not regarded with any particular awe, and whoever became king or "Leader" (Rutha), would be seen as the head of the faith. The faith itself was based on a series of supernatural stories about natural gods and goddesses, and was loosely supervised by a large network of priests. After the 300s the history of Ughrieh all the way through till the 800s is one of periods of more or less firm control by a king or Emperor (Zuka), and the collapse of the centralised kingdom into a number of independent fiefdoms.

The core area of the state remained the northern area, with the capital at Gargros, and for much of the time, the southern area, with the main city being Psajegargros, was also part of the kingdom. The whole area was very secure from enemy invasion by Atlanteans or Vulcans from the north, west and south-west, because of the Gestix Mountains, and the river Gestes. Lines of strong forts were also placed on the eastern bank of the river, and up the tributary rivers which led off to the east, and could act as invasion routes into the interior for Ughrieh's enemies. To the south, a number of small independent kingdoms acted as a barrier against incursions by the Basquecs or others. However there was no comparable barrier to the east, and nomads and barbarian pressure from this direction was a frequent worry for the Ughans.

The Ughan Army was initially a small Royal Army with local feudal levies, and it was this force that the Atlanteans met and defeated in the first two Ughan Wars, and which the Vulcans had often fought. Thereafter the Ughans adopted the crossbow and reformed the military structure into a number of Governors, responsible for raising troops if requested by the King. These were the armies which at first defeated Atlantis in the third Ughan War. During the 500s, Ughrieh was heavily involved in fighting off the advancing nomads, and indeed encouraged most of these to move on to Atlantean territory. After 599, it took advantage of Atlantean internal chaos (the divisions between Republicans and Imperialists), and crossed the Gestes.

The Ughans' involvement in Atlantis' internal affairs did not last long, as after about 625, the whole country broke into pieces, rather like the Atlantean Imperialists, as individual nobles rebelled against the king. Furthermore new barbarian attacks swamped the north of the country. It was not until after about 642, that a semi-feudal form of oligarchical government reasserted itself, with power divided between three or four great nobles, who "elected" the King from amongst themselves. The Ughan Armies roughly followed Atlantean practice, with some decades' delay, as was always to be their practice, albeit their forces were always slower, heavier and often more infantry-heavy. After the 640s, they adopted heavy gunpowder artillery, also with infantry skirmishers, and heavier cavalry. Their forts were now completely vulnerable to the new Atlantean artillery when Ruthopheax I invaded Ughrieh, and their armies were quickly beaten in the open field. Following his success, Ruthopheax saw to it that Ughrieh was again split up into many individual princedoms, some of which were under Atlantean control. However, Ughrieh managed to reunite itself again by about 700, and armies were again centralised and increased in size. It also started to re-equip itself with rifles, thanks to Basquec secret aid. It seized the opportunity of the Basquecs' attack on Atlantis in 743 to join in the war, partly for revenge on Atlantis for the humiliations of the 650s and after, and partly because the Ughans were always great opportunists.

The Great Continental War saw Ughrieh's biggest military effort to date, but despite the modernisation of its armed forces, and the alliance with Basquecieh, its armies remained rather their traditional slow-moving selves, led by barely competent generals, and with little strategic ability visible at the higher levels. Defeat in 749 led again to the break-up of the whole State.

3. 749 – 900

The country was again split up, this time into three states, all with much outside interference. After 770, the country collapsed into civil war, with Atlantean, Basquec and Gestskalland armies all intervening. When the war finally ended, the country was even more chaotic than before it had started. Further internal fighting in the 790s led to many Ughan refugees seeking asylum across the Gestes in Atlantean territory. Finally by about 805, the country subsided into a sort of peace: several semi-independent kingdoms agreed to call themselves the equivalent of dukedoms and recognise an overall, fairly powerless Emperor (Zuka). Relations with Atlantis remained very poor throughout the time of the Tyrants, as their compatriots across the Gestes were persecuted, transported and eventually wiped out. The Ughans intervened to protect them from time to time, with minimal success. After 825, much of the north of the country was assaulted by a collection of little states, and by 850, the area was split into three wholly independent kingdoms. These were eventually united by diplomacy, force and bribery after 860, in time for Emperor Ladrubith to take part in the attack on Atlantis in the Final Wars in the late 870s – 880s. As in the 740s, the participation of Ughrieh in these wars was largely at the behest of another country, this time Rabarrieh, for the Ughans had no firm ideological hatred of the Atlanteans: rather, they again seized an opportunity which presented itself to try to gain more territory and, as they hoped, finally do away with their overbearing neighbour.

BASQUECIEH/ Uariltteccoth.

1. Till 585.

The Basquecs, linked to the Ughans and Vulcans by race and language, became one of the strongest rivals of the Atlanteans after about 500. The Basquecs were by nature a military and expansionist people, much more willing than the Ughans to be centrally organised and led. They did not impinge on the awareness of the Atlanteans until the middle of the fifth century, but for centuries before that, they had been fighting and expanding to the south, having originally meandered south from an area north and east of later Vulcanieh. By the late 480s, they had taken reached some of the southern coastline, and now turned against the Polder Folk to the east, who they fought and conquered over the next century. Their society had from the beginning been dominated by warlords and tribal, later regional, chiefs (Ruitha: plural ruithoth). The country was centralised under a king and then an Emperor (Zuic) early on, supported by a ruling class of wealthy civilians and successful military leaders, and run in a militaristic and authoritarian style. Strong codes of honour and valour developed, and were important at first. Their religion, originally similar to that of the Ughans, was soon perverted to serve the ideals of the ruling class, and became a means of glorifying war and the state. Victorious generals became idols, especially after the wars with the Polder Folk and Atlanteans began. Nevertheless, the country was not at this stage run by the military as such, but there was an increasing rivalry and antipathy between the civilian rulers and the military class which was supposed to serve them and the Emperor.

The Army originally fought in a "Roman" style, with armoured, sword-wielding foot-soldiers, and light horsemen with bows and arrows. The infantry marched and fought in rigid bloc formation, in several ranks, the front three with swords, the rear ones with protective long pikes. Earth forts were built to guard territory. When Atlantis took over Razira in 465, they shared a common border with Basquec. And clashes between the two were not long in developing. In a brief war in 475, Atlantis was shocked when she was twice beaten by the aggressive cold steel of the Basquecs, despite the Atlantean crossbows. A second war took place in 492-3 over some islands in the south, where Atlantis was fighting pirates. This time Atlantis increased its firepower still further, and overcame the Basquecs. At the same time, the Basquecs were involved in fighting the Polder Folk, in a flattish landscape of woods, rivers, lakes, polders and dykes. For this, as against the Atlanteans, their tactical organisation seemed to be weak, and they were quick to copy the Atlanteans' use of the crossbow, as well as smaller, more mobile formations and heavier cavalry to oppose the Polder Folk. By the time of the 582-585 war with Atlantis, they had also set up a line of stone fortifications along their northern border. They remained wary of encountering the Atlanteans in the field during this war, but held them at bay from within their fortresses and field works.

2. 585 – 750.

When they saw the Atlantean Empire break up into civil war after the Revolution, they declared war again in 594, claiming the peace-treaty of 586 was invalid. They soon overran half of Razira, and precipitated the split in the Imperialist ranks in 596, in which Vulcanieh, Razira and Yall Thiss under Yeasor broke away from Emperor Norro, and concentrated their armies against the Basquecs in their own territories, rather than have them sucked away to the centre of the Empire to face the Republicans. During the 500s, Basquec grew more and more divided between the older, traditional and civilian north, dominated by big landowners, who ruled the country, and the newly conquered more militarised south, full of younger generals and most of the army. The wars with Atlantis after the 580s led to a militarisation of the north as well. Their military art reached its apogee, as they worked out how to beat the Atlanteans. They gradually overran all of Razira, south Vulcanieh and the non-Atlantean peoples to their west. To do this, they adopted smaller, more flexible units and carefully entrenched all military gains. They were quicker than the Atlanteans to experiment with gunpowder weapons, especially rockets, which were used in some of the sieges of the war of 582-585. After 600, they also copied the Atlanteans' use of cannon, but in fact preferred rockets. Their advances continued at a slow pace till about 612, held up by the Atlanteans' fortresses, which they were unable to breach with the gunpowder weapons of this period.

After about 615, the Basquecs were riven by long civil wars, caused by a series of coups and conflicts between civilian governments and military uprisings. Finally after 644, an unstable civilian government took power, which relied on a volunteer army, and the south was largely demilitarised. For most of this time, conflict with the Atlanteans ceased, though State "A" fought several wars after 635.

The Basquecs were still quite successful, and took over all of Vulcanieh, and raided Manralia. In 658, Ruthopheax declared war, and smashed the Basquecs in a series of brilliant campaigns. Atlantis showed great superiority in artillery and heavy cavalry, breaking down the Basquecs' fortresses, and overwhelming their armies. After the war, Atlantis propped up the civilian regime in Basquecieh, and partly took over running the country.

For the next fifty years, the Basquec armies were limited in size, and forbidden to experiment with gunpowder handguns or any other military novelties. After 703, a more military clique took over the country, until in 724, the brilliant general Gosscait seized power. From here until the 740s, the Basquecs secretly, then openly, built up their armed forces, and experimented with gunpowder cannon, muskets and rifles. Conscription was reintroduced, and in 732 showed the prowess of his armies by declaring war on Rabarrieh, and decisively defeating it. His real aim, all along, was revenge on Atlantis, and it was now only a few years until the Great Continental War of 743-750.

3. 750 – 900.

Ultimate defeat in the War led to the breaking up of the country into a number of different states, and ultimately to civil war in the 770s, with much outside intervention. By 774, Rabarrieh had virtually taken over the government of the reunited country, which now called itself Uaruilttechoth. However, Rabarran domination ceased after the later 780s, when Rabarrieh underwent a religious revival, while the Basquecs kept the older Rabarran religion, enforced on them in the 770s. The country remained under the rule of strong Emperors for the next sixty years, and after 808, the country allied itself with Atlantis against Rabarrieh. However, in the 820s, Emperor Ruiltac was so shocked by the massacre of the Rabarrans in 816, that he allied himself with the Rabarrans against Atlantis. The Basquecs now advanced to the Gestes, and it was not till Pareon overthrew the Tyrants, that a peace-treaty was agreed between Basquecs and Atlanteans, which left the Basquecs with most of the territory they had conquered. There followed another 25 years of peace, until in 844 Rabarrieh, with the connivance of Atlantis, who wanted to protect her rear during the forthcoming war with Skallandieh, treacherously invaded and conquered the Basquecs. Henceforth it became a part of the Rabarran Empire.

RABARRIEH

1. Till 750.

The origin of the state later known as Rabarrieh was in the "Yciel Tuaince Mandagge", the continent south of the Eriphicko sea. Many of the peoples and tribes of the southern area of the Great Continent to the north were racially and linguistically akin, and much movement and trade had always taken place between the two areas. A great monarchical state had been built up in the southern continent, as also the one to the north of the Eriphicko, which was federated. After about 550 civil wars led to the overthrow of the king, and his replacement by a regime led by local tribes. These usurpers imposed their own unique religion and way of life on both states. The basis of the regime was a profound mystical religion, the Athulkulta, the revelation of an earlier prophet, which was also messianic and imperialist. This religion taught that all the Southern peoples, who were racially of similar origin, should be forcibly made part of the Rabarran Empire and converted to its own style of religion. Initially much stress was laid on austerity, purity and the virtues of desert life, as opposed to the luxury and corruption of town-dwellers. In due course, however, towns were found to be necessary to the overall economy, and by the 700s, the state had developed from its original austere republicanism and partial tribal democracy to an oligarchic monarchy.

North of the Eriphicko, Rabarrieh expended northwards, with occasional skirmishes with the Basquecs to the east, throughout the seventh century. At the same time, it won over many of the small independent southern tribes in the area, (the Araishim in Rabarran), linked by language and race. It also gradually abandoned its rather unsophisticated weapons and military organisations in favour of the standardised crossbows, later rifles, and cannon of the northern states. After 732, the Basquecs under Gosscait attacked Rabarrieh, and defeated it, forcing it to give up a great deal of hardly won territory. Fighting was renewed in 743 in the Great Continental War, though this time Rabarrieh was aided by her ally Atlantis. After a desperate struggle, and with much help from south of the Eriphicko, the Rabarrans overcame the Basquecs, and were able to impose their peace terms on them, even at the expense of the Atlanteans, who had many fewer soldiers in the area, and were anyway about to be convulsed in the overthrow of the Third Empire.

Rabarrieh and Atlantis remained on generally friendly terms until the great religious revolution of the 780s in Rabarrieh. This was an uprising by the lower classes and tribes of the state of Rabarrieh north of the Eriphicko against what they considered to be the luxurious and decadent lifestyle of their rulers. Taking their inspiration from the original writings of the founder of their religion, they succeeded in overthrowing the old regime, and imposing a new one, which was a fundamentalist reversion to the old religion. Although it extolled the virtues of communal, tribal and desert ways, the country as a whole was by now very urbanised, and in fact the new regime turned out to a sophisticated, authoritarian theocracy, which was once again keen to evangelise amongst the southern peoples of the region. Rabarrieh broke off relations with its kindred state to the south of the water, which had suppressed an attempt to overthrow the regime there, and by 790, had begun the so-called Southern Revolt against Atlantean rule. There followed decades of war with Atlantis, which led by 828, to the loss of nearly all her territories south of the Helvengio. Thereafter the two states preserved an uneasy peace for some while, although both sides were completely opposed to each other's religion and ideology.

Ever since the 750s, in fact, Atlantis had seen itself as a bastion of free thought and speech, rational thought, and open and democratic government. In later years it would recognise Quendelieh, and only Quendelieh, as its political and moral equal. It perceived the Rabarran state as the exact opposite, and there grew up a great mutual dislike. The period of the Tyrants taught the Atlanteans that there were problems with complete freedom of thought and action, without moral constraints, but the profound ideological gulf between the two states remained as unbridgeable during the following decades. After 844, Rabarrieh conquered the Basquecs while the Atlanteans were involved in war with the Skallands, and the potential threat from them seemed to grow still greater. Finally in the 860s, the Rabarran state underwent another internal revolution, in which the new rulers resurrected their hatred of everything for which the Atlanteans stood, and determined on war to the death. In the Final Wars after 870, Rabarrieh was thus the leading player in the complete overthrow of the Atlantean Empire.

SKALLANDIEH

The Skallands were originally one people out of many nomads, most of whom were related racially and linguistically. They started migrating and fighting their way westwards across and round the north of Ughrieh after 500. There were three waves of these barbarians: the first, fighting largely on foot, moved via the Ughan Marches, on through and round Keltish territories, as far as the Eliossien Protectorate by the 570s, where they settled for a time. A second wave of fast-moving horsemen followed after 570, conquering the areas settled by the first wave, and forcing some of them to move on themselves into Eliossie and Marossan. The second wave was Skallands and settled in the western parts of the later Skalland empire. A third wave arrived after 600, settling in the areas north of Nunchalcreeh and Dravidieh I, and these later coalesced into the Gestskalland Empire. Both groups of tribes were bound separately into the two states by the 660s, and ruled by kings, (though often referred to as empires by the Atlanteans.) They remained semi-feudal for some time, with large and important aristocracies, but were also quite centralised by the kings. Their religion, as befitted recently nomadic people, was pantheistic.

The main difference between the two states was that the eastern one remained more agricultural and feudal, with few large towns, while the western state, which inherited the already well-settled areas of Eliossie and the Protectorate, was more urbanised and quicker to develop industries in the later 700s. The two states were frequently at loggerheads before and after 700, and they fought on opposite sides in the Great Continental War, and following the defeat of Skallandieh, Gestskallandieh soon took over the whole area. Prior to this, Skallandieh had largely friendly relations with Anauren until the 730s, but was always mistrustful of Atlantis. Gestskallandieh, knowing its own vulnerability to Skallandieh, was much closer to Atlantis, and sought protection by participating eagerly in the International Conferences of the late 600s and early 700s. In 833 the united kingdom, now called simply Skallandieh, fell into civil war, and a new Gestskallandieh won independence. Following the Great Northern War with Atlantis, Skallandieh was completely defeated, and split up into small kingdoms. After the 860s, most of it reconstituted itself as a united country, federated with Gestskallandieh, and seeking revenge on Atlantis, joined in the Final Wars.

Maps of the Great Continent (note by the editor)

There were numerous maps of the Great Continent in my source, and I have placed the general maps of the whole area here. It seems, according to my source, that a number of maps of parts of the Empire survived the downfall and some of these are reproduced in the source. It is not clear, however, how far they have been altered or remodelled. At any rate, I have simply reproduced them here in a format suitable for the Internet.

This is a map of the whole area. The links beneath it show various parts of this large map in more detail:

Original documents from the Atlantean era

A number of documents written by authors of the Atlantean era were reproduced in my source, and I show some of these below. More will be added in due course. It should be noted that these were of course originally written in Atlantean, or occasionally another of the languages of the Great Continent. Many of these were translated into English in the original document, and both versions were shown next to each other. In this Internet version I have concentrated on the English translations, and have only occasionally reproduced some or all of the original language.

The Languages of the Great Continent: an Introduction

As I have explained at the beginning, there are many documents in my source in the original language. Fortunately there are also various chapters which explain in considerable detail the linguistic history of the Great Continent and the grammar of many of the languages spoken there. There are also lengthy vocabularies of the Juralic languages in particular, with translations into English.

The structure of the Juralic languages, which were the ones related to Atlantean and spoken within the Empire, was that Juralic was the original "mother language", from which sprang over many hundreds of years the four descendant languages: Atlantean, Chalcran, Helvran and Yalland. This is similar to the position in our world of Latin, and its descendants: French, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, Romanian, etc.

I have reproduced enough of these texts to give the reader a general understanding of how everything fitted together, and an explanation of the grammar of some of the languages, especially Juralic and Atlantean. I have also set down some of the vocabulary. The vocabulary links below give word-lists of Juralic, Atlantean, Chalcran, Helvran and Yalland, in English alphabetical order, from "a" onwards: words beginning with letters further down the alphabet can be reached from links at the bottom of each page.

Firstly, there are the general outlines of the languages and linguistic history:

1. The Atlantean Army till 361

Initial comments:

There are three parts to this section: a history of the Atlantean Army (in four parts), a series of maps of the Atlantean Empire and its neighbours (five in all), and some tables of battles, in various orders, which refer you to the relevant map to find the sites. There is also section on the Atlantean Navy. You may also like to refer to an article on the military geography of the Great Continent, which is in the section on geography: Military geography

THE GROWTH OF THE ARMY

Prior to the founding of the First Empire by Lir-Craonos in 199, all the main noble houses within the territory of Atlantis had private armies, with which they would fight each other at regular intervals. One of the main reasons why Lir-Craonos was able to unite all the nobility under his leadership in the new Empire was that he ended up with the largest and most efficient of these armies. Until the Helvran wars after 250, the Emperor had only a small standing army, but he would augment it up to 10000 or 15000 by recruitment if war threatened. The main nobles were allowed to maintain very small permanent forces, and were required in wartime to recruit up to 5000 men to augment the Royal Army, as it came to be called.

During the Helvran wars, which involved relatively huge armies over a period of many years, a nucleus of a professional army, serving for at least 5 years was built up. Numbers increased gradually to a peak of 170000 at the end of the Helvran wars; after some demobilisation, they were at a level of 110000 in 305, of which 75000 were Royal, and 35000 Noble Armies, out of a total population in the Empire of about 19 million. As the number of Provinces in the Empire increased, so the military art had to be studied ever more seriously and professionally. Military Academies for officers were set up, and after 292, the College of Military Art to study strategy and tactics. Within the Provinces, Military Governors were given control of the forces within that Province. Noble armies were increasingly sidelined. Particularly after the Family Wars of 305-314, many noble armies were disbanded, and those retaining the privilege of raising independent armies for the Empire were reduced to 5 in number. By the time of the Imperial Wars after 355, the Atlantean Army had reached a size approaching 500000. This period was the last in which independent Noble forces participated, and after 361 all non-Imperial forces were abolished.

THE STRUCTURE OF THE ARMY

Before 240, the Atlantean Army was an infantry-based militia, armed with swords and shields and some armour. The way in which this force developed and changed over the next 120 years to become the all-powerful and brilliantly led army of the Second Empire was a result, initially, of continual attempts to adapt to and meet the challenge of the armies of the various countries and peoples with which it came into conflict. Thus the First War with the Phonerians (240-245), who used small, mobile forces, often armed with bows, and with much cavalry, (the thachelbeli in Phonerian), encouraged the Atlanteans to take cavalry more seriously, and incorporate small forces into their armies.

The conflict with the Helvrans introduced the Atlanteans to the highly disciplined, rigid and phalanx style units of the Helvrans, armed with pikes and swords. Atlantis was very impressed by this phalanx, which it had never met before, and incorporated the Helvran word, kengen, into its own vocabulary (cengen). The Atlanteans countered these tactics eventually, not by copying them, but by finding a way of beating them using well-disciplined forces with a good proportion of bowmen on a basis of agile swordsmen (by 270, one bowmen to every four swordsmen). Initially the bowmen used ordinary bows and arrows, but after 260 they began to adopt the (wooden) crossbows, already in use in Eliossie, which were to become an inseparable part of the Second Empire Atlantean armed forces. In addition, the Atlanteans made increasing use of siege artillery, especially catapults and torsion crossbows. These style of units also provided Atlantis with victory against the Chalcrans and various Southern forces over the following 30 years.

THE ESTABLISHMENT OF THE "IMPERIAL ATLANTEAN ARMY"

From the reign of Ruthoyon I onwards, the armies of Atlantis gradually developed into the classic force of the Second Empire, known often as the "Imperial Atlantean Army", which was to gain and maintain the great Atlantean Empire until the Revolution of 585. We have already seen how noble armies withered away in this period, and the Army as a whole became completely professional. Military leadership also became professionalised through the founding of Military Academies, and the study of strategy and tactics were instituted by the College of Military Art.

Army units varied in size till the 330s when the great military Emperor Ruthoyon II established them at about 9 -11000 men each, each being called a PUEGGIS. Numbers of these were permanently stationed in the various Provinces, under the control of the Military Governors, and each was given a number. These forces were largely composed of infantry, in sub-units called OCHOSIX of about 800 men (after 360). There were 8 or 9 of these per PUEGGIS, plus two OCHOSIX of cavalry and some artillery.

The Second War with the Phonerians (315-325) again taught the Atlanteans of the importance of cavalry and also, for the first time of mounted infantry. The latter became a vital part of the tactics of the Army after 360, speeding forwards in advance of the main army to seize tactically important terrain. Infantry remained predominantly composed of swordsmen, which for a while after 320 also had spears for defence, but the proportion of crossbow men gradually increased to one-third by 330, and one half by the 350s. The power of the crossbow men grew gradually throughout this time, especially when, after the 350s, they were made of steel rather than wood, and hence gained a much greater range and strength. Also the bayonet-crossbow was invented and introduced after 310. This ultimately led to the demise through irrelevance of the swordsmen, though not until after 400. Before then crossbow men were deployed in groups with swordsmen on their flanks, several ranks deep. This rather defensive arrangement became much more offensive after that time as the increasing numbers of bowmen were put on both flanks of the swordsmen in each unit, and the depth of each unit was much reduced.

After 320, field artillery was adopted, which was able to move with increasing ease right on to the battlefield to support the armies.

Thus it was that by the beginning of the reign of Atlaniphon I, in 361, the basis of the great armies of his and later reigns had been laid.

Philosophy during the First and Second Empires until 630.

THE CONCERNS OF ATLANTEAN PHILOSOPHY

Philosophy as such asserted itself only gradually as an independent mode of thought independent of religion in the period of the First Empire. Indeed throughout much of this time, the ruling hierarchy of the Official Religion was very wary of independent thought which might either concern matters not properly covered by the traditional codes of belief of the Religion, or expand or contradict its doctrines. Nevertheless philosophers and writers had a strong ally in the Atlantean State, and particularly in certain of its more liberal Emperors, such as Carel I, Cao-Melion and Siphirixo. Later, in the first part of the 300s, when Emperors became more conservative, the climate was much more favourable towards the religious traditionalists.

There are certain themes which permeate Atlantean philosophy from its very beginnings right up to the fall of the Fifth and final Empire in the late ninth century. These were, firstly, metaphysical speculations :the nature of the Universe and man's place in it ;specifically, what is the point or purpose of the Universe, and what is man's place in it. This leads to the question as to who or what made the Universe, and its occupants, and what will be its ultimate destiny? Another equally important series of problems surrounded man himself : how does he relate to the Universe, and its creator: is he separate from the world, the rest of creation, and God, or is he intimately linked to and enmeshed with every other part of creation? What will happen to him after death, and does he have an immortal part to him - a soul? What does it mean to say he has a consciousness and a sense of self independent of everyone and everything else in the world? And what is reality, the objective world? Does it exist independently of the subject, or not? Does the mind, or the soul, exist independently and act through matter, or are they simply a development from matter itself? In due course, this led to the development of two seemingly opposing ways of viewing the world: the subjective, which concentrated on human perceptions and feelings, and the inner world; and the objective world of materialism, of matter as it can be investigated by science.

Secondly there were a series of questions relating to more immediate and earthly concerns - how should humans live - by what code of morality and ethics, and how is this code derived? Is he free to live as he wishes, or should he accept moral constraints. What is the significance of art and religion to the individual? And finally, what sort of society should men set up on earth, how should he govern and be governed, and how should he educate himself and others?

Each of these themes came to the fore at different times, depending very often on the feelings of the Church and the State. So, for example, speculation about the state and how it should rule was discouraged during the period of the later Republic (after 600), while metaphysical philosophy was frowned on by the Church when it was strong, as in the early 200s and later from 310 to about 350. But however long the gap in years between philosophers who wrote about one of these topics, there was a sort of continuous line from one era of philosophy to the next. In the mainstream at least, later philosophers took up the themes and concerns of earlier ones, and thus there was a continuous development of ideas throughout the whole history of Atlantean philosophy.

THE EARLIEST PHILOSOPHERS

The first philosopher we know of was Liclencu (168 - 228). From what little we know of his work, he was a metaphysical speculator in the broadest sense, who thought about man's relation to the universe, and his relation to the gods. He did not doubt that they existed (he had no conflict with the Official Religion ), but he wondered where they dwelt, and how they could be in contact with mortal men. After 270, such speculation was increasingly frowned on by the Church. Nevertheless, the great religious thinker Ciblaphu claimed that behind the religious myths of multiple gods there lay a single god (see the section on religious thought above), and philosophers mostly agreed with this. Philosophers became increasingly agnostic in their beliefs, and while not usually denying the existence of the gods, pushed them more and more to one side. So, for example, whereas religion traditionally taught that emotions in humans are caused by the gods themselves, philosophers after about 350 sought to account for them either as impersonal forces of nature, or as caused within the human body or brain. Some could not see how external beings, like the "gods", could influence human emotions, inside their very heads.

They also wanted to lay stress on human free will. The earliest religious belief had been that men and women were completely ruled by the gods, and the emotions they evoked in us. This complete determinism gradually gave way, even in the opinions of religious thinkers, to a feeling that as humans can evidently influence and alter the will of the gods by prayer and supplication, there is quite considerable scope for free will in human life. As philosophers came to find the source of all human feelings in the mind, they were able to completely lay aside the old deterministic beliefs. In this period, there was no doubt as to the existence and importance of the subjective nature of man, or of his soul: philosophers considered this existed in addition to and separately from the objective, material world.

By the time of the Second Empire, man's nature was viewed as basically amoral or neutral, and he needed to be guided into good behaviour by society, or, for those who believed in Him, by God.

Reverting to the early third century again, and particularly to the reign of Carel I, who was himself fascinated by intellectual thought, philosophers also turned their minds to personal moral and ethical behaviour, the second great theme of Atlantean philosophy throughout the ages. Thulpas, who lived from 183 to 239, had great influence on Carel, and helped to adapt religious ethical precepts to the needs of the legal system of the fledgling Atlantean state. This suited Carel, who wanted to wrench as much ground as possible from the control of the priesthood, and subordinate it to the State.

The third perennial area of interest to Atlantean philosophers, the sort of State by which citizens should be governed, was adumbrated by Rathidel (243-291) during the middle years of the century. He laid down a fiercely legalistic philosophy, supporting what was really an authoritarian view of the State and its role, and arguing that citizens must be closely controlled by their government. This view was not fashionable at the time, nor throughout most of the Second Empire, but it was revived in later eras such as the Early Third and Fifth Empires.

SECOND EMPIRE PHILOSOPHY OF THE STATE AND THE INDIVIDUAL : 360 - 460

In fact the basis of Second Empire national liberalism and "laissez-faire" philosophy was laid by a slightly later Chalcran thinker, Dissi. He wrote most of his work between 300 and 330, and stressed the importance of rationalism and justice on the part of the State, of duty and obedience by the citizenry, and generally that the goal of State and individual should be for the good of all. He thought too that the State should interfere as little as possible in the affairs of its subjects, an idea which was erected into a principle of government by Atlaniphon I, who famously wanted the Empire to run itself with an absolute minimum of control from himself.

However these ideas were only generally accepted some years after Dissi's death in 340. Indeed they were only set down in their classical form by Iairos Lincon (388-465), and he based them on Atlaniphon I's style of government. He claimed that the State should run like clockwork, and Emperors and other rulers should interfere as little as possible. But they must be morally "good", and set an example to their subjects. These subjects should be allowed "freedom within reasonable limits". Like most philosophers and thinking people of the Classical period, Reason was elevated very highly. Mankind was able to step beyond its emotions and passions, and rule him or herself and the community's destiny by Reason alone (- and hence, if one believed in the State Religion, the gods themselves could be constrained to human will). "Balance" and moderation were what mattered, within society and the state, but also within the natural world as a whole. Most thinkers thus wanted to recognise the position of human beings as part of the natural world. No one person had ultimate authority and power over animals, or over other people. Equally humans had their own dignity even in the face of God, Who would treat them all with the respect they were due. The subjective should be viewed as equally important as the objective, neither being over-stressed.

Closely linked to the philosophy of the state in this period was the philosophy of personal behaviour and morals. The philosophers of the classical era, from 400 to 500, approximately, felt that the ideals of personal behaviour were inextricably linked to the ideal of the well-run state, as described above. Thus personal and public behaviour were inseparable, as far as the "Good Ruler" was concerned. It was believed that personal virtue could be encouraged by a moral upbringing and by moral training (an idea which was taken up again centuries later in the Fifth Empire, after 830).

There was one other philosophy, thought up and written down by Steccon Lillaya (365-429), which, though obviously formed by the general ethos of this period, came to rather different conclusions, and would have a recurring influence in later times. Lillaya taught that just as Atlaniphon wanted the Empire to run itself with a minimum of control from himself, so all men and women should try to stand outside the turmoils and stresses of life. This philosophy was called "Andourso", or "apartness", but it did not mean that we should retire completely from worldly matters, rather that we should seek a "golden mean" in our actions, behaviour and emotions, despite the buffets and pressures from all sides. This attitude was valid in our social interactions, in the political field and within our own minds. This ideal of the perfectly self-contained person, with exquisitely balanced emotions, often resurfaced in later Atlantean history in times of political turmoil. At these times, "andourso" provided people with a refuge from what was going on around them. Thus it was taken up by the hermetic artists and thinkers of the later 500s, and in their case involved an almost complete physical withdrawal from the everyday world. It again emerged in the Third Empire, as detailed below, but was dealt a fatal blow during the terrible time of the Tyrants after 805 by the philosopher, who showed that such passivity could provide no valid solution for coping with life in such a period, either for the individual or for society as a whole.

METAPHYSICAL SPECULATION DURING THE EARLY ROMANTIC ERA: 460 - 540

At various times throughout the period of the late First and Second Empires, most philosophers favoured what were basically either idealistic or materialistic views of reality. Prior to about 460, as we have seen, philosophy had been growing ever more materialistic, but no philosopher seriously doubted the independent existence of the human inner, or subjective, world. Most mainstream philosophers, like the more advanced religious thinkers, adopted a general deism, adopted by the Emperor and the ruling elite. These professed to believe in a realm of the divine, or at least of the Absolute. However, such a realm was not allowed to have much influence on human life and behaviour, which was controlled either by man's own mind or by society.

But after 460, both religious and philosophical thinkers also started to lay more emphasis on spirit or immaterial forces. Religious thinkers had to account for the influence of the gods on human desires in this way, while philosophers began to think that they could only account for human art and morality, and perhaps also emotions and perception in general, by positing the existence of spiritual or immaterial forces over and above humankind itself. This new philosophy, which is now called "Romantic", stressed still more the primacy of the human will. This will could be active in the moral, aesthetic and artistic spheres, and had to seek the "Good" or the "Beautiful" or the "Divine", which were seen idealistically as abstracts in a higher realm. As the years passed, philosophers proceeded to argue amongst themselves as to the exact relationship between human emotions and the mind, on the one hand, and the realm or realms of the Absolute, on the other.

More generally, the Romantic movement involved a change of perspective, so that now the world was looked at from the point of view of the subject or the individual, and in place of a classical balance between subjectivity and objectivity, artists and philosophers placed the human mind and feelings at centre stage. Indeed the period is notable as much for its artistic achievement and endeavour as for philosophical writings. The first part of this era lasted until about 540, and artists and philosophers laid stress on the following points. The emotions were seen as natural and basically good, because man's nature was essentially good. The integration of the individual into society, and his or her role as part of that society were now of less importance than the need for everyone to remain true to one's own nature, and to express it within reasonable constraints. Moreover, humans must seek to find or emulate the spiritual or Absolute realms in all they do. Some thought that each person's subjective nature, or individualism, was itself an expression of God or the Divine within. By carrying out actions or producing art, as an expression of our own inner natures, we are therefore literally doing or showing forth God's work in the world. This idea was taken up later by more extreme Romantics, who believed we should concentrate on acting out the expression of our will in the world, which, for some, was also to act out the will of God, which is within our inmost being. These ideas were again rediscovered and refined in the 700s by the Naturists and the later Theists.

Other philosophers became fascinated by the mind, and how the a person, who experienced the world purely through his senses, and from a subjective point of view, could relate to the objective world of reality. Bourri lalssoulo, active between 510 and 540 taught that the individual - or the Self as he now termed it - could force reality to do as he wished by impressing his own will on the world. He could thereby forge his own destiny.

LATER ROMANTICISM - THE INDIVIDUAL AND THE WORLD: 540 - 590

After 540, one strand of philosophy, linked to the populist movement in politics and art, was a development towards complete scepticism and materialism, rather like modern-day Marxism. According to this, humans are mere atoms of reality - there is no God or reality to the spiritual side of our life; we are moulded by our environment and are part of the overall natural scheme of thing. Moreover it is society that we need to concentrate on changing, for everyone's benefit.

But most philosophers now moved to delve ever deeper into the mind and work out how it was connected to the outside world, and how our own individual subjective view of the world could be reconciled with the world itself, which had no mind of its own. The simple earlier Romanticism, which posited a straightforward split between the human and the spiritual or

Absolute realms, now broke up into a multitude of differing beliefs. Some thinkers, who were tagged "hermetic" like their contemporaries in art, denied the objective reality of the world, and insisted that as one could only know anything by "looking out" from one's own mind, then that mind was all that there was, or all that we can ever really know. The material world was probably an illusion, as were other people - all part of one's own mind's projection. One philosopher, Suenno Yealtan, wrote in some of his works that one should train one's mind, and by doing so could survive death, and possibly be reincarnated into another body later. His later work, after 560, became more radically esoteric. He claimed that as the subjective realm was all there was, it actually constructed reality itself. As the "perceiver" of all that exists, and the simultaneous creator of it, each of our selves is synonymous with God, who is thus inside us. However, as he is the ultimate Subject and Perceiver within each of us, we cannot "see" him ourselves. Other hermetic thinkers played with such ideas as that our whole world is just a dream. After death, we shall wake up – or perhaps, be plunged into another dream. Even in this life, we can "see through" our dream, often, paradoxically, during our dreams while we are sleeping, and then glimpse the "real" world – or is it just another dream-world? These vague speculations had great influence on esoteric writers and artists, and the theme of life as a dream was common in plays, poetry and art of the 570s and 580s.

Some philosophers insisted these views were too extreme and speculative, and also denied that we could ever know what could happen after death. Some of them thought that there was a transcendental realm, as a sort of fourth dimension – all around us but almost imperceptible to us -, where God may reside, but about which we can know very little. We can experience something of it, however, via our emotions, and art and perhaps through religious feelings, and we may end up here after we die.

Thus philosophers were increasingly divided at this time into opposing sets of beliefs – materialists, who claimed that there was nothing outside the material world, which was the only reality; hermetic or extreme Romantics, who thought that all we know or can know is our own minds, which are all that should matter to us; and a more moderate group in the middle, who believed in a transcendental realm, and were still worrying over the relationship between it and ourselves. Common to all these was the problem of whether there was any truly objective or transcendent realm; and if so, how we should be guided in our behaviour or morals in relation to it.

Certainly an overriding theme of nearly all philosophy of this period was the desire to reach or attain the "Good" - not so much now from the point of view of living in society, but for purely personal reasons. Views on how to attain this varied from social training or force (the Populists), and nature (many now believed nature was basically good), that is, obeying one's own inner feelings, and trust in God. But above all, stress was laid on actualising the will or emotions of the individual. Classical ideas of balance and reason, or faith in man's integration with the natural order, and need to see himself as a cog in the whole world order were often ignored or ridiculed throughout this period. This links up with the revival of "andourso", or "apartness" by the esoteric thinkers in this period.

And increasingly there was a real element of scepticism growing at this time – a feeling that it was impossible, or at least very difficult, to discover objective or absolute norms. This could all have developed directly into the sort of relativism and materialism, which dominated philosophy and society in the 700s, but it was all cut short, firstly by the Republican Revolution in the 590s, and then by the victory of the Imperialists in the early 600s, with their religion of State Theism. This was ruthlessly imposed on the whole population, and led to the extinction of all the philosophical movements of the 500s. On the other hand, the universalising philosophy of Saiphoyon in the early 600s could have provided the basis of a new and firmly based system of beliefs, in contrast to scepticism. But again, it was drowned by the imposition of State Theism, and was only taken up again in the late 700s and early 800s.

SAIPHUYON AND THE CULMINATION OF SECOND EMPIRE PHILOSOPHY : 590 - 630

Saiphoyon lived from 561 to 629, and clarified and summarised Romantic philosophy up to his time, as well as providing an antidote to extreme Romantic scepticism about the existence of the real world, or of a transcendental realm. He showed that the only way we, as "selves" or individuals, have contact with the outside world is through our senses and our bodies. Similarly it is only via these senses (sight, sound, touch) and, indirectly using our bodies (touch, language) that we can communicate with other selves (i.e. humans), but we can never see inside their minds. We are conscious of our own feelings, but can only know others' indirectly. Thus it seems our senses are all important in connecting us to the outer world (which Saiphoyon insisted did exist).

These senses operate via our body to our brain. But we also have a mind, which, though based in the brain, is also separate. It acts as an independent consciousness, and it enables us to make independent decisions, which can override our emotions or feelings. These emotions (love, hate, happiness, despair) are always related to events affecting us in the exterior world, and are formed within our brain. (They have nothing to do with outside forces, or the gods, as earlier generations believed).

But the mind also acts as a sort of conduit to the "Beyond", as Saiphoyon called it, in other words, a transcendental world.

This realm is in contact with us - our mind and hence our body - in various ways. One is through ideals - love, duty, beauty - these affect us and our emotions, but they are in themselves timeless and come from outside our world. Art as an Ideal, closely linked to Beauty, must also reach us from the Beyond. Saiphoyon also insisted that the Moral Code, that is our conception of Right and Wrong, Good and Evil, comes from this realm too. Finally, although he was basically an agnostic, he wanted to believe that there was a God, or a divine realm, and felt that religious faith and feelings might also connect us to the Beyond. All these influences on the Mind can impose themselves on our lives in the everyday world, for our good. Saiphoyon recognised that there did also exist bad forces, - Evil in the broadest sense - , but thought these were all caused by our or others' actions in the world of reality. Man himself was basically neutral, but had this conduit to the good and sublime.

Saiphoyon was the last and greatest of the Second Empire Romantic philosophers, though his ideas would be continued by later philosophers. He led a quiet and secluded life, teaching philosophy in his early life, but after about 600, the Republicans well as the Imperialists when Ruthopheax I took charge, became increasingly hostile to this sort of hermetic philosophy, as they saw it. Between 600 and 630 all the old Second Empire styles of philosophy were banned, and many philosophers imprisoned or killed. Saiphoyon retired to private life, and most of what he wrote was kept secret by himself after 605 and for decades after was little known. He died, virtually unknown and penniless in 629.

The future now lay open for a very different sort of thought - one with a social background where Religion was all important, and philosophy was considered as a minor, almost superfluous and potentially dangerous pastime. The exemplar of the new philosophy was Sunon Geledin, and his teachings tied in closely with the ethos of the new rulers of the Empire, and with the new religion of the Empire, State Theism.

1 : Society and Government in Atlantis, 200 - 586.

ATLANTEAN SOCIETY AND THE CLASS SYSTEM

At the very beginning of the First Empire, every male inhabitant had a particular Class corresponding to his social status, which was closely linked to his birth and profession. It was impossible to change one's status and progress up the social scale. During the third century, this Class system was simplified considerably over the years, and all Atlanteans, from both the home Province, and then the newly conquered ones, were categorised first into 42 Classes, then 20, 12 and finally 6 in 367. Their Class was still determined almost wholly by accident of birth, and the professions they might enter were also limited according to their Class.

The highest nobles were those in Class 1. These owned large amounts of land and were often in a high position in government or Court. Their lineage often went right back to the time when Atlantis was just a patchwork of competing aristocrats. As the centuries wore on, these Class 1s retained their land, often scattered throughout the Empire, though mostly still in the "inner" Provinces (Atlantis, Atlantidieh and Th. Thiss.), but gradually lost political power to the lower Classes. This process began with the very first Emperors, who rather feared the power of these old and rich aristocrats, who even had their own armies. Emperors alone had the ability to promote or demote people from one Class to another, and gradually the Emperors began to favour Class 2s and later Class 3s.

Class 2s, who represented the "middle" nobility after 367, included the moderately well-off aristocrats, who also held considerable land. Originally all of them were nobility by birth, but after the fourth century, some attained this Class by Imperial promotion, as a sort of honour for loyalty or good work. Also, as the organisation of local and national government was built up during the First Empire, it became possible to advance one's Class through education and career progression.

Class 3s were the lower nobility, also usually holding some land, and, in later years, important positions in government or the army.

The bottom three Classes represented the vast majority of the workers of the Empire. Class 4, often split into upper and lower, were what later became the middle class, and included merchants, lawyers, civil servants, small landowners and the self-employed. Most would also employ other workers at lower Classes. Class 5 were the better-off working classes, and included employees of all sorts, artisans, and small farmers, whether independent or tenants. Finally Class 6s were the peasants, servants and workers.

By the reign of Atlaniphon I, progression up the Class system was much easier than had been the case in earlier times. Promotion at work, self-improvement leading to the acquisition of more land or employees, or even, still, promotion by Imperial decree, were possible at all levels, though Class 6s tended to be stuck where they were, and there remained a great divide between Class 4 and Class 3, the "people" and the "nobility". In the sixth century, under the liberal Emperors, all positions in government had in theory to be attained through education and progression up the job-structure through examination and interview. But the higher posts always remained the prerogative of the traditionally well-off upper Classes, who could enter the whole structure at a higher level than the lower Classes. At the top, peers by birth gradually lost their positions in government to those who achieved their position through merit and education. Class 1s indeed became a dwindling breed, who now lost all real influence and retired to their vast estates.

After 526, much of this changed, and things regressed to the position in the earlier 300s. Classes became more fixed, education was cut back, and senior positions again went to hereditary nobles. Numbers of Class 1s revived suddenly as this was used as an honorary grade for the Emperor's closest Advisers, relations and friends. The power, land and prosperity of these high grades, above all the Class 1s, with their swathes of land and property in the inner Provinces particularly incensed the revolutionaries in the 560s to the 580s. After the Revolution of 587, it was they who were targeted by the republican leaders and the lower Class masses.

THE GOVERNMENT OF THE EMPIRE

One of the most interesting features of the Atlantean Empire is the highly complex and well-organised system of local and imperial government which was gradually created throughout the First Empire and into the Second. The initial impetus to set up local councils to run the everyday government of small towns developed in the late second century from the clash between the king and the powerful nobles, who had power-bases and fiefs of their own throughout the kingdom. The king - later Emperor - encouraged municipal councils, and granted a degree of power to local officials on grade 3 and below, thereby removing the Class 1 and 2 nobility from their strongholds. The growing Empire was divided up into urban district councils, and after about 250, country districts were also given local councils, initially under the aegis of the local landowning noble. These local authorities were responsible for law and order, local building, and for a time education and some local taxes.

After 300, Regions were set up, consisting of a number of smaller Districts, from which representatives were elected for the Regional Councils. Gradually a career structure was built up, whereby a person could begin as a Councillor on his local district council. After two or three years, he, with about three others, might be chosen for promotion by his immediate superior at Regional level. After 330 he would have to take an examination, but if successful, he, with others, would progress on to the Regional council. Regions became responsible for much local government, such as local taxation, entertainment and education.

At this stage the ambitious Regional Councillor had a number of choices he could make for the shaping of his future career. Firstly he might in due course move up to become a deputy or assistant to the Provincial Governor (Civil and Military), appointed by the Emperor. Secondly he could try to move to Atlantis or Cennatlantis to apply to get on the staff of the Imperial Controllers, who helped to run the Imperial Government. Finally he could move sideways to join the Great Council, which is discussed below. Whichever path he took, he would, during the Second Empire, automatically be granted the status of honorary Grade 3 once he was successful.

Imperial Government was headed by the Emperor, of course, and beneath him, the Empire was originally organised into Provinces ("Ruhiehix" in Atlantean), and run by Provincial Governors. After the beginning of the fourth century, there were two types of Governors - Military, who were in charge of Provincial Armies, and took precedence in wartime, ("Ruhixano" in Atlantean) and Civil Governors ("Ruhiehians"), who were responsible for the civilian government of the Province - these areas included national taxes, social welfare, law and order and local foreign relations. The Emperor also had a number of Imperial Advisers, hand-picked to help him run the Empire, and they all also chose the Provincial Governors.

THE GREAT COUNCIL (BOUR YMELHUATSO)

From 150 there had existed in the area that was later to become the Province of Atlantis an Atlantean Council, consisting of non-nobles, which acted as a counterbalance to the strong influence of the nobility, who had long had their own forum in the Council of Nobles. As more Provinces were added to the Empire, Cao-Melion decided in 278 to form an Imperial or Great Council which would include representatives from all the Imperial Provinces. The Council was of course purely advisory at this stage, and met only when the Emperor convened it. It gradually overshadowed the old Atlantean Council, as far as the Province of Atlantis was concerned, and Atlantis itself sent members to the Great Council as well as to its own Council, which then gradually dwindled over decades and centuries into an ornamental relic with few real powers. After 320 recruitment for the Great Council came from the Regional tier of the career structure. "Councilmen", as they were termed, were elected by the other Regional Councillors, and also had to pass examinations later on. A small and senior part of the Great Council was the Inner Council, led by the Leader of the Council, who gained great power at the end of the Second Empire, and effectively led the Revolution of 587, and later the Republic.

To start with, Councilmen had to live from their own means, but after 470 a salary was introduced. Gradually the Council developed or was granted more powers - it sat at certain specified times and gained a voice in the appointment of Civil Governors and other Imperial appointees to a lesser extent. Later in the Second Empire, as the Emperors became more conservative, the Councils grew more radical. One reason was that some Councilmen were now appointed directly from District level rather than Regional level, and as such represented points of view closer to grass roots populism. This led ultimately to the Revolution of 587, which saw the Council pitted against the forces of the Emperor.

THE CONTROLLERS AND THE ADVISERS.

During the main part of this period, the central direction of policy, - the "executive function"- was carried out by the Controllers, who reported directly to the Emperor himself. The number of these officials fluctuated over the decades, as did the areas of policy for which they had responsibility. The earliest Controller was for Atlantean Affairs, established in 240. Others were later appointed by Cao-Mel'ion - Education, Imperial Affairs, and Treasury. Later came Transport and Trade. They were appointed essentially by the Emperor, in theory in consultation with the Inner Council, from either the upper reaches of the Civil Service, or from Imperial Advisers or relations. In the sixth century, after the Great Civil War of 524-526, the numbers of these Governors were reduced in favour of the provincial Governors.

The Imperial Advisers were in theory a group of "elders", retired Controllers, Governors or Councilmen, who formed the Emperor's closest circle, but in practice they often included younger friends or relations of the Emperor of the day.

THE RULING OF THE EMPIRE

Of course, the way in which the Empire was governed depended very much on the character and feelings of the Emperors. In the heyday of the Second Empire, under the Atlaniphons, the Emperor stayed at a distance from the process. Atlaniphon I's famous words about himself show his feelings : "I shall be a god, but if possible, an inactive god". Emperors in the sixth century would be much more interested in playing with the levers of power themselves.

Finally there were of course a number of other institutions closely connected to the government of empire. The legal system was originally in the hands of a Controller, but after 405 Atlaniphon I gave it more independence under a Chief Justice. The Official Church was led by the Chief Priest of Atlantis, and under the overall supervision of the Emperor. The armed forces were controlled by the Emperor directly, who alone could declare war and make peace. Lastly the Court of Ethics, formally established by Atlaniphon I in 368, was in the last resort under the aegis of the Emperor, although one of its chief purposes was to act as an independent "think-tank" on a wide range of matters from a legal court of appeal, to an arbitrator on ethical government, morals and the value and social admissibility of new inventions or ideas. (See the separate article on the Court of Ethics).

Note on the colours used in this History.

Each period of Atlantean history had a particular style relating to the way its ruling class presented itself to the world at large. This is particularly relevant to its use of flags and emblems, and to the colours in which it displayed itself. The flags and emblems related to the religion and mythology of the Empires, and more will be said about these in the History of the First Empire below. The colours used differed for each epoch of the history of the Empire, and the characteristic colour of the period concerned will be indicated here by the background colour of each part of the History.

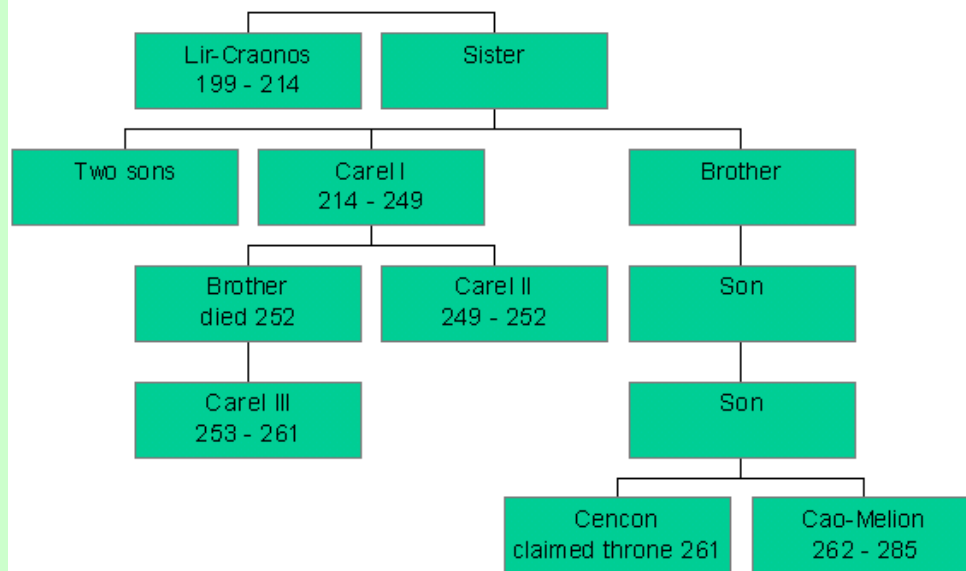

Thus the colour characteristic of the First Empire, as here and in the part of this History below which describes it, was green. This became Imperial orange, or yellow after the accession of Atlaniphon I in 361. The Republicans after 591 deliberately turned their face against anything redolent of the old Empire, and used red as a sign of rebellion and of the Republic itself. The parts of the old Empire still loyal to an Emperor retained orange, of course, though this became a much darker and more muted colour, almost brown after 630. This also became the colour of the subsequent Third Empire. Later still, after 750, the Fourth Empire changed this to blue. The Tyrants favoured an appropriately grim shade of black, and finally, after 828, the Fifth Empire returned to an Imperial colour, this time, purple.

Science and Invention and the role of the Court of Ethics, 200 - 630

INTRODUCTION

The Atlanteans were by nature an inventive race, and over the early centuries of their Empire, they developed most of the scientific advances which have been also been made in the Western World throughout a longer period of time. The development of science in their Empire was, however, unique by virtue of the role of the Court of Ethics. This institution's influence varied from era to era, but when it was flourishing, it suppressed many new scientific ideas. As a result, the adoption of scientific inventions into Atlantean society proceeded in fits and starts, and was never able to sweep all before it as has happened in the modern world since the time of the Renaissance.

THE COURT OF ETHICS

The idea of an overriding Court or Council of Ethics to act as a supreme arbiter in all ethical, moral and social matters was developed by thinkers in the third century. It was not till the reign of Iustus Atlaniphon, in 368, that the first official Court of Ethics was set up. As far as we are concerned in this chapter, its main role (apart from its legal responsibilities as a Court of Appeal) was to weigh up the potentialities of all new ideas and practical inventions as far as their effect on the moral and social welfare of the Atlantean peoples was concerned.

There would at this stage be no control or censorship of the expression of ideas in words or writing - only of its possible future dissemination or conversion into practical form in the case of new scientific inventions. This was linked also to another of its roles - that of judging all novel forms of behaviour or activities by the people - whether moral, artistic, sporting or whatever. But here the Court could only express an opinion ; in the case of new inventions, it could, with the Emperor's approval, actually ban them.

This side of the Court's activities seems at first to sit uneasily beside its more liberal role as a Court of Appeal and a sort of government think-tank on legal matters. But the ethos of the Second Empire, though in some ways liberal, was also paternalistic, and the Emperors and their advisors were above all concerned to maintain their society as it was, and of course their own positions within it. They did not want to censor ideas, but they saw no reason not to screen and if necessary ban new inventions, which, if adopted, might radically alter the set-up of society, and the happiness of lifestyle of Atlanteans. This was all part of that philosophy, which the Second Empire elite prized above all: that Reason and Balance were vital in society, and this was best achieved by severely limiting all unnecessary changes, social, moral and technological. Men, too, were part of a whole natural order, which should not be unbalanced by creating "unnatural" investigations into nature, or technological innovations.

INVENTIONS AND THEIR FATE UNDER THE SECOND EMPIRE

Some of the most significant inventions in early Atlantean history were military in nature, though it must be stressed that some of them were not actually made by Atlanteans, but rather were taken over by them from whoever first invented them. The inventions made before 360 were quickly adopted - such as the wooden and steel crossbow and the catapult. But most important innovations, once they had come to the notice of the Court of Ethics, were usually suppressed, though there were a few exceptions. Thus printing using blocks was invented somewhere in the late 200s and used a little in Atlantis in the 300s, but was then banned. Printing using moveable type appeared outside the Atlantean Empire after 480, but as soon as examples appeared within the Empire, they were also forbidden.

Other inventions vetoed include the microscope or magnifying glass (around 500), spectacles (about 420-430), water-wheels (400s), and gunpowder/rockets (used in fireworks after the 400s, outside the Empire). On the other hand, the telescope, though closely related to the banned magnifying glass, was allowed into production after 530 for military use. The same was true of the mechanical semaphore, relays of which rapidly spread across the Empire after 460, and the windmill, which was surprisingly permitted in the 500s.

THE HEYDAY OF INVENTIONS, 587-650

When the Second Empire was overthrown and the Republic established after 587, the Court of Ethics was abolished in the territories under republican control. The Republic considered the "censoring" role of the Court to be ridiculously old-fashioned and pointless, and inventions were henceforth encouraged. Quickly all those innovations made and suppressed in earlier times were released from their wraps - printing (though Government controlled at various times), spectacles, microscope and water-wheels. In the remaining territory of the Emperor, the Court of Ethics at first still kept its powers, but as the old Empire split up and the Imperialists noticed how fast the Republicans were overtaking them in the field of new inventions, the Court was done away with here as well, and innovations were seized on as quickly as possible.

Gunpowder, as applied to military weapons, had already been experimented with by the Basquecs, and these ideas were taken over by the Imperialists even quicker than by the Republicans. This led to rockets, cannon and handguns coming into production around 590-600 - the great Atlantean inventor and adapter was Ceindol. Many other inventions were adopted in this period, including the magnetic compass, the technique of cast iron, stirrups for horses, the pendulum clock, the barometer, and the basics of the steam engine. Many of these were actually invented abroad, but the clock, the steam-engine, cast-iron and the compass were definitely of Atlantean origin. (Bueccan, who lived in Tilrase in the Republican Province of Atlantidieh, was the Atlantean theorist who wrote about the practical possibilities of steam. He was killed in 628 when the Imperialists stormed Atlantis.)

This heady period of innovation came to an abrupt end after 650, when the establishment of the Third Empire by Ruthopheax produced strict controls on all inventions once again - this time also in neighbouring states.

Irregular nouns:

1. Consonant changes between Juralic and Atlantean.

Because of regular historical developments in the phonetic structure between Juralic and Atlantean, some consonants in certain positions changed to vowels, or disappeared. This led to some nouns (as well as adjectives and adverbs, and the conjugation of some verbs, for all of which see below) appearing to have irregular declensions. At the same time, these historical changes, as well as the loss of unstressed vowels in final positions, led sometimes to several vowels ending up next to each other. However, only certain vowels and diphthongs were allowed to be sounded together, and these are called the "permissible vowel combinations". Where certain vowels, which were not allowed to sound next to each other, nevertheless were likely to end up together, the original consonant, which otherwise changed to a vowel or disappeared completely, was left in place.

The historical phonetic changes that need to be noticed are as follows. These occurred between the era of Atlanchalcric and Chalcran, and are hence not evident in Chalcran.

1. Between vowels,  $l > y$ .     $p > ph$      $b, r$  disappear (if on their own)..
2. When final,     $m > n$ .     $b, d, g, p, t, c$  disappear (if preceded by no other consonant).
3. When finally after n, f, l     $b > p$      $d > t$      $g > c$

Now these changes are visible in the root cases of words, when the Juralic or Chalcran forms are compared with Atlantean. Below are examples (J = Juralic; C = Chalcran; A = Atlantean):

Between vowels:

1.  $l > y$ :    J. o:ilo: (ever) > C: alo, A: ayo
2.  $p > ph$     J: bhenna:po: (daddy) > A: bennaphu (usually shortened to bephu)
3.  $b$  disappears    J: lob (long) > C: lub, A: lou
4.  $r$  disappears    J: dhe:rino (four) > C: tiare, A: thein

Finally:

5.  $m > n$     J: me:sema (beauty) > A: meisen (final "a" lost earlier).
6.  $d$  disappears if preceded by a vowel or "r"    J: da:uda (god) > C: doda, A: dao (final "a" lost earlier)
7.  $b$  disappears if preceded by a vowel or "r"    J: bho:rb (great) > C: bourb, A: bour

After n,l:

8.  $ld > lt$     J: ge:ld (old) > C: giald, A: yelt

Now, as mentioned above, the disappearance of  $b, d, g, p, t, c$ , and  $r$  between vowels or finally, as well as the change of  $l$  to  $y$  between vowels, could lead to various vowels ending up next to each other. Below is the list of permissible combinations. If any other vowels were likely to find themselves in close proximity, the original consonant would normally stay in place. These "irregularities" occur most often when declensional endings were added to nouns or adjectives; when comparative or superlative formations were added to adjectives or adverbs; and when conjugational endings (including suffixes for moods or voice) were added to verbs.

2. Permissible vowel combinations in Atlantean.

Vowel - vowel

1. aua, aya; aue, aye; ai, aui; ao, ayo, auo; ayi, ayu
2. ea, eua, eya; eue, eye; eyi; eo, eyo, euo; eyu
3. ia, ie, io, iu
4. oa, oua, oya; oue, oye; oyi, oyo, ouo; ou, oyo, ouo; oyu
5. ua, uya; ue, uye; ui; uo, uyo; uyu

Diphthong preceding vowel

1. ai + vowel. Permissible before a,e,o,u. The i of ai becomes ay, eg ayo, ayu
2. ao + vowel. Treat as a + vowel
3. ou + a,e,o permissible. Before y + vowel, ou > o, ou or oy
4. ei + vowel. Permissible before a,e,o,u. The i of ei becomes ay, eg eyo, eyu
5. ie + vowel not permissible.

Diphthong following vowel

1. +ai. Will follow i, u, y
2. +ao. Will only follow i.
3. +ou. Will only follow i, y.
4. +ei. Will follow i, u, y.

Any other diphthongs will not combine with another vowel.

3. The irregular declensions.

Traditionally, irregular nouns were divided into three "types", depending on what happened to their endings in declensions. These changes are in fact all explicable by historical phonetic developments, as detailed above.

I. TYPE 1: Noun roots ending on -l, -r, -n, in nominative singular (ie: belonging to the consonantal declension - no. 1).

1. n > m in oblique and plural cases, if the "m" was the original ending in all cases.

Example: ran (nom sing), raman (acc sing) (For etymological reason, see 2 above, in section 1).

2. l > y when followed by a vowel, ie: in all oblique and plural cases, except the locative singular. (But this depended on the permitted combinations, see 2 above).

Example: ful (nom sing, grass), fuyan (acc sing), fulsil (loc sing), BUT fulao (abl sing). (See 1 and 2 above).

3. r > vanished when followed by a vowel, ie in all oblique and plural cases, except the locative singular. But again this depended on the permitted combinations, see 2 above).

Example: aldor (nom sing, official), aldorsil (loc sing), aldorix (nom/acc plural), etc (see 1 and 2 above).

II. TYPE 2: Noun roots ending in a vowel in the nominative singular (ie: belonging to declensions 2 and 3), but with a plosive interpolated before the oblique cases.

Nouns which originally ended in -d, -b, -t lost this plosive in the nominative and vocative singular cases, but it reappeared before a vowel in all oblique and plural cases.

Examples: recce (nom sing, law), recetan (acc sing) lai (nom sing, death), laiban (acc sing)

III. TYPE 3: Noun roots ending in -nt, -np, -nc, -lt, -lp, -lc in the nominative singular of declension 1 (consonantal declension).

These noun endings became -nd, -nb, -ng, -ld, -lb, -lg in oblique and plural cases, if they originally ended in these voiced plosives in all cases (See 3 of section 1 above).

Examples: talt (nom sing, name), taldan (acc sing)
aolc (nom sing, gold), aolgan (acc sing)

There are a few nouns which are completely irregular. These include: dao (god), celeuo (noble), mai (control), (mand)engio (island / sea).

Remains of obsolete endings in Atlantean nouns

1. The dual case.

This case, formerly present in Juralic, had largely died out in early times, but remains fossilised in a few set expressions in Atlantean as well as Yalland. In Atlantean, it originally involved the interpolation of -ET- between the root ending and the suffix. (See the section on Juralic: Historical grammar of Juralic languages, 2. pronouns, adjectives and nouns).

Examples are:

THETTETO, from THETTO (brother), meaning "brother and sister".

NUMETO, from NUMO (eye), meaning "a pair of eyes". (This also survived in Yalland: NOIMOI (eye) and NOIMIDOI (pair of eyes)).

THUYETA, from THUYE (wind) meaning the "Divine Winds", ie: winds which were believed to be gods.

2. Plural endings in -AI.

-I: was the original Juralic plural ending, which died out in favour of -IX in Atlantean. Traces of it remain in certain nouns with irregular declensions, eg:

CELEUO (nom sing, a noble), CELAI (nom, acc plural)

DAO (nom sing, god), DAI (nom, acc plural)

Also the following irregular adjectives:

CEL (nom sing, noble), CELAI (nom, acc plural)

THIAL (nom sing, this), THIAI (nom, acc plural, these)

THAIR (nom sing, that), THAI (nom, acc plural, those)

We can note also the following fixed meanings for certain nouns and adjectives:

THETTAI (old plural of THETTO, brother), meaning "band of brothers", adopted by the Brotherhood Party in the 790s period.

YCATHAI (library), related to CATHA (book)

IASAI (life), literally plural of IASU (year).

3. The vocative case

The vocative case had been subsumed into the nominative very early on, but a few examples of the vocative singular case survived for declension 1 nouns. These had the ending -A (from Juralic -A:

One example is the vocative singular of DAO (god), which was DA (O god!)

4. The locative case

The true successor of the Juralic locative singular ending -SSE was -S in Atlantean, but this had been replaced in early Atlantean by -SIL from the preposition SIL, meaning "in".

However, the old ending survived in Classical Atlantean in a few set expressions:

THESAS (from THESEI, house), meaning "at home".

CERTAS (from an obsolete word CER, ruler), meaning "at court", literally "with the ruler".

BUAIMAXANAS , in the past.

LOUANAS, a long time ago.

MARRANAS, recently

BOUNAS, at the mercy (of)

Irregular Atlantean adjectives and adverbs.

Adjectives:

1. The irregular declensions.

As with the irregular nouns, certain adjectives can also be divided into the same three "irregular" types. The historical reasons for these irregularities are exactly the same as for the nouns, namely phonological changes for some consonants (the voiced stops, l, r and m), and the limitations on vowel combinations in Atlantean (see Irregular Atlantean nouns). Of course adjectives only agree with nouns in number and in the nominative and accusative cases: in all other cases they take the accusative suffix, singular or plural.

I. TYPE 1: Adjective roots ending in -l, or -r, in nominative singular before nouns belonging to the consonantal declension - no. 1).

These behave exactly as nouns (although note that there are no cases of adjectives ending in -n in the nominative and changing to -m when oblique case-endings are added.)

1. l > y when followed by a vowel, ie: in all nominative cases apart from declension 1, and in oblique and plural cases, when the vowel-combinations correspond to one of the permissible combinations; otherwise the "l" remains.

Examples are all adjectives ending in -el or -ul (these endings usually made adjectives out of nouns), eg: proutul (nom sing., peaceful), proutuyan (masc acc sing.). Tincel (nom sing., stary), tinceyix (plural, all cases). Also tel (same), sual (female).

2. r > vanished when followed by a vowel, ie in all nominative cases apart from declension 1, and in oblique and plural cases. But again this depended on the permitted combinations, and otherwise the "r" remained.

Example: car (nom sing, dear).

In this case, note that adjectives ending in "-ar" in the nominative singular lose the "a" before the accusative -an is suffixed, and the "r" remains, ie: it becomes "-arn". Hence car (nom sing, dear), carn (acc sing.) This is the same as with nouns. In this case, the "r" also remains in the nominative before declension 2b nouns, (care), but disappears before declensions 3a and 3b and all plurals (cao, cau, caix). These are due to the permissible vowel combinations rule.

II. TYPE 2: Adjectives ending in a vowel in the nominative singular before nouns of declension 1, but with a plosive interpolated before all other case-endings.

Adjectives which originally ended in -d, -b, -t lost this plosive in the nominative and vocative singular cases, but it reappeared before a vowel in all oblique and plural cases.

Examples: bua (nom sing, wide), buatan (acc sing)
lou (nom sing, long), louban (acc sing) (this is irregular in other cases).

Also included in this group are some adjectives ending in -r, where the "r" was originally followed by a plosive, thus: -rt, -rp, -rc. These lose the plosive in the nom sing (before declension 1 nouns).

Example: snar (nom sing, decl 1, black), snartan (acc sing).

III. TYPE 3: Adjectives ending in -nt, -np, -nc, -lt, -lp, -lc in the nominative singular before declension 1 (consonantal declension) nouns.

These noun endings became -nd, -nb, -ng, -ld, -lb, -lg in the other nominative declensions, as well as oblique and plural cases, if they originally ended in these voiced plosives in all cases.

Examples: yelt (nom sing, old), yeldan (acc sing)
decant (nom sing, dark), decandan (acc sing).

Note: Adjectives ending in -axa are declined if they act as adjectives (eg: beininaxa, holy), but normally past participles as such are not declined.

There are a few adjectives which are completely irregular, viz: cel (noble), dicel (ignoble), lou (long), meu (many), dimeu (few), stei (hard).

2. Irregular comparison of adjectives.

The usual vowel-combinations and interpolations of plosives apply before these endings, as were noted above before vowel-suffixes in non-declension 1, oblique and plural cases.

Note the following comparisons, which are completely irregular in Atlantean, as in many other languages:

Good: ruth. Better: maiss. Best: mailc. Bad: dammic. Worse: diss. Worst: dilc.

Irregular Atlantean adverbs.

The only irregularities which can occur with adverbs is in the formation of an adverb from an adjective, when the usual ending -ehe is added, and in the comparative and superlative cases.

1. Before -ehe, the adverb adopts the changes of l > y or r > vanishes, adds a plosive, or voices a plosive in exactly the same situations that the basic adjective did before non-declension 1 nominatives, oblique and plural cases.

Example: buat (adjective, wide); buatehe (widely).
car (adjective, dear); carehe (dearly)
bour(b) (adjective, great): bourbehe (greatly)

2. In the comparative case, -ehe is added to -iss, thus: -issehe.

In the superlative case, -ehe is added to -ilc, thus: -ilcehe.

Again, before -issehe and -ilcehe, the adverb adopts the changes that the equivalent adjective would have taken before an ending beginning with -i.

Example: car (dear). carehe (dearly). caissehe (more dearly). cailcehe (most dearly).
 (Note the "r" disappears between the "e" and the "i").

Note one completely irregular comparison:

much/many	meu/meuhe
more	misse
most	milce

The Atlantean verb: other moods; auxiliaries

CONDITIONAL MOOD

Present conditional (I should...) was formed by interpolating –EHE- for 1st conjugation verbs, and –OHE- for second conjugation ones. For the past, interpolate –AHE- for all verbs.

Thus:

I should take = lembehen (present conditional); I should sleep = sounohen (present conditional)

I should have taken = lembahen (past conditional)

NECESSITATIVE MOOD

This was purely literary. There were three tenses.

For the present, interpolate –EXE- or –OXE-. between the root and the (abbreviated) pronomial endings. For the past, use –AXE. For the future, use –EAXE. Thus:

I must take = lembexen (present necessitative); I must sleep = sounoxen (present necessitative)

I had to take = lembaxen (past necessitative);

I shall have to take = lembeaxen (future necessitative)

Other tenses were formed using the indicative of the main verb plus TOUTAUE ("of necessity"). This was also how the present, past and future were formed in the colloquial language.

IMPERATIVE / PERMISSIVE MOOD

The imperative mood, being the form of the verb used to give orders in the second person, singular and plural, was formed by the simple root of the verb, followed by the second person (singular or plural) of the present tense of TEH (to do).

Thus:

Take! (singular) = lemb tehetu!

Take! (plural) = lemb tehetes!

This imperative formation could also be used in the first and third persons in a permissive sense, meaning "let..." or "may..." someone do something. Thus:

Let me take / may I take = lemb tehenu

Let him take / may he take = lemb tehe

Let her take / may she take = lemb tese

Let it take / may it take = lemb tehe

Let us take / may we take = lemb tehens

Let them (masc) take / may they take = lemb tehen

Let them (fem) take / may they take = lemb tesen

Let them (neut) take / may they take = lemb tehen

INFINITIVE MOOD

To form the infinitive of a verb, simply prefix EI (or ED if before a following vowel) before the root.

eg: To do = ei teh.

(Ei or ed may be omitted in the literary language if preceded by a vowel at the end of the word before it.)

SUBJUNCTIVE MOOD

This was mostly used in the written language, only, by the time of Classical Atlantean. It was used in "if" clauses, and in certain other places, such as after verbs of saying, believing, doubting, etc.

There are only three tenses, present, past and future. For the present, interpolate IE or IO between root and endings. For the past, put in IA. For the future, IERA. Note that the pronominal endings which follow are the full forms. Thus:

Present:

If I take, etc = lembienu      If I sleep, etc = sounionu

If we take, etc = lembiens      If we sleep, etc = sounions

Past

If you took, etc (sing) = lembiatu

If you took, etc (plural) = lembiates

Future

If he will take, etc = lembierathe

If they (fem) will take, etc = lembierasen

THE PASSIVE VOICE.

All the above tenses have been active. There existed also a passive voice (meaning, for example, "it was taken" instead of "it took"). Endings existed for this, in the present, past and future, which were literary and somewhat rare. The method was to interpolate -PHE- between the active indicative tense vowel and the (abbreviated) personal endings, eg

Present

I am taken = lembephen

We are taken = lembephens

Past

You (sing) were taken = lembaphe

You (plural) were taken = lembaphetes

Future

He will be taken = lembeapheth

They (fem) will be taken = lembeaphesen

There is also a passive infinitive, with ei / ed and eph / oph, aph, eaph added to the root for the present, past and future. Thus:

To be taken = ei lembeph.

More common in the colloquial language, and the only method for all other tenses, was to use the (irregular) verb AIS ("to be") in the relevant tense, plus the past participle of the verb. (For the conjugation of irregular verbs like AIS, see the separate section. So:

Perfect

I have been taken = ainu lembaxa

Pluperfect

I had been taken = eanu lembaxa

Future perfect

I shall have been taken = aiseanu lembaxa.

This form of the passive can also be used with the conditional of AIS, but only in two tenses, the present and past, and it is not possible at all with the form using -PH-.

Present conditional

I should be taken = aisehen lembaxa

I should have been taken = aisahen lembaxa

AUXILIARY VERBS

Atlantean only uses auxiliary verbs in the same way as English in the case of "to be able", "can". This is translated by EX plus the infinitive.

In other cases, Atlantean uses a particular tense or mood, often with an adverb. This is so with:

"To have to", "must" = the necessitative mood (literary language), or the indicative + toutaue ("of necessity").

"To be allowed to", "may" = the permissive mood, adding "ca malcietu / malcieten" ("if you wish") to the second person of the permissive mood (which would otherwise be an imperative order!) This is for the present tense only. For any other tense, used the relevant indicative tense, plus the corresponding tense and person of "ca malc...", eg "ca malciatu / malciaten" (past, second person) and "ca malcierathe / malcierathen" (future, third person).

"May / might (possibly)" = the indicative tense plus exehe ("possibly")

"Ought to" = the conditional mood plus toutaue ("of necessity")

"Should / would" = the straight conditional mood.

"..like to.." = the indicative mood plus malcehe ("willingly")

"Want to" = the conditional mood plus malcehe ("willingly")

To say straightforward "want" something, use the verb malc.

Irregular verbs:

The irregularities in Atlantean verbs relate to changes in the final consonant of the root before suffixes beginning with a vowel. The principle of how these work is the same as for the irregular nouns and adjectives, but obviously they occur in different places. It should be noted, in particular, that such "irregularities" or changes are less variable with verbs than with nouns or adjectives, because a process of analogy often caused one particular form to spread to all the endings of a given class of verb.

I. Verbs ending in -n, -l, or -r , in the root form, ie: infinitive and imperative/permissive moods.

In all cases where a vowel was added before endings (ie: in every other conjugational form),

1. -n > -m, if -m was the original Juralic ending in all cases.

Examples: lan (infinitive, to sing), lamethe (he sings).

nain tese (permissive, 3rd sing, let her remember), naimans (we will remember).

2. -l > -y

Note that the form with -y spread to the infinitive and imperative/permissive cases in later Imperial Atlantean, and the forms ending with the consonant became purely literary or poetic.

Examples: tail (later tay, infinitive, to tell), tayates, (you told).

pel (later pey, infinitive, to carry), peyaxa (carried).

The subjunctive, with its suffix of -ie-, -ia-, -iera- fell out of use entirely with these irregular verbs, because of the awkward combination of vowels which would have resulted (-yie-, etc). the indicative was used instead. (In the older language, the -l- or -z- would have remained before the subjunctive -ie suffix.)

3. -r > disappeared (if permitted by the rule of possible vowel combinations) (See Irregular Atlantean nouns)

dour (infinitive, to move), douondur (moving) but doureaxen (I must move).

Again the subjunctive endings, which were originally added on the the form ending with -r, were normally replaced by the indicative in common usage.

II. Verbs ending in a plosive, preceded by a vowel, or by -r-, -l-, -n- did not change in any cases at all.

This is different to the situation with nouns and adjectives, where some final plosives would be lost if not followed by an ending, and also final unvoiced plosives after -r, -l or -n became voiced if suffixes were added. This is because the forms with the plosive, or unvoiced plosive after -r, -l or -n was extended to all other cases by analogy in earlier times.

III. Causative verbs with roots ending in -uan, -uen and -ien.

The endings -uan and -uen (together with -uas) were added to roots to create a causative sense, ie; to make something happen or bring it about (eg . bounuen, to have mercy, from bouna mercy). Similarly -ien was added to mean: to make something happen (eg: fulgien, to illuminate, from folgul, bright).

With all such verbs, the -en and -an part of these suffixes vanished before the vowel suffixes added on to form tenses (ie: e and o for the present, a for the past, etc).

Examples: fulgianu (I illuminated), fulgiehen (I should illuminate).

Exceptions to this rule are:

1. In the future tense, only the -e- or -a- of the causative ending vanished, while the -n- remained, eg: fulgineanu (I shall illuminate).
2. The subjunctive mood was rarely used with these verbs: the indicative would be used instead.

There are a few completely irregular verbs, including ed ais (to be) and ei teh (to do).

Numbers 1

The cardinal and ordinal numbers.

Cardinals are straightforward numbers, like "one, two, three..." Ordinals are the equivalent of English "first, second, third..." and then onwards normally adding "-th" to the cardinal. Cardinals are indeclinable, including "en", unlike the same word meaning "a(n)", which is declinable.

Ordinals decline like ordinary adjectives, but there are a few irregularities. See the section on the irregular declension of adjectives.

Numbers 2

1. "Times"

In order to express so many "times", ie once, twice, three times, etc, add the suffix -(a)nai to the cardinal (include the "a" if it follows a consonant, omit it if it follows a vowel), eg:

once            enenai
twice            buounai
nine times    nantanai

All these are indeclinable. Historically they show the old (Juralic) plural ending -aj, which was largely replaced by -ix in Atlantean nouns and adjectives.

2. "Every / each"

To translate "every ...", eg "every three, every four" or "three of each, four of each", prefix the Atlantean cardinal with "ton(t)-". Use the form "tont-" before a vowel, otherwise "ton-". EG:

Every one (each one)                    tonten
Every five (five of each)                toncel

3. Fractions

To create fractions, add the definite article before the ordinal numeral for single fractions, or the relevant number for larger ones, as in English eg:

a/one half            en buoul
one third            en darcul
one quarter        en theinul
two thirds            buou darcuix

These fractions are indeclinable, and followed by the genitive case of the noun.

4. "-ly", "in the .... place"

To translate words like "firstly, secondly," etc, add the adverbial suffix -ehe to the ordinal, similar to the English construction, eg:

firstly            enuyehe
fifthly            ceyehe

To understand the change of vowel from "i" to "y" when the "ehe" is suffixed, see the section on irregularities in declension and conjugation. There are two numerals which do not correspond to the expected formation:

tenthly	douyehe
in the seventieth place	ariehe

5. "-ruple", "multiplied by", "...times".

To translate formations like "double", "quadruple", "twenty times", there are two methods depending on whether the construction is an adjective (as in "triple salary") or a verb (as in "to triple a salary").

As an adjective, prefix the first part of the cardinal to the relevant noun. Note that only the first four (up to "quadruple") are regularly used in Atlantean. Ie:

Double	buo-
Triple	dar-
Quadruple	thein-

Single is a separate adjective = encanul.

As a transitive verb, Atlantean used the construction "to make two", "to make three", etc, with the verb "ei thaid" plus the cardinal, eg

To double / make two	ei thaid buou
To triple / make three	ei thaid darco

To express the intransitive verb, "to double" in the sense of "to become double", Atlantean used "ad ern" plus cardinal, eg

To double / become two	ed ern buou
-------------------------------	-------------

"Tontousuyu Thehotte": "The Creation of the Universe" - A linguistic analysis.

Below is a linguistic analysis of this Atlantean document, which is included in the original papers that I, as editor, have collated and published. This work analyses the grammar and vocabulary of the document word by word. The English translation is written in italics underneath the original Atlantean in an absolutely literal translation. After that, each line and word is discussed individually. All Atlantean words are in italics. All Juralic words have * in front of them, as they are purely suppositional.

Stress has been shown in the first few sentences, by making the stressed vowel or diphthong bold.

1. TONTOUSUYU THEHOTTE

Of the universe                          creation

Order of words: the genitive (tontousuyu) comes first, as is usual in Atlantean.

Tontousuyu: genitive singular of tontouso (universe), consisting of the prefix tont (all) and ouso (existence, being), the noun form related to ais (to be) (Juralic **o:is*).

Thehotte: creation, noun form from theh (to build, create), cf thehon (creator), teh (to do), teih (to behave, act).

There are several related forms here which come the related Juralic verbs **teukh:* (to do) > teh; and **te:kh:* (to behave) > teih, respectively grades 3 and 2 of the basic, grade 1 Juralic root tekh: (to live, exist) - this did not survive in any of the descendant languages.

There is yet another root related to these: **theukh:* an emphatic Juralic form, is the ancestor of theh (to create), from which thehotte is formed, as we have seen.

Note that Atlantean does not normally use a word for the definite article, unless there is a desire to be emphatic.

2. Siurgesusil                      eanathe bour thehon tontousuyu,                      can                      dithehax,
In the beginning was Great Creator of Universe,                      Himself uncreated, Endao.
Original God.

Siurgesusil: Locative sing of siurgeso (beginning), noun form from siurg, itself formed from sil (in) + urg (to go).

Eanathe: (Irregular) past tense, third pers sing of ois (to be). Note that the verb "to be" is irregular in all the descendant languages of Juralic. Thus in Chalcran the verb "to be" is as, and the third person past tense, equivalent to the Atlantean eanathe, is irassa. In Helvran, "to be" is oz, and the third person past tense is id. Finally the Yalland for "to be" is oiroven, and the third person past tense is oirodo. The third person past tense has different endings for masculine, feminine and neuter, but these are only obvious in Chalcran and Yalland, and of course the original Juralic.

Bour: Nom sing of bour (great)

Thehon: "Creator", from theh (to create) with suffix -on, equivalent to English -er or -or.

Can: Can mean own or, as here, self.

Dithehax: Di- is a prefix meaning dis- or un-. Thehax is the past participle of theh.

Endao: En- is a prefix meaning original, basic.

3. Plein luphuyu e risayu aisondur, thehathe tontousun rota deican.
Filled with light and air being, he created everything out of Himself.

Luphuyu: Gen sing of lupho (light). This comes from Jur. lo:pho:, and would normally be **loupfo* in Atlantean. In fact the North Atlantean form, lupho, was adopted in the general language. Compare also Chalcran lupo, also with the "u". The N. Atlantean dialect is in some cases closer to Chalcran than standard Atlantean.

risayu: Gen sing of ris (air).

aisondur: present participle of ois (to be) (irregular).

Note the Atlantean tendency to use participles, present as here, or past, in place of the clauses English uses, which may begin with "as.." or be separated by "and". So "being.." in place of "as he was..", or simply "filled..".

thehathe: past third pers sing of theh (to create) deican: Himself, properly deihcan, where the "h" went missing. Compare also sueican (herself), zueican (itself) and heican (themselves). With the first and second persons, can (self) was not usually used at all, just the accusative pronoun on its own. However, in the third person, the form with can was usual, as there might otherwise be ambiguity as to whether the words referred to someone else ("he created everything out of him", ie: another person) or "himself", as is here meant.

4. Enan thuyan tuaincar e naohuar, nundar e gestar dorienaxa,
A wind to the south and to the west, to the north and to the east sent

Sentence construction: Note the use of the past participle, doreienaxa, "sent", used instead of the English conjunction plus clause: "after he had sent a wind..."

tuaincar, naohuar, nundar, gestar: the allative form of these nouns, meaning "(sent) to the south, etc". Gest comes from Jur. **geste:*, which would normally have become **yest* in Atlantean, but in fact the Helvran version of the word was adopted: gest. Quite a few words were adopted into Atlantean with Helvran spellings, when the Helvrans possibly dominated the Atlanteans and Chalcrans, before the Atlanteans moved off west around -350. Other examples include pueggis ("battle"), cf Helv prigz; daizen ("lord"), cf Helv. daiz; and belda ("galley"), cf Helv. beld. (These all came from common Juralic roots). It can be seen that these words tended to be military or denote forms of government, tending to add to the conclusion that the Atlanteans, at that time, were under the thumb of the Helvrans. In the case of gest, it seems likely that the Helvran form was taken over to distinguish it from yest, "red", which in Juralic was the same word as "east", ie gest (the idea being that the sky is red in the east at sunrise). It is notable that possible confusion between the two words may have led to Jur. gest, meaning "red", vanishing from both Helvran and Yalland. Chalcran kept giest for both meanings.

There is another related Juralic word, **ghe:sto:*, meaning "dawn", which is yesto in Atlantean. Yestiso in Atlantean means "morning". Atlantean also has a number of personal names from this root, eg Gestyu, Yesteyu, and river names like Ghesse, all showing complete mixes of forms beginning with "y", "g" or "gh".

5. danathe dao heihain saophettun e bourban mayan e tontix ernathen daolix.
gave God them awareness and great power and all became gods.

danathe: past tense, third person singular of dan, to give. Note that when a clause, or anything else, precedes the main part of a sentence, the verb of the main section comes next, before the subject (here: "God").

heihain: the dative form of the third person plural pronoun. Such dative forms only existed for pronouns in the third person, in the classical language, and then only in literary use. Otherwise the form would be the same as the accusative. But it always preceded an accusative pronoun or noun, so there would not normally be any confusion.

saophettun: accusative of saophettu, "awareness". Saophette, on the other hand, meant "consciousness". Both forms came from Atlantean saoph, "to understand". This in turn descended from Juralic saoph, which actually meant "to study". It changed its meaning in all the later Juralic languages. The original Juralic word for "to understand" was **weuz*, which died out later, but was preserved in certain related words in Atlantean, such as feyette ("lore" later "magic"), and feyetton ("magician"). There had always been another word for "lore" in Juralic, **sa:phe:*, which came to mean "learning" in Atlantean (saphe).

mayan: accusative of maya, power. The original Juralic was **ma:ya:*, the grade 1 root. (See Historical grammar of Juralic languages.1, introduction and verbs, for details about the different grade-changes in Juralic).

The grade 2 form, **ma:iya:* meant "control, influence", and became mai in Atlantean (with an irregular declension).

Grade 3, **ma:uy*, was the verb "to control, govern", which became maoy in Atlantean.

Note that an Atlanchalcric noun, **ma:y*, meaning "good", developed from the Juralic root **ma:ya:*, with a change of meaning, which seems to have been that anyone with power or influence must be good! This became obsolete in this form in Atlantean, but survived in the comparative and superlative forms (better, best) as maiss and mailc (both irregular). In Chalcran the basic form survived as ma, meaning "good" in the sense of right or useful. This too had comparable comparative and superlative forms, mass and mach.

Daolix: strictly means divine, here translated as "gods".

6. Thai buou anthuix eathen enuix, per thiai buou eathen sualix,
Former two wind-gods were male, but latter two were female,

Thai: plural of thair etc "that" or also "the former" (irregular declension).

Thiai: plural of thial, etc, "this" or also "the latter" (irregular declension).

anthuix: nom plural of anthuye, "wind-gods". An- is a prefix meaning adding personalisation (ie: the winds here are people, or gods).

7. e anthuyetix enuanathen, tuaince e naohue, nunde e geste.
and the pairs of wind-gods married south and west, north and east.

anthuyetix: the old dual form in the plural, translated here as "the pairs of".

8. Ian taiyathe dao tuaincanthuyan ei lemb tuaincar dimeu thain luhun e
Now told God the South Wind to take to the south some of that light and Taiyathe: past tense, third person sing of tail, "to tell". This verb comes from the second grade Juralic form, **ta:il*, "to talk". The first grade was **tala* (story) > Atl tal (story) and sayatal (history, literally "story of peoples, where people = saya).

Also linked was Juralic **talda* (personal name) (first grade) > Atl. talt, and the second grade form taild (to call someone something) > Atl. tailt. Note that Atlanteans normally had a first personal name (enultalt), a second personal name (buoutalt) and a family name (tonbennaitalt).

lemb: "to take". Note another word for "to take", rett, which means "to procure, snatch". Lemb is more neutral and means "take" in the sense "remove".

dimeu: "some, a little", from di ("not") and meu ("much"). The Juralic word **ameu:bu:*, which had the stress on "e:u" became Atl meu. There were other related forms to this in Juralic, but their forms in Atlantean were quite different, due to the fact that stress in Early Juralic was sometimes variable. Thus Early Juralic **ame:ba:* (quantity, number)(stress on the "a") > Late Juralic: amba, emba, abba. This was amba (multitude) in Atlantean, as well as the suffixes - emba, -ebbe or -ebbe, meaning "a collection of", eg: felemba, a group of trees.

Then Early Juralic **ame:ba*, (number, quantity), with the stress on the "e", > (a)meb > Atlantean meu. This was now the same as meu < **ameu:bu:*(see above).

luphun: accusative sing of lupho (light). This is from Jur, grade 1 **lo:pho:*, in the North Atlantean dialect form (see above). Related is Jur. grade 2 lo:ipho: (heat) > Atl laipho, and Jur grade 3 lo:phyen > Atl luphien ("to brighten").

9. laiphun, deucies        exathe        theh    enun bourbun ousun ahneyun, til folgiensan.
heat ,    so that        he could    make    a    great    being fiery    the    Sun.

laiphun: "heat" (see above, under "luphun").

ousun: "being", accusative singular of ouso. The Juralic for this was **o:so:*, a noun form from **o:is*, "to be" > Atlantean ais. (See also "tontousuyu" at top of page.). Anouso was a word deliberately invented by Atlantean philosophers, with the prefix an-, for personalisation, and meaning a "pantheistic god", or more literally, a "personal divine being". Anousto then meant "pantheism".

ahneyun: "fiery", accusative of the adjective related to Atl. ahna, "fire".

10. Dorse ernathe folgiens dayun ceyun.

Thus became Sun    god    fifth.

dayun: accusative singular of dao, "god". Atlantean, unlike some languages, uses the accusative after the verb "to become": only ais, "to be", requires the nominative. Dao is one of the few Atlantean verbs which has a completely irregular declension. Its suffixes are unpredictable, largely because it is such a short, one-syllable verb, that endings have frequently dropped off or been reduced.

11. Uyehe taiyathe naoanthuyan ei lemb naohuar        dimeu luphun, per denun laiphun.

Similarly He told West Wind to take to the west some light,    but    no    heat.

uyehe: "similarly". This is the adverbial form of ul, "similar". Ul is also a preposition meaning "like". Related too is the conjunction ulle, meaning "as".

denun: "no" (accusative case of the adjective den). There are many other words linked to the basic Juralic root, **dekh:*, "no", which was used as a prefix to make a verbal statement negative. This became de (h)- in Atlantean, and could also be used attached to a noun in the sense of "a-" or "non-". The basic word "no" (as opposed to "yes") is deh in Atlantean (Chalcran: dech: Helv: dek; Yall: deck). There is also dehles, which strictly means "never", but was often used as an emphatic form of negativisation. Additional linked words are dehettu ("nothing"), dehon ("nobody"), dehiettu ("destruction") and dehimettu ("nihilist"). This last word was invented in the 780s to identify the new terrorists of the period, and is formed using the suffix -imettu, from -im + itto, and meaning the equivalent of the English "-ism".

12. Dorse thehapheth noura, daodie cintuye.
So was created Moon, god sixth.

thehapheth: past passive, third person, of theh ("to do").

daodie: female god - formed adding the feminine ending -ie to dao. Note the "d" reappears before this suffix. It is normally lost, but of course the original Juralic for dao was **da:uda*, and for a female god, it was **da:udille*. It is also evident in related languages like Chalcran: doda and Helvran dad.

13. Narcehe enuanathen folgiens e noura.
Then were married Sun and Moon.

enuanathen: third person plural, past tense, of enuan ("to marry, become married" - intransitive sense). The transitive form of the verb is enien. The root of these words is **e:n-* in Juralic, with the basic meaning "single, a(n)", leading to Atlantean en ("a, an", with the "e" pronounced short). There is also Juralic **e:no*: > Atl eino, meaning "a person", the adjective of which, einul, interestingly soon came to mean "male". ("Female" was sual, from the root meaning "woman"). Another version of the original Juralic word, namely **e:un*, led to Atlantean en ("one"), with the "e" pronounced long. Juralic **e:un* is of course the origin of Atlantean enuan, in the sense of "to become one". Another Juralic root was **e:na:*, (Atl: eina) meaning "basic, fundamental", and related to this was **ena* (Atl: en) ("seed, germ"). The former is used as a prefix in Atlantean, en-, with the meaning of "original, basic", and by extension, "self-". But as can be easily imagined, all of these very similar words and meanings easily became confused in later Atlantean.

14. Nundanthuye e gestanthuye doriaphethen nundar e gestar, deucies exathen theh
North Wind and East Wind were sent north and east, so that could be created douriaphethen: third person plural past passive of dourien, "to send", itself formed from dour "to move" plus transitive suffix -ien. Note that in the passive, as in a number of other moods and tenses involving lengthy suffixes, the -en of the suffix disappears.

15. meu pustix tincsix lumphuyu, tincix.
many small sparkles of light, (the) stars.

tincsix: plural of tincso "glint, sparkle".

tincix: plural of tincu, "star". Both these words are linked, of course, and derive from Juralic **tink*, "to sparkle". Tincso adds the noun-making suffix -so to the verb. Tincu, from Juralic tinku, is also from the same root originally (as stars are "sparkling" or "twinkling" objects).

15. Per en can enu ernathe dao, naohuisuyu antincu.
But only one became god, Evening Star.

en can: only, alone. From Jur. **e:un kan*. literally "one itself". En can is indeclinable in Atlantean. It can also be a preposition, followed by the genitive case, in which case it means "except". The same word, written as one, ie: encan, means "unique" and in this case is a declinable adjective.

enu: en governing "antincu", hence the ending "u".

16. Thial eathe diehe dao sentul, pear nitaildaxa huaccul bei einaibe.
This was formerly god seventh, though it was miscalled eighth by humans.

diehe: the adverbial form created, unusually, from a preposition, dia ("before") (+ehe). Dia came from Jur. dira:

pear: from Juralic perer (although). The North Atlantean form with "ea" was adopted by standard Atlantean, probably to avoid confusion with per ("but").

17. Ian thehatho dao can zuayan e dunan, tommanan ernaxan.
Now created God Himself water and earth, World become.

Note again the use of the past participle of ern ("to become"), ie: ernaxa, to translate which into English, we have to use a subordinate clause.

18. Engio e duna ernathen dai, per tommana can dehles.
Sea and earth became gods, but World itself in no way.

Dehles: as mentioned above, this literally meant "never". It was used colloquially to mean "not" in an emphatic form. Here it is again used emphatically and in an abbreviated expression, which in English we would have to translate "but the World (definitely) itself did not".

19. Narcies thehatho tontan teccan tommanasil, failix, fondix e enai scatisan.
Then he created all life on earth, plants, animals, and mankind lastly.

Teccan: accusative singular of tec, sometimes written tecc. The original Juralic root, **tegga*, meant "day", but this meaning became antiquated in later Atlantean and Chalcran, probably from Atlanchalcric times. It remains in the days of the week, eg: nouratecc ("Monday"), literally "moon-day", as in English; tuainnecc ("Tuesday"), where the "te" of "tecc" has been absorbed - this word literally means "south-day"; and so on through the week. Tec also remained in classical Atlantean as a poetical or literary word for "life", as here. It was kept alive in the philosophy of "genandourso" ("apartness"). The normal word adopted in standard Atlantean for "life" is iasai. This comes from Juralic Ya:sisu: ("year") > ya:sisu:i: (plural form), which came to mean "life". Iasai thus preserves the old form of the plural, and is declined as a plural noun, despite often having a singular meaning. The correct Atlantean plural, iasix, existed as well, meaning "years". "Year" was iasu.

failix: plural of fail, "plant". The original Juralic was **wa:ila:*, and the related (grade 3) word was **wa:il* ("green") > Atl. fail. Also failette ("countryside").

20. Deucies exathen saoph enai, aisondur saopheyix e tuellissix fondai,
In order that were able to understand people, being conscious and higher than animals,

Deucies exathen saoph enai: As usual, when a word other than the subject of a sentence is placed first (here deucies), the verb follows and the real subject comes last (enai).

aisondur: present participle of ais (to be). Atlantean frequently uses present participles in places where English would use a relative clause, with who or that. Thus a proper English translation of this section is: "In order that people, who were conscious..." In Atlantean, the present participle must be adjacent to the noun it qualifies in such cases, here enai.

fondai: Ablative plural case, which is always used after comparative adjectives, and which corresponds to English "(higher) than (animals)".

21. per undunissix dai, ye thehapheth tommana, rottiurgiathe dao graohan, daothaxan.
though lower than the gods, how was created world, brought forth God Thunder, made divine.

per...: another clause dependent on enai. Such convoluted constructions are typical of high religious literature of this period.

ye: this clause depends on exathen saoph ("were able to understand how...")

22. Naittuyehe naimiathen zuei tainna einain heiheyun siurgesun.
Later reminded its noise mankind of its origin.

naimiathen: third person singular neutral, past tense, of naimien, "to remind." Related to this verb is **no:im* in Juralic, meaning to remember. This became naim in Atlantean. Naimien is the transitive formation using -ien, meaning "to remind". It commands the dative case, see einain, dative plural ("to) mankind") as its object (accusative in English) and the accusative for the sense ("of (its origin)") = heiheyun siurgesun, which is in the genitive case in English. Dimaimien (see in the text further on) means "to not remember", ie: "to forget".

*No:im is in fact the second grade of the basic grade root no:mo:, "eye" > numo in Atlantean (a North Atlantean form). Presumably the link in Juralic times was that you used your eyes to remember someone or something. (See also the third grade formation below). Atlantean preserves the ancient dual plural form (-et-) in the word for eyes (literally, a pair of eyes) = numeto. Yalland also has noimidoi (singular form noimoi).

The third grade development from Juralic **no:mo:* was **no:umo:*, meaning "spirit" or "mind". In the descendant languages, including Atlantean (noumo), this word came to mean simply "mind". Atlantean used different words for a number of subtly different meanings for the word "spirit". Thus noumencu meant "soul", from a late Juralic form **no:umenko:* -(n)enk(o:) was a Juralic suffix meaning "part of" from the related noun meaning "part". So "soul" was conceived of as an individual part of an overall spirit. The same word is found in the other Juralic languages.

In Atlantean, this word came to have a very particular meaning in religion (Theism) and post-750s philosophy. A separate word was used for the spirit of any living thing, namely ayuyettu. This formation comes from Atlantean ayo (Juralic **o:ilo:*), meaning "ever". Linked is Atlantean ayul ("eternal") and ayuyotte ("eternity").

tainna: "noise". This is linked, as the third grade, to tanna, "sound".

23. Yaincu ai cencathen einai crehix naittuyehe naimathen graohan e mayan tontan dayun.
Whenever fought men wars later, they remembered thunder and might of all gods.

Yaincu ai: "whenever". Several interrogative and relative pronouns and can be formed using ai ("ever"), as in English, thus: ciesan ai ("whatever"), ycul ai ("wherever"), cian ai ("whoever"), ye ai ("however").

24. Missies dinaimathen ianan Endan e pethathen cies easiasen en can til thehaxix dai.
Indeed they forgot soon Great God, and thought that there were only the created gods.

pethathen cies easiasen..: this means "they thought that there were.. Note that "there" is not required and hence is omitted in Atlantean. Easiasen is the third person plural of the past subjunctive of the irregular verb ais ("to be"). The subjunctive appears here as the clause it is in follows pethathen ("They thought"), ie: there is some doubt about it. The subjunctive is used in all uncertain or doubtful statements, after "to doubt", "to fear", ""to wonder". "To think", as here, as well as "to say" and "to seem" usually took the indicative, in fact, as they were more definite, except in very literary language, as in the present case.

25. Dao thehathe ainurgonduehe misse dai – anahnughoyan, ancrulsun, e andunarursun, God created continuously more gods – volcano gods, ice gods, and earthquake gods, e narcies sunathe thea.

anahnughoyan, ancrulsun e andunarursun: each of these words has "an-" prefixing it, which "personalises" it, and in fact needs to be translated here as "divine..." or "...gods".

ahnughoyan: accusative singular of ahnughol, "volcano". This word stems from ahna ("fire") prefixed to ughol ("mountain"). Ughol itself was borrowed directly from Ughan, in which "mountain" is udgh. Probably the great "Gestix Ugholix", the highest mountain-range on the Great Continent, on the border of Ughrieh impressed the Atlanteans so much, that they considered them the only real mountains in existence, and took over the word for "mountain" directly from the Ughan. Even the word Ughan (Udgh) meant originally in the Ughan language something like "the people who live in mountains".

crulsun: accusative singular of crulso, the North Atlantean form from Juralic kro:liso: ("ice"). Linked is Atlantean crull, from Juralic **kroll*, ("cold", again in the North Atlantean form.

dunarursun: accusative singular of dunarurso, "earthquake". This comes from duna ("earth") and rur, "to shake" > urso "shaking", "quake". Note that dun itself, meaning "earth", is obviously closely linked to dun ("brown"). They are the same words in Helvran (diun).

26. Per dai can, cian naittuyehe taildaphethen bourdai, rottiugiathen meu pustissix dai,
 But gods themselves, who afterwards were called old gods, produced many smaller gods, heiheyix elthix, cianai taildethen enai til cenndai.
 their offspring, who called men the New Gods.

cian, cianai: cian is the nominative singular case of cian ("who"), whereas cianai is the accusative plural case (in the last part of the sentence).

The Juralic Languages

The Juralic languages represent a self-contained family of closely linked languages spoken by the various peoples referred to as Juralic, or "Jural" in the Atlantean language, and consisting of four main groups : the Atlanteans, Helvrans, Chalcrans and Yallands. We know as little of the original Primitive Juralic language, spoken, it is believed, up to -900, as we do of the history of the Juralic people in that era. We can reconstruct the language, however, by working backwards etymologically, in a similar way to our reconstructions of Primitive Germanic from modern English, German, etc. Thus from the words shown below in more modern texts (after 400), we can reconstruct the parent Juralic words :

IMP ATLANTEAN	IMP CHALCRAN	HELVTRAN	YALLAND	JURALIC	ENGLISH
DAO	DOD	DAD	DAUDH	DAUDE	GOD
TINCU	TINNU	DING	DICKO	TINKU	STAR
SAPHEI	SAPI	ZOV	SAUPHI	SAPHE	LORE
PANDU	PANNU	BAND	BAUDHO	PANDU	FORT
EINO	INO	IN	ENOI	ENO	HUMAN

The section about "Early Atlantis" describes the future path of the Juralic peoples and their tongues until their migrations were finished about -300. Thereafter, Atlantean consisted of two main dialects, North and South. North Atlantean, which was more conservative, and more similar to the Atlantid dialect, spoken east of the river Rollepp, was originally spoken in the capital, Atlantis city. However, according to our sources, the military victory of the "southern" Atlanteans after 166 led to the establishment of South Atlantean speaking Emperors and Courts in the city. For a century afterwards, a number of the relatively few original documents which survive from this period show many North Atlantean forms of grammar and vocabulary still being used in the capital itself. Gradually North Atlantean dwindled to a mere dialect after the middle of the third century. This left South Atlantean to become the future Imperial Atlantean, which would eventually be spoken all over the Atlantean Empire, at any rate in the echelons of government, law and most literature

Chalcran came in three dialects after -200, North, Central and South, but once the Chalcrans were conquered by the Atlanteans after 330, all three died out over the following 200 years. Helvran survived longer, despite the defeat of the Helvran Empire after 267, because it became the universal "lingua franca" of trade and diplomacy for the whole "Helven" and southern areas, and continued to be spoken by the lower classes of these areas. Atlantean, however, took over as the language of government and as the spoken language for the upper classes quite early on, and Helvran finally withered away as a live tongue after 700. It was given the "coup de grace" by the Tyrants after 805. Yalland can be divided into East, Central and West Yalland after -250, and it survived for quite a while in the south as the language of the peasants and lower-class Yallands. It too finally vanished after 800, when the whole Southern area was conquered by Rabarrieh.

THE HISTORY OF THE ATLANTEAN LANGUAGE

Atlantean of course changed considerably over the long centuries from -200 to the end of the Empire in 989. What we think of as Standard Atlantean - Imperial Atlantean - represents the literary language of the Second Empire period, or more precisely, from 300 to 600. But the spoken language moved on even at this period, and the classical literary tongue grew ever more remote from the speech of ordinary people. After the Republic was founded in 589, a "Modern Atlantean" written language was proposed, and spelling reforms and new dictionaries and grammars reflected quite faithfully the changes that had taken place in the spoken language - the so-called "600 Spelling Reforms". These consisted of a great simplification of all grammatical endings to nouns and verbs, etc. Where there were once 11 noun cases, for example, now there were only 3.

Atlantean from 600 to 989 is officially called "Late Imperial Atlantean", but of course within this period of four centuries, many more changes took place, in grammar, pronunciation and vocabulary. Again these were usually not reflected in the written language. When the Imperialists under Ruthopheax I overthrew the Republic in 629, all the Republican linguistic changes were abolished. Spelling reverted to the old Imperial norm until 750, although many new grammatical forms and words crept in. After 750, with the inauguration of the Fifth Empire, the 600 Spelling Reforms were readopted and updated in the "New Speech Practices" of 760-770, reflecting recent usage. These were subsequently updated till the end of the Empire. More details of these developments are given later in this history, in the sections on the Third Empire.

Imperial Atlantean was pronounced as follows : the vowels sound as in modern Italian or German. "Y" is silent, but between vowels it sounds as English "Y". Diphthongs sound as they appear. In final syllables, "U" and "E" are pronounced like the final "ER" in English "WORKER".

Consonants are as in English, except "C" before "E" or "I" is like "CH"; "H" sounds as "SH" after a vowel, otherwise silent. "S" sounds "Z" between vowels, "T" as "TS" before "I" and "E". "TU"="CH"; "DU"="J"; "SU"="SH"; "ZU"="S" as in "PLEASURE"; "PU"="F"; and "HU" as "SHW".

Stress was usually on the penultimate syllable of a word. However, if it is a noun or verb with a suffix of two syllables (due to declension, conjugation, etc), the stress is on the last syllable of the root (ie the antepenultimate syllable). If there is a suffix of more than two syllables, the stress always remains two syllables from the end of the whole word.

Examples: SUNATHE, TAILDAPHETHEN. The stress on "SUNATHE" (past tense, third person masculine singular of "SUN", "to rest") is on the last syllable of the root, ie SUN. In the case of "TAILDAPHETHEN", (past tense, third person masculine plural of the passive mood of "TAILD", "to call"), stress is on the third syllable from the end, because there is a suffix of over two syllables, ie TAILDAPHETHEN.

There are a few exceptions to these rules, usually relating to personal names with endings such as "-IPHON", "-EREX", "-ENEL", where the stress stays on the third syllable from the end in the basic form, though it moves forward when additional suffixes are added on. This is because these endings are treated as though they were declensional suffixes.

A LOOK AT THE JURALIC LANGUAGES

Below are examples of Atlantean and the other Juralic languages, to give a flavour of the tongues. As a general comment on the grammar, it should be noted that in Imperial Atlantean, there were three declensions of nouns, with 11 cases, singular and plural (cf. RUN (hill) (nom), RUNAN (acc), RUNAYU (gen), RUNAR (allative), RUNAOS (elative), etc.). Verbs had two conjugations, and different endings for the three persons, singular and plural, and of course the many different tenses.

English : We spoke to the king about the farmers in the valley.

Atlantean : Huattans til cerexan meistiensayun blouasil. (lit : Huattans = past tense of speak; cerexan = accusative of "cerex", emperor, after "til"; meistiensayun = genitive plural of "meistiens", farmer; blouasil = locative (in) case of "bloua", valley).

Chalcran : Chattanni ciartizzi mistiennalli blourizzi.

Helvran : Dor gvapton die girteksin ber die mistyinin zedie blor.

Yalland : Doiri quapteni gertis mestyinel bloivos.

A longer piece of Atlantean prose (English in italics) :

Buenoulun iasusil thraincuyan cerexayu Atlaniphonan II, aithen bourbethaxa meu thisaggix yeltix e thehexa cennix.

In the twentieth year of the glorious Emperor Atlaniphon II, many old cities were increased in size and new ones built.

The Emperor himself used to sometimes travel with

In order to reach one or two towns, he had to cross wide chasms and great marshes.

Juralic-Atlantean-English vocabulary, a - d

This list, with the three following ones from e to z, starts usually with the Juralic root form in the first column, then the descendant Atlantean word in the second column, and the English translation in the right-hand column. Sometimes the complete Juralic form is given (as for an adjective or verbal form derived from a noun root, for example), but usually the table simply shows the Juralic root form, with a dash "-" after it. It can then be seen how other parts of speech in Atlantean are derived from this basic form, as well as other related meanings of the initial noun or verb. for example, a:rg is the Juralic root for "to persecute", which is also arg in Atlantean. Arg- is then the basis of the derived noun form argeso (persecution) in Atlantean. The original noun form in Juralic for this was a:rgi:so., but this is not given: rather, only the basic root arg is shown, which enables you to see how each Juralic root can father a huge offspring of related words.

Atlantean - English - Juralic vocabulary, a - d

This list, with the three following ones from e to z, starts with the word in Atlantean in the first column, then the English translation in the right-hand column and finally the original Juralic root on the last column. Sometimes the complete Juralic form is given (as for an adjective or verbal form derived from a noun root, for example), but usually the table simply shows the Juralic root form, with a dash "-" after it.

The non-Juralic languages of the Great Continent

THE STUDY OF LANGUAGES IN ATLANTEAN TIMES

We have seen in an earlier section how the Juralic Language Group, comprising Atlantean, Chalcran, Helvran and Yalland, was spoken by the vast majority of the peoples within the Atlantean Empire. However, there were some who spoke languages of completely different origins within the bounds of the Imperium, while outside it, the tongues of the other major nations on the Great Continent were descended from other language groups, distantly or unrelated to Juralic. A theory of the varying origins of the languages spoken on the Continent was first proposed in Atlantis around 380. Thereafter, during the Second Empire, a whole school of Atlantean linguists studied and analysed the grammatical and morphological structures of the Juralic languages, but paid little detailed attention to any other tongues. This changed after about 510, when an interest in all things exotic and non-Atlantean flowed from the Romantic movement into the rather hidebound studies of the Atlantean linguistic school. For the next 80 or so years, languages such as Basquec, Ughan and Keltish were subjected to the same analysis as the Juralic languages had been during the previous century, and various theories were put forward as to the origins and relationships between all these different languages. Most of these views were mistaken, partly because the principles of historical sound changes were not yet grasped, but also owing to a lack of knowledge about older, now extinct languages, the only traces of which now consisted of inscriptions or ancient, incomplete and hard to decipher manuscripts. The chaotic conditions after 600 ended nearly all linguistic studies, and when they began again under the third Empire after about 660, they were on a small and very detailed scale, like so much other study and art in this period. For some decades, individual words in the Juralic languages were studied for changes of meaning in different contexts and over past centuries. Gradually these studies widened out to include non-Juralic tongues, and then, after 700, to the development of a genuine historical and comparative study of language development over the centuries. The foundations and development of all we now know about the languages of the great Continent were laid between 700 and 800. (Modern scholars have made a few discoveries which seem to have eluded the Atlanteans of this period – though it could also be that we have simply lost the sources which would have revealed that the Atlanteans had after all found out these things long before us!) After 800, more linguistic study did take place, but it consisted largely either of grandiose theories to common origins between all the languages of the world, or the detailed investigation of semantic and morphological practice and comparisons between different languages. Scholars also became interested in ever more esoteric languages – those long defunct, or spoken in the furthest reaches of the Great Continent, or on other continents altogether.

1. THE BASQUEC-VULCAN-UGHATIC LANGUAGE GROUP ("BASQUATIC")

These languages, spoken by nations who were repeatedly rivals of the Atlantean Empire, were amongst the first to be studied by Atlantean scholars after the sixth century. They are divisible into two groups – Ughan, and Basquec-Vulcan. Note that Raziran, as spoken in the country, and later Province, of Razira, is a dialect of Basquec. (It died out after the 700s). The Group as a whole is completely unrelated to Juralic or any of the other, earlier western languages, and it is assumed that the peoples who spoke these tongues originated from the south-east of the Continent, well separate from the original Numedean or Juralic areas. All the Basquatic languages are highly inflected, and make great use of prefixes and suffixes for tense and case. Consonance is important, especially in Ughan, where affixes have to have vowels in the same "field" as the root. All the languages like to use bunches of "awkward" vowels together, eg Ughan: DG, PSJ, and TJ. Basquec: TTH,SSH,CCH, corresponding to Vulcan DJ, SJ, GJ. Examples of usage as found in place-names within or just outside the Atlantean Empire are:

BASQUEC

MEANING

EXAMPLE

UDGH	OCH	MOUNTAIN	OCH THERULT (Mountains, Basquec)
KAKROS	CUACH	OLD	CEG KAKROS (Old river)
DGHUT	DUITTH	TOWN	RULDUITH (Name of town, Basquec)

2. LIOSSAN GROUP

Old Liossan split into three main language some time before –900. These were Lio-Marossan, Eliossen and Phonerian, the latter also divided into Island and mainland Phonerian. Lio-Marossan was spoken in the Marossan area, and was separate from the other two groups, which were more closely linked. Eliossen was spoken in the country of Eliossie, and Phonerian in the peninsula that was later to become the Atlantean Province of Yciel Atlantis, and on the various islands in the Marossa Liranca and Eliossia Liranca (Bays of Marossan and Eliossie), as well as on Phoneria.

The overall features of these languages, which survived, as far as Phonerian was concerned, until after 750, were that all words end in a vowel; all syllables end in a vowel, or a vowel or liquid (Phonerian); sentences were spoken with certain tones, lending a musicality to the languages; a lack of "harsh" consonants (eg voiced plosives) or some spirants (eg ch, dj); and great simplicity of grammar – no genders, few affixes.

Lio-Marossan was the "purest" and most vowel-orientated of the languages. It had no voiced plosives or fricatives, and a wide range of diphthongs and triphthongs. All syllables ended in a vowel, eg LEI-YA-SI-A, i.e. NATION. Eliossien was very similar to Lio-Marossan, as far as word and syllable-formation was concerned, eg E-LI-O-SSIE, (the name of the country). Eliossien had no compound consonants, and only used voiced consonants at the start of words. Phonerian was the least rigid of the languages, and would permit syllable groups like CONSONANT-VOWEL-LIQUID/NASAL, unlike the other two. It also used a few consonant groups, such as NT, NC, LT, LD,CH,TH. It had no triphthongs, and very few diphthongs (mostly combinations of vowel and i/y). It did not use tones to distinguish between cases and tenses, as did the other two tongues, preferring auxiliary verbs and prepositions with nouns.

Examples of words, as found in place-names are:

LIO-MAROSSAN	ELIOSSIEN	PHONERIAN	MEANING	EXAMPLE
LEYASSA	LIASSO	LASO	HILL	ATALASO (Town in Yc. Atlantis)
FUYINE	DUINE	FUCHI	BLACK	DUINALEYASSA (Hills, Eliossien)
SUIN(N)O	SUINNO	SUNDO	SEA	SUINOMIORI (Islands, Lio-Marossan)
MIRISA	MORISO	MORISO	ISLAND	FUCHIMORI (Phonerian)

3. MAROSSAN-KELTISH GROUP

Keltish, as spoken in the northern parts of the Great Continent right up until the fall of the Atlantean Empire in 889, was one offshoot of the language spoken in the ancient Marossan Empire until its collapse after –1400. Marossan had been a highly inflected and declined language, with an extensive vowel and consonant system, including diphthongs and consonant-groups. Lenition of intervocal sounds and vowels after l,r,m,n,ng, was also the rule. By the time of "modern" Keltish (i.e. after 400), many of these features of the primitive language had been changed. Inflections and declensions had become much simpler; consonant combinations were fewer; and there were fewer diphthongs (AE,AI,AU,EU). Words had become shorter, due to the loss of endings. Lenition remained, but was now spelt out, eg intervocal consonants voiced as a result of lenition were written as such: P/B,T/D,C/G, etc.

Place-names in Atlantean times preserve original Marossan or Keltish words, as follows:

MAROSSAN	KELTISH	MEANING	EXAMPLE
----------	---------	---------	---------

CAIDH	CADD	OLD	CADDIS/CADDAN (Keltish towns)
TOIGH (Atl: TAIGH)	DOR	GREAT	TAIGEHEILL (Great wood, Marossan origin)
EILL	EULW (Atl: EULU)	WOOD	TAIGEHEILL (As above)
MAUNA	MOUN	NEW	MOUNTAN (Town, Keltish)

4. NUMEDEAN-JUTISH-MANRALIAN GROUP

Numedean (North and South), the tongue of the ancient Empire, which had been overthrown by the Juralic invaders around –900, was a strongly inflecting language. It had all the usual vowels, plus some diphthongs –AI,EU,EI,OI,AU (AV and EV, plus AE and OU in South Numedean). Most of the usual consonants were present, too, though not C,F,Q and W. Palatalisation was common, and was represented by an "I" before the following vowel. Certain consonant combinations were also common, namely TH,PH,KH,PS and TS.

Jutish was spoken by the inhabitants of the Jute peninsula at least until 880, and was a descendant of North Numedean. It had the same vowel system, but fewer suffixes and a stricter word-order than was usual in Numedean. It possessed some of Numedean's diphthongs – written AY,OY,EY and OU, plus IE, as well as AV,EV, etc from Numedean AU,EU. So far as consonants were concerned, C,F,Q, and W were still missing, but also now J,Y, and G (which had become Y). PH became V, and KH became H.

Manralian was descended from South Numedean, and by Atlantean times was no longer a living language in Manralia. It was used for religious and ceremonial purposes until about 815, when Rabarrieh eliminated the Manralian Church and its language. As a language, its vocabulary and morphology were strongly influenced by the various southern languages spoken in and south of Manralia. Again it possessed all the normal vowels, but fewer diphthongs. Note especially OE,AI,EI and OU. AF and EF came from S. Numedean AV and EV. Palatalisation, as in Numedean, was common, but shown by a "Y" preceding the following vowel, not by "Y", as in Numedean. H, when following a vowel, was pronounced SH. Initial consonants were often palatalised, and written PH,TH,CH and SH.

Dravedean, the language of the ancient Dravedean Empire, was distantly related to Numedean, but it had no descendants in Atlantean times, other than a few peoples in the later Province of Dravidieh, whose ancient language had died out before it could be properly recorded by Atlantean linguists. A few elements of the old language are buried in some Atlantean place-names – for examples, see the Introduction to this History. Note that the element "Dravi" is common in Atlantean names in this area, as, for example, the Province, Dravidieh. Somewhere along the way, the correct "Dravedean" spelling of their name, became mistransliterated into "DRAVI-".

Examples follow of place-names, using words from these three languages:

S. NUMEDEAN	JUTISH	MANRALIAN	MEANING	EXAMPLES
NOUTOUS	NOVTOS	NOEHUTOEH	TOWN	NOUTENS, NOVTOS (Towns in Manralia, Jutieh)
DOUIGOUS	TOWOS	DOEHGOEH	OLD	DOHGETEPHE/DOHGASH (Towns in Manralia)
TEIPHES	TEWES	TEPHE	RIVER	River Tephyens (Manralia)

5. SOUTHERN LANGUAGES

This is the group of languages spoken by the peoples in the Far South Continent, and distantly related to them, the tongue of the southern peoples of the Great Continent (araishim), and that of the Polder Folk to the south-east. In another form, this was also of course the language of the great conquering Power, Rabarrie. The elements of words in these languages keep rigidly to a formula, usually: CONSONANT-VOWEL-CONSONANT-VOWEL-CONSONANT-etc. Different parts of speech, tenses of verbs and number of nouns are usually formed by changes of vowel within this consonantal/vowel skeleton, and also by affixes, whose vowel copies one of those in the root. There are few consonant combinations, except double consonants, which follow short vowels, and R or L plus a stop or fricative (eg RT, LF). Vowels are A,E,I,O,U, plus diphthongs AI,EI,OU. Nearly all consonants are used by the various languages. "Q" represents a harsh, aspirate "K". "H" is always aspirated. The northern dialects and languages have a number of additional fricatives, viz.: KH,TH,SH, and also frequently use doubled vowels. The indefinite and definite articles are represented by two prefixes, i- and a-, which are often seen to begin place-names.

Here are examples of Southern words from place-names:

RABARRAN	MEANING	EXAMPLES
ALQADI	WOOD	NUMALKADI (Wood near Numedeas)
ITHEER	LONG	ITHEERDI (River)
KATABA	RIVER	KATABA (River)

Peoples' names in Atlantean until 650.

THE NAMES OF THE ORDINARY ATLANTEAN

As in so many aspects of Atlantean society, the form and number of personal names used by Atlanteans varied according to class. There were also differences in the later periods of Atlantean history, and this interlude will deal solely with the period of the First and Second Empires, and the Revolutionary epoch, ending in 650. Basically most Atlanteans normally had three names - a first personal name (given by the mother); a second personal name (given by the father, and often hereditary or constant from generation to generation); and finally the family name (this came from the father, and was also taken over by his wife when she married, as in modern English usage). In Atlantean, these were called

Enultalt first personal name; Buultalt second personal name; Tonbennaitalt family name. The Atlantean for "name" was "Talt".

Personal names can easily be seen to have a meaning, in the sense that they are derived from words indicating qualities. Examples are listed below ; note that any of these could be used as either first or second personal names.

Male :

Name	Meaning	Example
Siphon	Friend (Sipho)	(Emperor) Siphon Crehonerex II (526-544)
Carel	Car (dear)	(Emperor) Carel I(214-249)
Meison	Meis (beautiful/handsome)	(Emperor) Meison Suennon (604-611)

Female :

Carnaxa	Car (dear); carnaxa (friend)	Carnaxa Lillie (poet, 247-327)
Siphonei	Friend (female) (Sipho)	Siphonei (wife of Atlaniphon II)

Of course there were many other personal names which had no obvious derivation. Thus, for men, Lasso, Thoun, Crehon, and for women, Millei, Ceuralla and Puella.

Family names were originally formed from personal names, occupations or after geographical places. If formed from personal names, they were usually preceded by Nor- or Ra- and followed by -el (an old genitive ending), e.g. Rajustel, Norindel, Raparenel. Typical names which originally related to occupations were Meistiensos or Meistos (Meistiens meant farmer), Celeuos or Celeurnos (Celeuo meant noble), and Fembuos (Fembiens meant woodsman). Names originally taken from place-names were Fembeyo, Thestel and Measil.

NAMES OF THE UPPER CLASSES AND EMPERORS

Nobles of Class 1, as well Atlantean Emperors, formed their names in a different way, namely by using the two personal names, but not the family name (or surname, as we should call it). This was because the second personal name was in itself hereditary and distinctive to that noble family.

To discuss the vagaries of Imperial names in more detail, we shall give an extract from a work by a writer who was himself noble - Siphon Pareon - who lived at the end of the seventh century. This piece was part of a longer work extolling the virtues of the old Atlantean way of life, which seemed to Siphon to be crumbling around him with the Republic taking over in the west, and the old Imperial order cracking apart in the east. (Comments on the text will appear in brackets).

"..Although our Imperial masters, because of their eminence, only required their two personal names, they did make use of family names to denote the dynasty to which they belonged. Thus several Emperors would reckon themselves as part of this same dynasty. As an example from the First Empire, the Emperor Lir-Craonos, the founder of the Empire in 199, had the family name Racrehel, and created the dynasty of Celamel-Racrehel. (Celamel- or Celam- meant "of the noble family.."). All subsequent Emperors retained this name even if their real family name was different, until, after the Imperial Wars, the great Emperor Iustus Atlaniphon decided to start a new dynasty - as it were, a new start altogether - with the name of Celam- Norindel. There have been a few dynasty changes since then as well.

"All the Emperors of the First Empire were known mainly by their first personal name - thus Cao-Melion, Yeasor, Lasso. Naturally if another Emperor of the same name as an earlier one came to the throne, he would be distinguished by the addition of I, II, etc. after his name, at least for the benefit of historians recounting the reigns - for example Ruthoyon I and Ruthoyon II. To our modern eyes, some of the names of those distant eyes seem quaint; I notice the way in which people - and not just Emperors - added little prefixes on to their first personal names for example Cao- (as the Emperors Cao-Melion and Cao-Thildo I - III), or Lir- (as the Emperor Lir-Craonos). (The origin of these prefixes is a little obscure, but Cao- seems to be related to Car, meaning "dear", and Lir- may originally mean "noble".)

"Sometimes Emperors, by virtue of their prowess or great virtues, might be given a throne-name by their Advisers or others. This procedure began with the Second Empire, and in its purest form was done only when the Emperor concerned had reached a great age of wisdom and maturity. The greatest Emperor in our history, without a doubt, was Iustus, the first Emperor of the Second Empire, which he founded in 361; he, above all others, deserved a throne-name, and he was indeed the first to receive one, late in life - namely Atlaniphon. But then his two successors were seen also as great Emperors, and they too were dignified with the same throne-name. It should be noted that the correct way to denote these Emperors is by using their first personal name and the throne-name - thus Iustus Atlaniphon or Lasso Atlaniphon; but unfortunately the baleful influence of historians, with their love of numbering, has largely prevailed in these cases, and these Emperors - and others who also share the same throne-name - are frequently now referred to as Atlaniphon I, Atlaniphon II, etc. etc.

"Such throne-names should not be given or taken automatically; only deserving Emperors should receive them. Other such Emperors were Siphon Crehonerex and Caron Crehonerex, and certainly in my opinion the unfortunate Iaros Crehonerex (or Crehonerex III, if I must use that terminology), who was so barbarously executed by the Republicans within our living memory. Carel, who reigned from 511 to 526, was also given the name Atlanicerex, wrongly in my opinion; his successor and conqueror in the Civil War, Siphon Crehonerex, was alone deserving of a throne-name.

"Other Emperors have always been known just by their personal name as during the First Empire, although we tend now to use both personal names, which helps distinguish Emperors with the same first name - though again the bad practice of distinguishing such Emperors by the use of a number has crept in. For example, we say Thildo Suayofa and Thildo Louroyon, but also Thildo I and Thildo II - or even, I regret, Thildo I Suayofa and Thildo II Louroyon. I suppose I should also mention our one Empress of the second Empire, Carulla Ceisille (499-504). With true female perverseness, she insisted on being known by her second personal name, Ceisille, rather than Carulla. I think this was to distinguish herself more clearly from her only female predecessor, Ceuralla, who reigned from 312 to 313.

"This then is the traditional way in which Emperors have been named in our great Empire. But I do not know how much longer any of this will continue. The world has changed terribly for the worse in the last twenty years. Republican Revolutionaries have taken over half of our beloved Empire, including Atlantis itself, and they despise all tradition. They have no nobles or Emperor, and name themselves like ordinary men. And what of the areas remaining to the old Empire? Our great and true Emperor still rules and reigns as tradition demands, though sorely beset by enemies on all sides ( it appears that Meison Suennon is being referred to, who ruled between 604 and 611), but elsewhere a general is ruling Provinces, and feels it no dishonour not to call himself an Emperor. (This must be General Proinen who seized control of a group of Provinces in the south-east). I fear that in a few years the old traditions of the Empire, not least the naming of Emperors, will have vanished for ever from the face of the earth."

(This prophecy turned out to be false. Imperial rule was re-established over the whole former Empire after 650, and the naming of Emperors resumed roughly as it had been in the later Second Empire, at least until 750).

The place-names of the Empire.

THE ROOTS OF ATLANTEAN PLACE-NAMES

The place-names (i.e. the names of towns, villages, and geographical features) within the Atlantean Empire represent a fascinating capsule of the linguistic history both of Atlantis and of the other languages incorporated into her empire. Although the names often look meaningless in themselves, in nearly every case we can find elements of Atlantean words (current or from the past) or of words from other languages, perhaps altered in various ways to suit changing linguistic practices, or to bring them into line to Atlantean usage. All the following may be found : obsolete earlier forms of Atlantean, North Atlantean forms, Numedean remnants, and Chalcran, Helvran or Yalland words, sometimes combined with Atlantean ones. Geographical names in particular reveal fossilised non-Atlantean features. Areas close to the borders will have non-Juralic names, sometimes "Atlanticised". Towns are often old, but a large number of new ones were built during the course of the Empire, and these are usually give purely Atlantean names (e.g. Cennatlantis, Atlanipand.)

ELEMENTS IN PLACE-NAMES

Very many towns and geographical names are called after nearby geographical features, or have such terms as "old" and "new" added to them. The following particles (shown with their original meanings, and examples) are very common in Atlantean names :

-tis, -is town Atlantis, Gentis (towns)

-run, hill Lillerunix (range of hills)

-inge sea Celing, Nosinge (towns)

-zueph-, -(s)lepp (N.Atlantean/Helvran) river Yzuephe(town), river Fellepp

-pand fort Fembepand (town)

cenn- new Cennis, Cennatlantis (towns)

ughol mountain Crolden Ugholix (hills)

yet old Yeldis (town)

Thus it can be seen that Atlantis (the town) literally means "the town of the Atlans", and Cennatlantis (the later capital of the Empire) means "New Atlantis". The range of high hills in the south of the Province - the Lillerunix - literally meant "white hills" - "lill" means white and "runix" means hills. The rather strange word Ughol, meaning mountain was borrowed from the Ughan language at some early stage, where the word for mountain was "Udgh", and the Ughans themselves were literally "the people of the mountains". (These mountains, as far as the Atlanteans were concerned, were the great range called the Gestix Ugholix or "Eastern mountains" which ran to the east of the river Gestes, and cut off the Ughans from all the western peoples, including the Atlanteans.

And the suffix "-pand", from pandu meaning fort, is found in many Atlantean fortress cities, especially to the west of the river Gestes - e.g. Fembepand, Atlanipand and Borepand.

Very often we find names in parts of the Empire, which were not originally Atlantean, have prefixes and suffixes with similar meanings to the above, but in the original language of the area. For example :

Chalcran : Gil (old) and misto (farm) eg Gilmisto. Triall (high) e.g. Triallana (town)

Helvran : Giez- (old) e.g. Giezuat. Cuat (town) e.g. Numercuat.

Yalland : Dhoiro (river) e.g. river Dhoiros. Dir (from Thair = town) e.g. Yemdir

Lio-Marossan : Phaio (river) e.g. river Ruphaio. Sulo (great) and lo/so (town) e.g. R. Sulosos.

Keltish : Dor (mountain) and Tan (town) e.g. Dortan and Mountan (towns).

Atlantean and non-Atlantean elements may be combined, e.g. Bemmetis (Chalcran "Bemme" (wood) and Atlantean "tis" (town)).

In areas adjacent to or beyond the borders, Atlantean usually adopted - and sometimes adapted - the names as they were found in the languages spoken across the borders, e.g. Ughan, Basquec, Vulcan, and the various Southern tongues. Examples are :

Ughan : Teg or Ceg (river) - rivers in Ughan areas were usually prefixed by these Ughan words in Atlantean; also : Udgh (mountain - borrowed by Atlantean as Ughol.)

Basquec : Puach (new) as in Puachith (town); Rult (great) as in Och Therult.

Finally, in some really old names, we can trace the fossilised remains of long-dead languages, such as Marossan, Dravedean and Numedean. Examples of place-names dating all the way back to these eras have been given in the Prologue to this history.

What's new?

Brief personal details: I live near London in the U.K. I am 58 years old, and work as a Librarian.

I am in the process of putting on to my website the documents about Atlantis that I found on my doorstep some time ago (see the introduction). I have already put on the basic story of the Empire, along with a number of more specialised documents about Atlantean society, philosophy, geography and warfare, as well as a number of works in the original Atlantean, and, above all, quite a lot about the languages of the Great Continent.

There follows a list of what I have added and will be adding to this site, with dates:

January 2003:                    First published documents on the Atlantean Empire on my website.

February - March 2003:    Reproduced much more detail about Juralic. See:
Historical grammar of Juralic languages,1, introduction and verbs

Historical grammar of Juralic languages,2, pronouns, adjectives and nouns

Juralic phonetic history - consonants            Juralic phonetic history - diphthongs   Juralic phonetic history - vowels

March 2003:                    Added more detail on the Atlantean language (verbs and numerals). See:
Details of the Atlantean verb    Atlantean numerals 1    Atlantean numerals 2

April 2003:                    Further details on phonetic changes and irregular Atlantean nouns.
 See: Irregular Atlantean nouns

May 2003                        Details on phonetic changes and irregularities in Atlantean adjectives and adverbs.
 See: Irregular Atlantean adjectives and adverbs

Irregularities of the Atlantean verb.

See: Irregular Atlantean verbs

Complete vocabulary listed by Juralic root, plus Atlantean descendant and English translations.
 See: Juralic-Atlantean-English vocabulary a-d and subsequent lists.

Adding pictures of buildings and statues of the period throughout the text.

June 2003:                    Begun detailed linguistic analysis of Atlantean text "Tontousuyu thehotte ("the creation of the world").    See: Creation of the world - analysis

July 2003:                      Finished the linguistic analysis. Added additional text and maps of the Battle of Runnates (746).

August 2003:                Added more details and map on the Bradghus campaigns, 720 - 721.

September - October 2003:    Completed a section on great writers of the First and Second Empires, taken from an original document. This is in the section of "original documents". The Golden and Silver ages of Atlantean literature, 250 - 550

November 2003: A section giving more detail on the literary sources of this whole history. See Sources of Atlantean history.

Some speculation about the origins of the whole work, and the fact that it is written in English at all, see the first part of the section on Atlantean language

I have added an excerpt in English and Atlantean from a play by Gildasso, "The Bride": The Bride - excerpt from a play

December 2003: More words added to the English - Juralic languages vocabulary. There are now 1579 different words in the vocabulary (excluding all the different forms of nouns and verbs with morphological suffixes).

January 2004: An arrangement of the vocabularies has been added which begins with Atlantean words in A-Z order, followed by English translation and Juralic root. See: Atlantean-English-Juralic vocabulary a-d

February 2004: Begun detailed description of the Helvrán Wars. Added some material to the "philosophy" sections.

March 2004: Concluded description of the Helvrán Wars: The Helvrán War Added more tables to genealogy section: Genealogy- the third century. Adding more military maps for the campaigns of Ruthopheax I (620s onwards). \(2\) 600-629 \(3\) 629 - 648

April - May 2004: Added indexes of major battles fought by the Atlanteans and updated maps showing their locations. Index of Atlantean Army battles-alphabetical order Index of Atlantean Army battles-chronological order.

June 2004: Added chapter on military geography of the Great Continent: Military geography. Also started new section on a detailed military account of the "civil" wars of Ruthopheax I: Ruthopheax I's war against the Republicans and Ruthopheax I's wars against State E, 1- 631-633 Ruthopheax I's wars against State E, 2- 634

July 2004: Wrote text for Ruthopheax I's civil wars.

August 2004: Completed text and maps about Ruthopheax I's wars.
Added table of inventions in the Atlantean period: Table of inventions

September 2004: Added an historical table of Atlantean intellectual endeavour: Table of inventions.
Included three maps to illustrate the liberation of the Empire from the Tyrants, 828-829: The Liberation- \(1\)- Feb - April 828 The Liberation- \(2\)- April - Aug 828 The Liberation- \(3\) Sept 828 - Jan 829

October 2004: Section on the history of the Atlantean Navy: The Atlantean Navy (within folder on the Atlantean Army).
Entered sites and dates of all the important battles in Atlantean history on the maps of battle sites: Battle sites NE Battle sites NW Battle sites SE Battle sites SW Battle sites central area

November - December 2004: Added description of the Naval Battle of Sulosos (between Atlanteans and Skallands) in 746, with three maps, in section on the Atlantean navy: -The Atlantean Navy

January 2005: Additional pictures added to the site.

February 2005: New details of the final year of war between Atlantieh and Rabarrieh against the Basquecs in 750 have been added. \(5\) 748-750 .
Also more pictures and paintings.

March 2005: Additional maps for the Great Continental War

April 2005: Additional images and pictures added to site.

July - August 2005: More images of Emperors added to site.

However, there is much more to add. In particular, I intend to:

1. Complete a full and detailed description of Atlantean grammar, and gradually add more of the vocabulary of the Juralic languages.
2. Describe in more detail the historical changes in phonology between Juralic and its four descendants.
3. Complete the list of Atlantean geographical place-names (towns, hills, mountains, rivers, etc), with an analysis for each of the derivation of the elements of the names (where known).

4. Reproduce more documents in the original language(s).
5. Give more specifics on the Atlantean arts, especially literature and music.
6. Give further details about the armies of Atlantis and her neighbours, including weaponry, dress and tactical formations and manoeuvres.
7. Produce more strategical descriptions and commentaries on the many military and naval campaigns in which Atlantis was involved. I have in my possession much more detail on, for example, the Family and Imperial Wars of the Fourth Century, the Ughan Wars of the next two centuries, the small campaigns of the Third Empire and the wars fought by and against the Tyrants.
8. Complete the genealogical tables of the Emperors.
9. Finish the description of science and invention under the Empires, as well as entering into more detail about the historical development of Atlantean linguistics, historiography, linguistics, biology, physics and chemistry.
10. Reproduce more pictures of Atlantean places and people.

The Atlantean navy

THE NAVY DURING THE FIRST AND SECOND EMPIRES TILL 585

The first naval base of the nascent Atlantean Empire was on eastern side of the Atlano Mandengio, the island opposite the city of Atlantis. This situation provided a sheltered and protected port and harbour from the earliest days. In the first half of the third century, this navy consisted of high-boarded sailing-ships little different from those used by merchants in their trading activities. Many also had oars for inshore manoeuvring. Atlantis' first major naval conflict was with the Phonerians, in the First War of 241 - 245. In this war the Atlanteans were seriously outmanoeuvred by the faster largely oared Phonerian ships, which could also ram. But these ships were generally too low to be able to board the higher Atlantean ships.

A few years later, the war with the Helvrans began. The naval side of this conflict was of vital importance to both sides, and here Atlantis came up against a very large force of oared galleys, developed by the Helvrans for use in the relatively sheltered Helvengio. These defeated the Atlanteans in the initial battles, as the latter's sailing-ships were unable to corner the galleys. Atlantis learned from this and built larger sail and oared galleys as well as some bigger ships operated purely by sail. With these developments and superior tactics, the Atlanteans eventually gained command of the seas. Tactics remained the use of bows and arrows and ramming and boarding enemy ships. After this time, and especially in the fourth century, fire-power on ships developed considerably, with the use of mechanical artillery (crossbows, catapults and ballistae) and fire projectiles.

About 270, after the conquest of Helvrieh and Manralia and the seizure of the main bases of the Helvran navy at Giezuat and Noehtens, a small naval force was established in the Helvengio, based at Giezuat and initially using captured Helvran ships.

In 318 there took place the Second War with the Phonerians. This time Atlantis used much larger sail and oared ships, now with some basic artillery on board. The Phonerians had also developed similar ships, but they were overwhelmed by the quantity and quality of the Atlantean force. The Phonerian navy had been based at Achosil and on other islands in the bay of Marossan. After the defeat of the Phonerians, Atlantis set up a third naval base at Achosil. Finally in 370 a fourth base was added, initially at Meisting in Th. Thiss. This was moved south to the new colony of Siphya around 500. These bases remained throughout the Second Empire, supplemented by smaller administrative and supply stations elsewhere, such as at Noehtens, Phaiosio, Nosinge and later on Phonaria and Trayanaxo, as well as the mid-channel fortress island of Pand-engeyu.

The Atlantean navy had relatively few combative tasks during the period of the Second Empire: their main task was to protect trade against raiders and pirates. In the Civil War of 524-526, there was some fighting between the rebel Giezuat navy and the loyalist Atlantean one, which led to the rebelling of the Atlantean force as well. Other forces remained inactive. There was also some sparring between Atlantis and the new Basquec forces around 500 - 510 in the south and again in the bigger war after 582. There were no important developments or changes to the ships at all during all this time, other than the increase and improvement of shipboards mechanical artillery and the gradual abandonment of oars in favour of sailing-ships. Galleys were rarely used by any of the great naval powers, but the Atlanteans, Basquecs and Eliossiens retained them for inshore work, amongst islands and on rivers.

THE REVOLUTION AND WARS OF THE PRETENDERS, 585 - 650

In the Revolutionary period, nearly all the naval forces of Atlantis went over to the Revolutionaries, with the exception of some ships in Phonaria, which were soon overcome, and the fleet based at Siphya. Apart from skirmishes with the other Republican fleets, this loyalist navy remained in control of the Southern Channel in the 580s and early 590s. After that it was involved in a series of attacks by the Basquec navy which inflicted heavy losses and forced it back into harbour. The Atlantean southern colonies were hereafter cut off from all outside contact and supply until the 630s, other than via the difficult cross-desert journey through partially hostile territory to Yall. Thiss. During the period 600 - 620, Basquec naval raids penetrated right up the western coast of Th.Thiss. at times.

After the fall of Atlantis city to the Imperialists, the Atlantis based navy reverted to Imperialist (Ruthopheax's) control very quickly. However the fleet based in Yciel Atlantis remained true to the Republicans for a while and protected that province to which many Revolutionaries had fled. Later an Imperialist amphibious expedition from Phonaria and Atlantis reconquered Yciel Atlantis and defeated the republican navy. The Giezuat navy had joined the Imperialist faction of Group "A", and only came under Ruthopheax's control after his defeat of that power in 647.

The main change in armament was the introduction of gunpowder artillery on board after the 620s, chiefly in the Imperialist navies, but soon after in those of the Basquecs. The guns, all muzzle-loaders at first, grew heavier. As on land, the Basquecs experimented with rockets. These, like other early trials of steam-powered ships and ironclads were banned by Ruthopheax after the 660s.

THE NAVY DURING THE THIRD EMPIRE AND THE GREAT CONTINENTAL WAR, 650 - 750: THE COMING OF THE IRONCLADS

Part of a copy of a naval battle from the period of the Continental War

Until 743 this was another quiescent period for Atlantis, but various new, potentially rival navies appeared on the scene. In the north Anauren had the remains of the old Republican Achosil force. The main Atlantean base at Atlantis was moved north to Sulosos. Skallandieh also developed a navy chiefly in rivalry with Anauren. In the south, the Basquecs retained their navy and after about 610 began building it up in the same way as their army. Rabarrieh was the other rising naval power in this region. After the 710s, Basquecieh, Atlantis (secretly) and to a lesser extent the other powers, began serious experiments with stem-power and the use at sea, as on land, of rifled and breech-loading artillery and hand guns. Steam was also used experimentally on a few ships. The use of iron plating was also considered by the Basquecs, but as they assumed their ships were so superior anyway to those of any likely enemy, they did not bother very much about protecting their wooden fleet at this stage. These new ships had their first main actions against the Rabarrans in the 730s, and won a number of successes as the Rabarrans' navy was still very largely traditional. The successes of the Basquecs alerted all the other nations to the power of the new ships Basquecieh was launching. Atlantis, Rabarrieh, and to a lesser extent Skallandieh and Anauren all openly threw their energies into trying to match the Basquecs after the mid 730s. As Basquecieh began planning her great war against Atlantis, she deliberately helped Skallandieh improve its fleet in order that she should be able to attack Atlantis from the north when the time came.

By 743, and the start of the Great Continental War, many ships in every navy were equipped with bigger rifled guns, mostly breech-loaders, firing shells. However the majority of these navies, even including the Basquecs, had still a larger number of older ships with a mixture of muzzle-loading, breech-loading, rifled and non-rifled, shell and cannon-ball firing artillery. A relatively small number were steam-powered and even fewer were ironclad at this stage. The following table shows the situation of the Great Powers at the outbreak of war - it only includes the ships-of-the-line (or battleships) of each country. They all also had many smaller ships, frigates, gunboats, etc., very few of which were armed in the modern way:

Basquecs: 14 ships. 10 shell-firing. 7 breech-loading. 7 steam. 6 ironclad.

Atlanteans: 24 ships. 8 shell-firing. 8 breech-loading. 7 steam. 5 ironclad.

Rabarrans: 9 ships. 5 shell-firing. 5 breech-loading. 2 steam. 4 ironclad.

Skallands: 9 ships. 7 shell-firing. 8 breech-loading. 5 steam. 4 ironclad.

Anauren: 10 ships. 3 shell-firing. 4 breech-loading. 2 steam. 2 ironclad.

In the Great Continental War of 743 - 750, the Atlantean navy faced its greatest challenge ever. It was faced by the Basquecs in the south, and the Skallands in the north, which had as its disposal additionally the navy of Anauren, as a result of its brilliant attack in 744. Atlantis was supported by Rabarrieh. As the war progressed, the number of ships on all sides armed with rifled breech-loaders and shell ammunition increased, but Basquecieh had the initial superiority, as it did also on land. This entailed also the use of steam on some ships. Subsequently all nations also adopted armoured protection for their ships.

THE NAVAL BATTLE OF SULOSOS, JUNE 15th 746

THE PRELIMINARIES TO BATTLE

The two navies which took part in this battle were the Skalland and the Atlantean. The former were covering the landing of Skalland forces near Sulosos, whence they were marching on Atlantis itself. The latter consisted of part of the Achosil fleet, which had been able to move southwards, well out to sea past the Skalland navy, then into the southern end of the channel west of Atlantis city. There it picked up reinforcements from the Atlantean navy and moved on north out of the straits. Now searching to give battle with the Skallands, it was in fact spotted first by a Skalland cruiser, and the Skallands moved deliberately westwards away from the land. The Atlanteans approached the former position of the Skallands and then an Atlantean frigate also discovered the Skallands on their port flank.

The Atlanteans were led by Admiral Giben, who commanded the Achosil fleet and all the ships in this battle, and the Skallands by their overall Admiral, Mecishevif ("Admiral") Opazin Zifel, or Opazin for short. Opazin had a total of 10 battleships, two iron cruisers, three wooden frigates and two armoured wooden battleships. Once the Atlanteans had been spotted, he immediately ordered an attack on them. The Atlanteans had 9 battleships, 4 cruisers and 2 armoured wooden ships. Both admirals had drilled their captains on the tactics they would use in a sea battle. Opazin always aimed to attack and he ordered his ships to get into a line ahead formation of groups of three ships and cross in front of the Atlantean line. Each group was led by a ship which was a strong rammer and able to fire forwards, protected on each flank by slightly weaker broadside ships. The front one was the "One", the flagship of Admiral Opazin. There followed the three groups of three ships, in arrowhead formation. At the back of the line came the "Four", the two cruisers "Twelve" and "Briton" and the two armoured ships "Caledonia" and "Repulse". (Note that the Skallands did not give their ships names, only numbers). This all caused some problems and the whole Fleet more or less halted between 1.40pm and 2pm to sort themselves out.

Giben, when he learned that the Skalland lay to his port and rear, out to sea, turned his whole force round and began to move SW in line ahead by single ships. He kept his four cruisers to the east of (behind) the front main line, with the two armoured wooden ships, "Carel I" and "Carel II", behind them. By 2pm, both fleets lay almost motionless, two or three miles apart, the Skallands facing east and the Atlanteans now more or southwards but still to the north-east of the Skallands. Giben set off again at 2.30pm and was in a position now to cross in front of the leading Skalland group some 3/4 mile to the west. led by the flagship "Iustos Atlaniphon". The other battleships followed, and the fifth in line, "Louron Ruthopheax" was the second-in -command. This suited Atlantean tactics, the famous "crossing the T", whereby each ship could concentrate all its guns on each of the enemy ships, one at a time.

THE START OF THE BATTLE, 2.30PM - 3PM

From 2.30pm onwards (see first diagram), the leading three Atlantean battleships fired broadsides of 12" shells at the approaching "One", with little effect on her 12" armour. Failing to ram, she passed between the "Lasso Atlaniphon" and the "Ruthoyon II". The leading three Atlantean ships, under Giben's orders, now swung round to the SW and later west, firing now at "Three", which was also virtually unscathed. "Five", a weaker broadside ship, was approached head on by "Ruthoyon II". Giben had always ordered his ships not to try to ram the enemy, but the captain of the "Ruthoyon II" could not restrain himself from trying. Further exchanges of fire swept the "Five", and as "Ruthoyon II" backed away, about 3pm, the "Five" suddenly sank, with the loss of 500 men.

Meanwhile "Iustos Atlaniphon", "Iustos Ruthopheax" and "Lasso Atlaniphon" moved east parallel with the Skallands, both sides exchanging fire fairly ineffectively. "Iustos Atlaniphon" then led her ships into the Skalland line roughly where the "Two" group was moving. To the north, on the initiative of the second-in-command, following "Ruthoyon II's" ramming, the remaining ships, led by "Louron Ruthopheax", moved east up the southern flank of the Skallands, with the idea of meeting Giben's group further west and cutting off a portion of the Skalland line. Thus after 3pm (see diagram 2), his ships closed in on the "Eight", cutting in front of the "Two". The two Atlantean battleships, "Louron Ruthopheax" and "Meison Brancerix", poured shells on to the little "Eight", really only a second-class ship with 4.5" armour and mostly 7" guns, and by 3.15pm she was a blazing wreck. The Atlantean ships eventually left her, unable to sink her, though she did in fact sink soon after. "Ruthoyon II", having dealt with the "Five", joined in the closing stages of this battle. Then "Seven", trying to help "Eight", began firing on "Ruthoyon II" and her 12" guns succeeded in holing the latter beneath a turret, incapacitating her two rear guns. The two ships drew apart a little later.

The naval battle of Sulosos, 2.30pm - 3.00pm

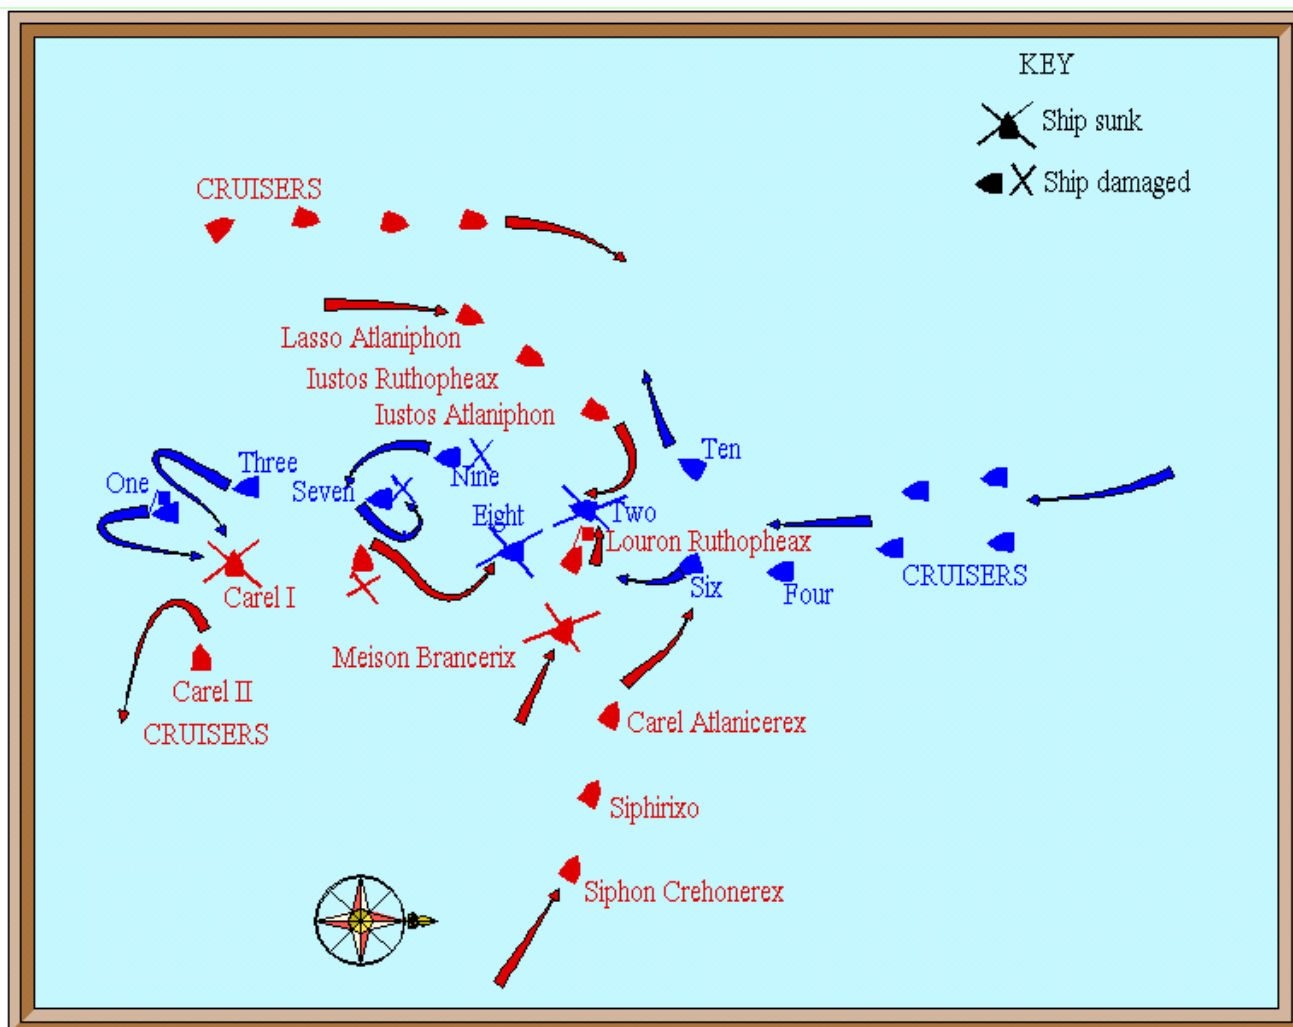

The originally leading Skalland group, "One" and "Three", but now minus "Five", having passed through the Atlantean line, turned to return to the fray. Just after 3pm, under Opazin's direction, they crashed into the "Carel I", the first of the two armoured wooden ships in the Atlantean second line. The outcome of this battle could be in little doubt, and the second armoured ship, "Carel II", hastily reversed back northwards. She escaped, but "Carel II" sank after 20 minutes, virtually unnoticed by the participants in the main battle to the west.

THE MAIN PART OF THE BATTLE, 3PM - 3.30PM

The Skalland line of battle was now cut in two, completely disordered, and the central part of it lay at the mercy of the two lines of Atlantean ships - to north and south. Giben led his three ships back east, aiming at the "Two" and the remains of the front portion of the Skalland battle-line, while the rear five ships, led by "Louron Ruthopheax", having finished off the "Eight", signalled to the Admiral that they would carry on moving SW against the "Two", as well, and then the rear of the Skalland line. It has since been argued that one of these groups should have continued west against the rear Skalland ships. But Giben said later that he thought his three ships were too few to fight against 7 Skalland ships.

About 3.15pm Giben led his three leading battleships, still all in reasonably good condition, towards the starboard of "Two". To the north, "Ten", of the same Skalland group, sheered off to the west, exchanging fire briefly with "Iustos Atlaniphon", though this resulted in little damage to either ship. "Iustos Atlaniphon" then engaged "Two" from the starboard. The "Two" had already been firing fruitlessly on "Louron Ruthopheax" for about 20 minutes, and once "Eight" had been finished off, "Meison Brancerix" joined the fight against her from her port side. "Two" could not stand such pounding, and by 3.30pm she was listing heavily, finally foundering some 10 minutes later, with the loss of many men. But before she sank, "Two" took "Meison Brancerix" with her. Two 9" shots passed through the Atlantean ship's 10" armour and reached the shells in the armoury. Fires began and then at 3.35pm, the "Meison Brancerix" blew up in a huge explosion and sank with the loss of nearly all her crew. The explosion also caused some damage to "Louron Ruthopheax", which was nearby.

The naval battle of Sulosos, 3.00pm - 3.30pm

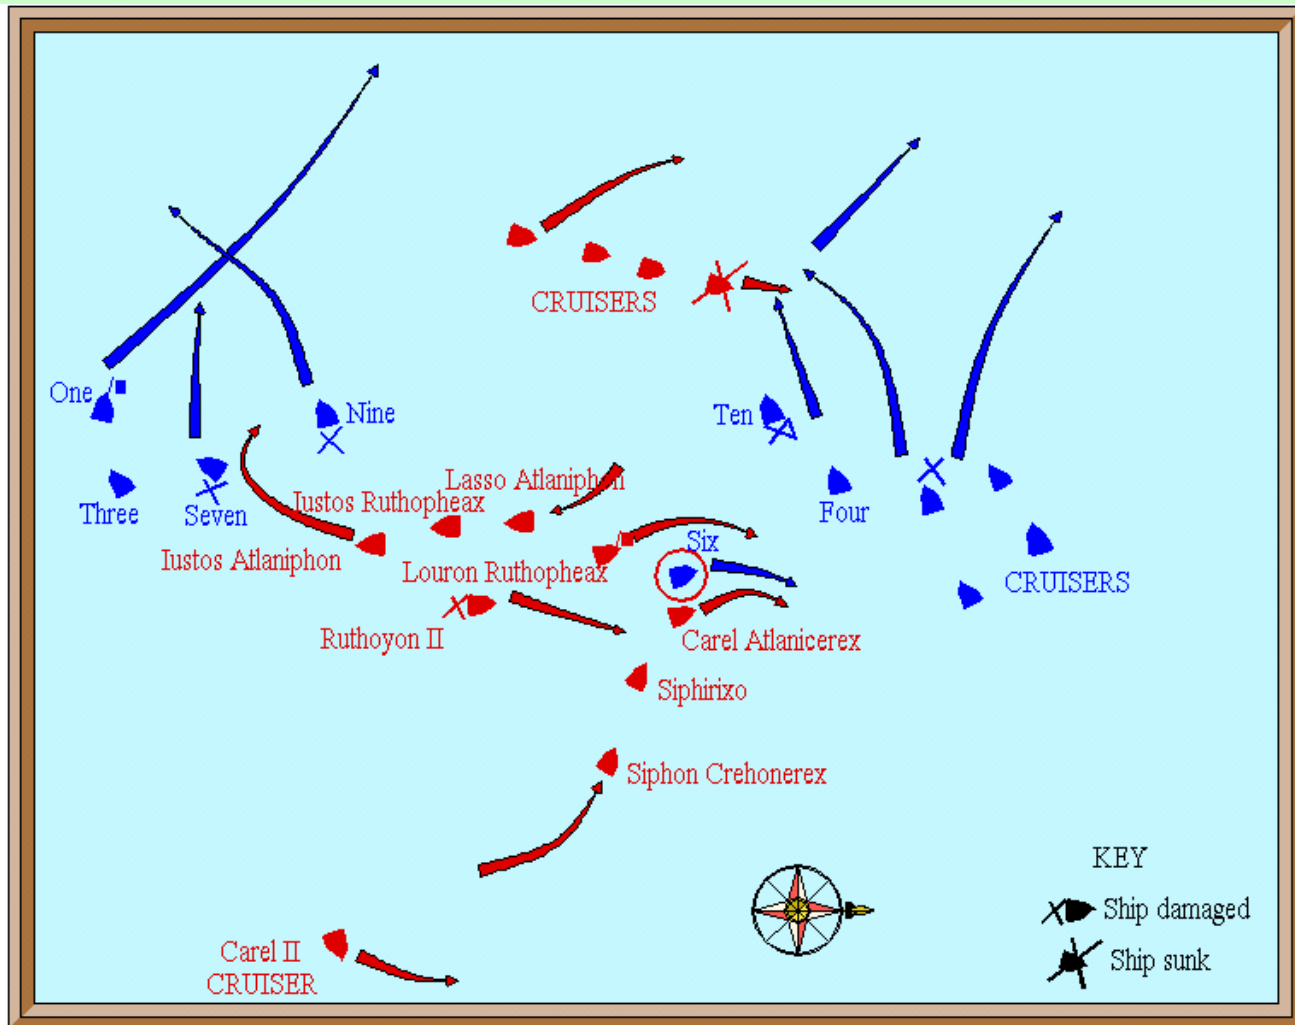

The port ship of this Skalland group, "Six", briefly engaged "Meison Brancerix" but thereafter found herself approached by the northwards moving rear ships of the Atlantean line - "Carel Atlanicerex", "Siphirizo" and "Siphon Crehonerex". She tried to escape northwards, but her rudder was seriously damaged and she was virtually immobilised by 3.50pm. Remarkably this weak ship survived, because "Carel Atlanicerex" drew alongside, and calling on her to surrender, she did so. She was then captured, having lost 120 men.

THE ATLANTEAN VICTORY, 3.30pm - 4.15pm

This was virtually the end of the real battle, as the Skalland ships began fleeing in all directions. Opazin, leading the "One" and "Three" after his battle with the Atlantean wooden ships in the far east, was at first undecided what to do next. Soon after 3.30pm the damaged "Seven" lumbered up to join them, but its speed was dropping all the time. Opazin, from what he could see and learn from the "Seven", decided that his fleet was shattered beyond redemption. He decided that "One" and "Three" would move off southwards to try to get round the Atlanteans and end up to the north of them, from where they could try to regain their home base. This he did, eventually joining the rear Skalland cruisers and armoured ships which survived the fight in the west. "Seven" was left to follow as best she could, and she did indeed escape, as there were no Atlantean ships chasing her. The damaged "Nine" also joined this group and got away successfully.

In the west, the rear Skalland armoured ships and cruisers had been ordered at the start to keep clear of the action, unless they were signalled specifically to join in. As a result, for the best part of an hour, they hovered around west of the battle, accompanied by the "Four", which was supposed to protect them, and hence did not engage in the action at all. After 3.30pm, as "Louron Ruthopheax" was seen moving towards them from the NE, and the four Atlantean cruisers which had remained south of the action, approached from the SE, all the Skalland ships veered off to the south, joining "Ten". There followed a clash between the leading Atlantean cruiser and "Ten" and "Four". The weak Skalland ships, with their 7" or 8" guns and 4.5-5.5" armour, were joined by the armoured cruiser "Twelve" with 8" guns. The Atlantean cruisers had mostly 8" guns, though they could move at a greater speed than the Skalland ships. The battle raged for half an hour, from 3.30pm till 4pm, and the Atlantean cruiser and the "Twelve" suffered moderate damage. Two shells then hit the Atlantean cruiser below the water line and by 4pm she was sinking. "Twelve" then drew off. "Ten" had also been engaged by two other Atlantean cruisers which between them damaged her superstructure and some guns. Finally the two sides parted, and the Skallands made for the north, while the Atlanteans moved back towards Atlantis.

The naval battle of Sulosos, 3.30pm - 4.15pm

The battle was over by 4.15pm, and showed an overwhelming Atlantean victory:

The Skallands had the following casualties:

Battleships:

"Eight", "Two" and "Five" sunk.

"Ten" and "Nine" damaged.

"Six" damaged and captured.

Cruisers:

"Twelve" damaged.

The remaining ships escaped. At least 1900 men were killed and many hundreds wounded and captured.

By contrast, the Atlanteans lost:

Battleships:

"Meison Brancerix" sunk.

"Ruthoyon II" damaged.

Cruisers:

One cruiser plus one armoured ship ("Carel I") sunk.

About 900 men died and another 350 were injured.

Why were the Atlanteans so successful? Firstly they managed to amalgamate two separate fleets, giving nine battleships in all, which they concentrated against parts of the slightly stronger Skalland fleet (ten battleships). The Atlantean ships were overall much more powerful than the Skallands. Their 9" - 12" guns massively outnumbered the Skallands, who had mostly 7", 8" and 9". Also their armour was usually 10" or 11", whereas the Skalland had 7"-9" or even 4.5" and 5.5". Furthermore Atlantean tactical doctrine and training now meant that their ships moved about methodically, overwhelming individual Skalland ships, whereas the Skallands just milled about in a disorganised way, once their initial plan had failed and the admiral was out of sight and hearing, in the far east, where he was unable to influence events. Finally the Atlanteans barbetted and turreted guns could be worked more quickly and accurately than the Skallands, who had mixed turrets and broadsides.

THE IRONCLAD ERA, 750 - 828

Most navies had adopted rifled breech-loading guns on the vast majority of their ships by the end of the Continental War. Steam-power had also been adopted on all the larger ships and over the following decade became universal. Armour was also used on all ships over the following 15 years. Sail, which was used along with steam throughout the 740s and 750s was thereafter gradually dropped and ships relied on steam only by the 770s and 780s. Atlantis' navies were still based on the traditional ports of Sulosos, Achosil and Siphya with the smaller bases in between. Although there was a little fighting during the period of the Basquec Civil War in the 770s, the next main period of conflict for Atlantis was against Rabarrieh in the late 780s and early 790s, and more in the 800s. After this the Southern Colonies were lost and Atlantis had to give up her base at Siphya. It was moved to Numedeas, but this area too fell to the Rabarrans soon after, and from 805 Meisting was reactivated as the southernmost naval base. As even this area was too close to the Rabarrans after the 810s, the Atlanteans, under the Tyrants, shifted the base out to sea, to the Zuelix Mandengix. When the Tyrants were overthrown, in 827-828, there were further naval clashes within the Atlantean navy between fleets supporting the Tyrants and those supporting the rebels.

The naval battles of this period can be roughly compared with those of comparable epochs in our modern era. While the Continental War period somewhat resembles the early 1860s, with the partially ironclad and steam-powered naval clashes of the American Civil War and the Battle of Lissa, the fighting in the 770s is closer to our 1870s and the 790s to our 1880s. The fighting in the 800s and 820s brings us up to our 1890s (the Battle of the Yalu). Later we can compare the battles of the Great Northern War in the 840s to the early 1900s (Spanish-American War and Tsushima) and the Final Wars (after the 870s) to the later 1900s - but without the

THE FIFTH EMPIRE

The first major war involving sea-power in this period was the Great Northern War against the Skallands in 844-847. Thereafter Atlantis handed over the protection of Phonaria, Yciel Atlantis and the Eliossia and Marossa Lirancix to Quendelieh. She kept her ships in the base at Achosil and throughout this period virtually shared control of the Helvengio with the Rabarrans, from her base at Giezuat. In the Final Wars, control of the Helvengio was wrested from Atlantis by the Rabarrans in the 870s. She was however supported by the Quendelien navy against the Skallands throughout most of the 870s, until the withdrawal of Skallandieh from the war. She nevertheless managed to retain control of the seas around Atlantis city, as far south as the Zuelix Mandengix and as far north as the Marossa Liranca, despite the encroachments of the Rabarrans in the south and the Skallands in the north, until her final defeat in 888. Thereafter the navy protected the flight of the last Atlanteans after the fall of the City, and their epic journey to Yciel Atlantis. After the refugees had been safely landed there, the remains of this Atlantean navy was sunk in a final battle off Phonero. Following their later Odyssey, most of any remaining ships were also defeated near Atlantis itself.

"Tontousuyu Thehotte": "The Creation of the Universe".

Below is the first part of the great work by the religious thinker and writer, Ramillenele, called "Tontousuyu Thehotte" or "The Creation of the Universe". This represents the first written account of the standard beliefs of the Official Religion, and was the basic text used for centuries afterwards by its priests and believers. It is given in the original Atlantean, and then in an English translation. The same text, in Chalcran, was used in the Chalcran Empire, and the first line of it is also given in Chalcran, for comparison. The equivalent of the Official Religion in the Helvran Empire, and in Yalland areas, was somewhat different to the Atlantean version, but after these areas became part of the Atlantean Empire, Ramillenele's writings were translated into Helvran and Yalland, and parts were also adapted to local use. Again the first sentence is given in Helvran and Yalland. Following that is a closer linguistic commentary.

THE CREATION OF THE UNIVERSE

(Translation into English)

In the beginning there was the Great Creator of All, who was Himself uncreated, Original God.

He was filled with light and air, and out of Himself, He created everything.

He sent a wind to the south and the west, and to the north and east, and gave them awareness and great power, and all became gods.

The first two winds were male, but the second two were female, and the married in pairs, south and west, north and east.

God now told the South Wind to take some of his light and heat to the south, and there create a great fiery being, the Sun.

And the Sun became the fifth god.

Similarly He told the West Wind to take light to the west, but no heat. And the Moon was created there, the sixth god.

And the Sun and the Moon were married. The North and the East Winds were then sent north and east to create many small sparkles of light, the stars. But only one of these became a god, the Evening Star.

This was formerly the seventh god, though man has wrongly called it the eighth.

And God Himself now created water and earth, and made the World. The sea and the earth became gods, but the World itself was not a god.

He then created all the life on earth, plants, animals, and lastly, mankind.

In order that men and women, who were conscious and greater than the animals, though lower than the gods, should understand how the world was created, God brought Thunder into being, and made it divine. And its noise always reminded men of their origin.

And when men fought wars with each other, they remembered the thunder and the might of the gods.

Indeed they soon forgot Great God, and only thought of the created gods.

And God continued to create more gods – volcanoes, ice and earthquakes, and then he rested.

But the gods themselves, who were afterwards called the Old Gods, produced many smaller gods as their offspring, and these were called the New Gods.

English translation:

Code of Law of 1816

1. The Law exists to implement the demands of the State. The State, now and in the future, is government by the Brothers, who follow the Brotherhood Faith of the great Yrutiens.
2. Therefore the State elucidates the basis of the Law and Morality.
3. It is the belief of the Brotherhood Faith, as also of some philosophers during the Fourth Empire, that there is no god or gods, and hence no absolute morality.
4. Therefore humans should be free to lead their own lives and create their own destiny.
5. However, because of the educational and moral limitations of many lower-class (literally "graded") people, as well as all non-Juralics, complete freedom is only granted to Brothers, and particularly those Brothers who govern the State.

6. Therefore, under our new law, everyone may do as he wishes and believe what he wants, as long as this agrees with and is not prohibited by the Brotherhood.
7. This entails a few changes to the traditional morality and law of earlier centuries.
8. The basis of the Law is that any action is permitted, unless forbidden by the Brotherhood Faith.
9. Brothers are not therefore bound by any law of traditional morality. If they serve the good and the needs of the State, torture, murder and robbery of non-Brothers may be committed. Similarly no Brother should be restricted by traditional sexual codes of marriage to one person for life.
10. Those Atlanteans who are not Brothers may also follow these new rules, but only with the agreement of the Brothers and the State.
11. Non-Atlanteans and especially non-Juralics, as befits their status of ignorance, must abide by traditional law and morality, and moreover are at all times at the disposal of Atlanteans.
12. No Brother may inflict injury on another Brother, unless ordered to do so by the Leaders of the State.

The most important part of this decree was thought to be paragraph 8. This was often written succinctly, and as a summary of the rest of the law:

Tontettu thanepheth percies dithanepheth Thaothettabbeyu.

(Everything may be committed unless forbidden by the Brotherhood.)

Despite the prohibition on publishing in the modernised language, this sentence was often written in the Fourth Empire language, for the benefit of the general population, thus:

Tontettu aithe thanaxa percies dithanaxa bei til Thaothettabban.

Sources of Atlantean history

1. General histories of Atlantis.

- a. Atlantieh zuei sayatal ergain ysaitix. (A). "The story of the Atlantean Empire for schools". A school history of Atlantis, c. 860, only complete after about 600. Written, of course, in the post-760 reformed spelling of the language and with the grammar of Late Atlantean.
- b. Sayatal atlantiehayu. (M). "The history of the Atlantean Empire". A general history from 710, biased in favour of the Squirearchy. It concentrates on religious and political history.
- c. Furthesix ergain til cerexix. (A). Literally "Revelations about the Emperors". This is a scandal-mongering, semi-republican collection of Imperial biographies from about 780, but incomplete.
- d. Tontix cerexix zuei iaisai. (A). "Complete lives of the Emperors". A conservatively biased collection of Imperial lives, written in 844, and complete.
- e. Sayatal til thehotteyu ceriehayu. (GL). "The history of the creation of the Empire". An early (c. 475) account of the formation of Atlantis' Empire, up to about 460.
- f. Neih tehesix. (TT). "My achievements" (literally "deeds"). Supposedly the autobiography of Ruthopheax I. In fact an annotated and probably edited version, which celebrates his achievements and gives a history of the Imperialists and Republicans from about 580. Published in 684, hence after Ruthopheax's death.

2. Specialised monographs.

- a. Sayatal helvriehayu. (M). "The history of the Helvran Empire". A history of the Helvran Empire (mostly lost) and the war with Atlantis (complete) from about 390. A very early work in (block) printing.
- b. Atlanix daimuyix. (A). "Tyrants of Atlantis". A study of the "bad" Emperors of Atlantis, the Tyrants and the Republican leaders, 855.

3. Military works.

- a. Bour mandagge zuei pueggisix. (A). "Armies of the Great Continent". A comparative study of Atlantean, Helvran, Ughan and Basquec fighting forces. It covers 200-280, 400-580 and 640-670 (incomplete). Written in 783.
- b. Saicrehix atlantisayu. (M). "The civil wars of Atlantis". This was written about 700 and covers the Family Wars, the Imperial Wars, the Great Civil War, and the wars between Republicans and Imperialists till 600: it is incomplete hereafter.
- c. Bourbix cencsax atlanan pueggisayu. (A). "Great battles of the Atlantean Army". A jingoistic account of Atlantean battles, mostly the victories, from the Helvran Wars onwards and aimed at the popular market. It covers the Helvran Wars, the battles against the Chalcrans, the Ughan Wars, the wars against Razira, the successes of Ruthopheax I and many battles from the Great Continental War. It is shown as the fourth edition. 796.
- d. A very detailed account of the Final Wars, published in 884, with a supplement till 886. (A).
- e. An account in Rabarran, only partially translated, of the Final Wars till about 882. (TT).
- f. An officer's guide to strategy, with examples from Atlantis' wars. Several editions were published over the years, as it was constantly updated. We have:
  - i. Part of the 568 edition. (GL and A).
  - ii. The edition of 640. (GL).
  - iii. Parts of the 770 edition, which also summarises sections of the contents of earlier editions, now omitted. (A).

4. Literature.

- a. Parts of the works of the great classical dramatists between about 360 and 460. Mostly from much later editions. (GL)
- b. A critical history of Atlantean literature, c. 810. (A).

- c. Extracts from great works of Atlantean literature, 849. (A).

5. Language.

- a. An incomplete comparative historical dictionary of the Juralic languages up to about 500. This does include pronunciations of all these languages. Written in 730. (M).
- b. A grammar of "modern" Atlantean, 566. (As reprinted in 675) (A).
- c. A collection of early texts on language, which is incomplete. It includes early (ie: 300-400) lists of words in Chalcran, North Atlantean, Numedean and Dravedean with their Atlantean meanings, some attempt at their alphabets and sounds, as well as early (mostly false) historical linguistic studies of Juralic etymology and grammar. Published in 505. (A).
- d. An incomplete study of all the languages of the Great Continent, c. 850. (A)
- e. The official dictionary of the Atlantean language. This included the sounds of the letters of Atlantean words but has little etymological information. This dictionary was updated repeatedly, and we possess some or all of several editions:
  - i. Parts of the 680 edition (the earliest). (A).
  - ii. Almost all of the 760 edition. (A)
  - iii. arts of the edition of 823 (the "Tyrants' dictionary", as it was called). (A)

(It can be seen how partial is our knowledge of every language spoken on the Great Continent, except for Atlantean (and that is by no means complete). For example, although we have a fairly good understanding of the grammars of the other Juralic languages, we only know some of their vocabulary. In the vocabulary lists I have given, I have always included Juralic forms, but these are of course conjectural, and even then, only partly based on Atlantean reconstructions. The rest I have worked out myself. We know even less of the non-Juralic languages, of course. So far as the sounds and pronunciation of these tongues are concerned, we are fortunate that two of the works above cover this in some detail, in particular allowing us to transliterate the vocabulary into our roman alphabet.)

6. Philosophy and religion.

- a. Partially complete works by several philosophers, mostly written post 760. (TT and A).
- b. "The Atlantean religion". Incomplete and originally dating from about 310, reprinted about 510. (GL).
- c. A general history of Atlantean religion and philosophy from 872. (A).

7. Other works.

- a. Writings on travel by various authors from various periods. (TT and A).
- b. Illustrations of Atlantean costume throughout the ages, c. 720. (A).
- c. "Great buildings of Atlantis" (incomplete): palaces, forts, churches from about 50-400 and 520-590. From 694. (M).
- d. A history of Atlantean inventions. A very sketchy account aimed at children. 837. (A).

(There are also a number of original documents, which I have reproduced in my history, (in "Original documents") not included in the above list, eg: "the execution of Crehonorex", "the description of the Atlantean Empire", "the creation of the universe", etc. Some of these are separate documents, but most are extracts from the sources mentioned above, eg: "the creation of the universe" from the early "Atlantean religion" of around 310, in section 6 above. I have also taken the liberty of including a number of pictures of Atlantean events and landscape, which, though all based on sometimes fragmentary originals, have been reconstructed and reproduced in modern times).

The Geography and Races of the Great Continent

Geographical features of the Great Continent

The land called "The Great Continent" (Bore Mandagge) by the Atlanteans was in fact only the western extension of a far greater continent which stretched halfway round the world. The Atlanteans realised this themselves in their later years, but in any case as far as the history of their empire is concerned, we need only concern ourselves, as they did, with the western part. The western edge of the Continent stretched for nearly 1200 miles from the northern-most area beyond Eliossie, which was on a latitude similar to Scotland, south to the Mediterranean-like parts around Siphya and the seas between the south of the Great Continent and the north of the Far Southern Continent (Yciel Tuaince Mandagge). There was a similar distance for a traveller who wanted to move from west to east, from the capital of Atlantis, in a temperate moist coastal zone, to the far eastern parts of the Ughan empire beyond the river Voltjeg, a dry and very extreme climatic region. To study this area, we shall take as our guide the inveterate travel-writer Carel Zuaippo, who lived between 295 and 359, travelled extensively between 320 and 340, and wrote his great Guide between 342 and 349. We will add additional comments to correct or augment Zuaippo's own comments. The comments come from his initial summary of his book - later he goes into much greater detail.

Atlantis and the Marossan countries

"The northern part of the western coast of our Great Continent is a series of islands and peninsulas. I know that there is a large island [later called "Phonaria" - 350 miles east to west and over 200 north to south], lying to the west of Eliossie, and separated from it by the Eliossien Straits. It is inhabited by a mixture of peoples and there are many Phonerians and Lio-Marossans there now, who have settled there over the last years, and survive by trading. Eliossie itself lies in an area to the east, and is a cold and misty place in the winter, and cool and breezy in the summer. It is graced by philosophical and educated inhabitants, who, as indeed I have seen with my own eyes, have scaled extraordinary artistic and civilised heights, and yet have no religion at all. . I have read that there is a remarkable volcano in the north of this country. It has not been active for many years, I think. In the Atlantean tongue it is called "ahnughol" [which simply means "volcano", although there are of course other volcanoes as well elsewhere on the Continent].

A modern painting of "Ahnughol", based on drawings and sketches from the period.

"Further west along the coast from Eliossie are other towns and little states, but in truth I know little of them save what the Eliossiens have told me, and they think little good of them. Certainly the land they inhabit is hilly and mountainous terrain and bleak in the extreme. East of Eliossie proper are the Great Plains, over which there roam nomadic horsemen and tribes from time immemorial. The Eliossiens, true to their civilising nature, have placed a sort of protectorate over this area, partly to protect the borders of their own land, and partly for the benefit of the tribes therein.

"South of Eliossie and the river Ereipha are the open plains of Marossan, which give on to the sandy shore of the Bay of Marossan to the west and the Netaka and Cresskor ("Blue") Mountains inland. The Bay of Marossan is full of islands and mostly settled by Phonerians, a people which has indeed settled all around this area, and with which we Atlanteans have recently fought hard to restrain. But the main homeland of the Phonerians is the Phonerian peninsula, now known as Yciel Atlantis, since our Army's great victories over these Phonerians. The neck of the peninsula is connected with Marossan via a high range of mountains- the Upheril Mts.-, which effectively protect the peninsula from land invasion. The other end of the land projects into the Bay of Marossan, and is hilly and watery, and full of the trading settlements of the Phonerians.

"The east of Marossan consists of a curving range of mountains - the Netaka and Runix- , beyond which lies a flatter plain before the great barrier of the Cresskor Mountains tower up, along the western foot of which runs the upper part of the River Ruphaio. The southern part of this Marossan has become a Province in our Empire. The whole region is full of ancient remains of great structures and stone monuments, which the Marossans believe were built aeons ago by their own distant ancestors.

The mountainous area to the east is the abode of the West Kelts, and the rugged terrain is intersected by very few easily crossed passes. The whole area south of these ranges of mountains is thickly afforested [though by Atlantean Imperial times the forest had become a number of separate woods, which in later years were still further reduced in size. The main ones were the Taigeheill south of the Cresskor and the Gaffeal south of the Decanda hills.]

"The area of land bounded on the east by the River Rollepp (R.Noilafa is the name the (Lio-) Marossans give it) is the birthplace of our own Atlantean Empire, and is the Province of that name. The climate here is equable and mild, and the whole landscape is admirably suited to mankind, being neither too mountainous nor too marshy nor too cold nor too hot and sandy. Thus it served as a cradle and later as a kindly mother to our great race. The coast whereon Atlantis city is placed is remarkable for its long curving bay, and the large island west of Atlantis city, separated from it by only 10 or so miles, protects our capital city from all seaborne assault. The centre of Atlantis is gently undulating, with a considerable number of woods away from the coast. Two rivers also form an inner perimeter to our nation, protecting us from land attack. These are the Fellepp to the south, which runs west from the Lillerunix [a high but isolated range of hills], and the River Bore, which flows north-west out of the same hill-range.

"To the south of Atlantis province, and stretching all the way from the sea in the west to the central lake region are the Meilox Mountains, a great mountain range which cuts Helvris and the warmer area to the south off from our cooler northwestern areas, and serve as another barrier between our nation and the fierce and warlike Helvrans themselves, who we have now, the gods be thanked, utterly subjugated within our great Empire."

The physical geography of the Great Continent

The lands around the Helvengio

"The Helvengio is in truth an enormous lake with just one narrow entrance at the western end, only about 8 miles wide. The whole region is much warmer and dryer than the countries further north, both in summer and in winter. All the land around this sea was formerly ruled by the mighty Helvran Empire, but since the great war between the Atlanteans and the Helvrans after 250, most of it has become tributary to our Empire. Helvrïeh itself, one of our Provinces, occupies the northern coast of the Helvengio, and consists of a heavily populated coastal fringe, backed by the high peaks of the Meilox mountains. Opposite the mouth of the River Numeras is a large island, called "Helvremon", in the middle of the Helvengio, whose main city is Giezuat.

"At the eastern end of the sea is a mountainous peninsula inhabited by an ancient tribe of people called the Jutes. They speak a language completely different to Atlantean or Helvran, which some say is the same as was spoken by the ancient inhabitants of the lands now occupied by the Atlanteans and Helvrans. On the south of the Helvengio is the country called Manralia, now a Province of the Atlanteans, and formerly of the Helvrans, but in fact of great antiquity, and earlier wholly independent. It has a strange and hermetic culture and religion, and the language spoken by its High Priests (known in their tongue as the "Meftemos") is incomprehensible to all outsiders. Some say it is related to the tongue of the Jutes.

"The south-western coastal part of the southern Helvengio is generally known as the Thainen Thissaindix [or "Thoinen Thissaindix", to use the more correct, Yalland spelling, which was adopted in Atlantis after 500] - the Coastal City States. This consists of a very long and indented coastline, partly wooded and quite rugged, leading up to two ranges of mountains some miles inland - the Aulopsonal in the north, and the Runix Huainel in the south. Both the hills and the plains are dotted with towns and city-states, as they style themselves, which are constantly either trading or warring with each other. Many of the cities are settlements of the Yallands, who speak a language related to Helvran [and Atlantean], and who are to be found in Manralia and further east. Other cities are of a different age and people who call themselves Numedean and speak a strange tongue, though many now speak Yalland too."

The Keltish and Chalcran areas

"East of Atlantis, between the Rivers Rollepp and the Chalcran lakes lie more Atlanteans, now all part of our Empire, but formerly independent city-states, called the Atlantid City-states. The area is pastoral and full of crops, with few woods and low hills.

"The Chalcran states are separated from their Atlantean cousins by two long lakes, which extend north to south for over 200 miles, with just a small area of dry land between. These lakes are called Lake Chalcris and Lake Oncia, and Lake Oncia is joined via the River Dodolla to a third Lake, Trannolla, which stretches north-eastwards. The Chalcrans were formerly divided into a number of warring states, but in my own lifetime the great Emperor Ruthoyon II has conquered these territories and forced the warlike Chalcrans to make peace with each other and with us. Their country is wooded and hilly to the north, but more open to the south, though still with low ranges of hills. To the east lie the massive but compact Croiden Hills, which act as a barrier to invaders from the east, rare though these are [in this era].

"To the south of the Chalcrans is an area of grassland and marshes occupied by the Pastoral Folk, about whom I know little, but there is little that is worth knowing, as they have little civilisation, and no army, and are therefore of no interest to us. To the east of the Croiden Hills, and to the north-east of it, is an open area, though in the northern part it is hilly and afforested. Its limit is the great Gestes River which begins in a range of mountains somewhere in the lands of the Ughans, many miles east [actually the Gargros Mountains], and flows south for hundreds of miles till it eventually reaches the Helvengio. It is occupied by agricultural people who call themselves Dravedean, and who speak an unknown language. I know little of this language but believe fewer people speak it now than formerly, as much of the land of this people is under the control either of Chalcrans, or Ughans from the east. These speak their own tongues and have little interest in the barbarous language of the natives, and these natives also begin to give up their own tongue. I have been told by those who know, that the land is dotted with prehistoric ruins and some inscriptions, and the language of the present-day Dravedeans is descended from this older race. When I have completed this book, I truly intend to study and write about the language of this people, and other peoples who speak strange and unknown tongues, for the edification of my Atlantean friends. [Unfortunately this project was never carried out].

"The Kelts have occupied their mountainous lands since time immemorial, and are a fierce people, who are perpetually at war both with their neighbours and each other. The more civilised tribes of these people are called the West Kelts and live north of the Decanda Runix, in and to the west of the Cresskor Mountains. Our Empire and the Marossans have been at war with these tribes now for many years, and it seems certain that only by incorporating them within our Empire will we be able to keep them under proper control. [As happened in 352, when the Province of Naokeltaniëh was created.] The North Kelts live in the high mountainous area of the Nundor Mountains, and to the south in the region north of the Chalcran Forests. Here they are said to suffer extreme privations in the cold and icy winters, and even in the summers, which are cool by our more southern standards, they remain heavily shrouded in furs and cloths. Although they all seem so warlike to the stranger, in fact all the Kelts include a small group of seers and hermits, who dwell in isolated towers, and ponder the meaning of life. I understand that they consider that this whole world is but a dream, and try to reach the real world by meditation and self-privation. Travellers report that north of the Nundor Mountains the land becomes flatter again, though just as cold, and here live other tribes, often migrating from east to west, and sometimes trading with the Kelts and the Eliossiëns.

The far eastern and southern regions

"Nearly all the lands and peoples I have so far described I have personally visited and seen with my own eyes. I have now to describe peoples and places where I have never been, and am forced therefore to rely on the stories and accounts of travellers and merchants who have visited these places. Some most incredible tales have been told about such far-away places, which can not easily be verified or denied, but I have tried hereafter to ignore all fanciful and ridiculous stories and keep to what seem to be sober facts, especially when they are vouched for by more than two witnesses.

"The great River Gestes or East River cuts off all realms east of the Dravedeans, and these places are further sheltered by the massive Gestix Mountains, which rise to great heights just to the east of the river, and are said to completely encircle the land occupied by the Ughans. These people are grouped in loose kingdoms and confederations, and are perpetually at war with nomads and barbarians who surround their lands. Some of these Ughans have crossed the Gestes and settled in the lands of the Dravedeans. This land to the east of the mountains is said to be hilly and wooded, very cold in winter and very hot in summer. According to some, long aeons ago the Atlanteans, Helvrans and Chalcrans themselves lived in this area, before they moved out and conquered the empires in which they are now resident.

"South of the Ughans, in the open country, well watered by rivers, is a nation called the Vulcans. This people is related to the Ughans, and also to the Razirans further south, as is evidenced by their languages, in which many words of the same meaning sound and are written similarly in the three languages. The Vulcans are great traders and pass on many items from the people further east to the western nations.

"South of here, and centred on the great city of Razira is the Raziran nation, a strong and warlike people who are often at war with the Vulcans. They are remarkable in that they are always ruled by a Queen, known as the "Licho" in their tongue, and their religion is conducted by Priestesses, of whom the greatest is the Queen. Some also say that even among ordinary people the women are all important and rule the houses and conduct all the business, while the men are subservient and wait on them. But I believe this is exaggerated and cannot be wholly true, as certainly all traders with whom my informants say they have had dealings are men, and men who have been independent and free. [In reality the sexes were somewhat more equal than elsewhere in ordinary life, but men were superior to women in most areas of life].

"To the north-west of the Raziran Mountains, as far as the mouth of the River Gairase and the land of the Jutes lie the independent towns and cities of the Yallands and Atlantean settlers. These cities have of late been seriously threatened by the over-mighty Raziran Empire, but they are well able to defend themselves, and act as an important trading centre for goods coming from the far east and south.

"South of Manralia, down to the distant seas, are mostly arid lands, interspersed by rivers and oases, and occupied by nomadic tribes and some larger settlements of southern peoples. The countryside is hot and rainless in summer, and warm and dry in winter. It is covered with low scrubby bushes and rocks, and in the south-east is reputed to be a veritable desert. In the south by the sea, the country again becomes more welcoming, with cooler breezes and more vegetation. Yalland settlers have founded cities here alongside the natives. Further to the east is a more mountainous and, I believe, more heavily populated area, and the name of the inhabitants here is said to be the Basquecs. I cannot imagine this matters much, as how could they ever be of interest to us Atlanteans, so many miles further north? I have also heard that still further east is an area of marshes and bogs, which is occupied by the Polder Folk, named after the polders they have created in this watery land. The seas here are also haunted by pirates, who must have their lairs in this region.

"Of lands beyond these, I know little for sure, as many tales are told, and these often contradict each other. It is known that the sea at the south of our Great Continent separates us from other lands in the Far South. Here there live people similar to those on the Great Continent itself. Some say it is possible to sail right round this continent and end up at the other end of the southern sea. It is also certain that men and probably great civilisations are to be found east of the Ughans, for our continent certainly extends far in that direction. Traders exchange goods with people from hundreds of miles to the east, but always via middlemen, so nobody knows what these people look like. Again I have been told that across the western ocean there lies another great continent much like ours, from which traders come by sea to meet with the Phonerians in particular. Several Phonerian traders have assured me this is true, though I have never witnessed it with my own eyes.

"This must now be an end to my summary of the people and the geography of our continent and its neighbours."

The Great War with the Helvrans (detailed account), 250 - 267

Crehei Ante Helvranix (Helvran War) [Atlantean].

Vulgenel Greux (War of the heroes) [Helvran]

THE ORIGINS OF THE WAR

A war between Atlantis and Helvris was almost inevitable at some stage, owing to the expansion of the Atlantean State and the gradual conflict of interests - economic, political and military - with the mature Helvran Empire. (I usually use the word "Helvris" when referring to the Helvran Empire in this account. Strictly this meant just the city of Helvris in the Atlantean and Helvran languages. Helvrieh was later used by Atlantis to be the name of the Province she created out of the former Helvran Empire, and it covered almost the same area. However I do not use the word, as it did not come into use until the Helvran Wars were finished. The Helvran words for their empire were "helvron giertizek". Similarly I use Atlantis rather than Atlantieh, although the latter was often used in later times both to refer to the province of Atlantis and to the Atlantean empire as a whole. But again this was not the case at the time of the Helvran Wars, when the only way of talking about the Atlantean Empire, such as it then was, was "atlan cerieh".)

In the 230s and 240s, the Atlantid City States fell increasingly under Atlantean control, a province being set up in 244. Now a number of the southern City States (south of Gentis) were part of the Helvran Empire and these were also claimed by Atlantis. Equally the Helvrans were unwilling to see the area around Rundes attach itself to the new Province, as this would encroach closer to the river Cresslepp, which led in turn to the great city and imperial capital of Helvris itself. There were also continuing quarrels over the Atlantis-Helvris border to the west, especially to the south of the river Fellepp, as Helvris tended to regard this river as the definitive border between the two Empires.

Economically there was growing rivalry over trade. The Atlantean merchants wanted to trade directly with the Southern Coastal City States and to enter the Helvengio freely. But Helvris had long declared the Helvengio (called in Helvran, "Helvingir") closed to all shipping except its own, and relations with the Coastal City States, like other parts of its Empire, were only permitted on Helvris' own strict and protective terms. Finally the growing size and strength of the Atlantean army and, more particularly, the navy, which had recently fought with the Phonerians with some success, alarmed the Helvran government.

THE RIVAL ARMIES AND NAVIES

Initially the size of the territory and population of the Helvran Empire was incomparably greater than Atlantis. There were some 10,000,000 people living in the Helvran Empire around 250, over 5,000,000 in the state of Helvris itself (helvresk in the Helvran language), which corresponded to the later Atlantean Province of Helvrieh, 2,000,000 in the Coastal City States (kodzairindaj), 2,000,000 in Manralia (manralsk) and under 1,000,000 Jutes (iutisk), who in any case contributed very little to the Empire. By contrast, the Province of Atlantis contained nearly 3,000,000 people and Atlantidieh about 1,500,000, thus 4,500,000 in all.

The Helvran Army, which was predominantly Helvran in composition, but also contained some Manralians and a few City State dwellers, numbered about 70000 in peacetime, but could be increased to 120,000 in wartime. In addition, there were Manralian and City State militias, of fairly modest value, and the Jutes were supposed to have up to 40,000 available for defence purposes only. This never materialised, as neither side carried out any operations on Jutish territory.

The Helvrans' main tactical unit was the phalanx, which consisted of heavy armoured infantry with pikes and swords. Their armies were composed very largely of this infantry, with only small accompanying cavalry forces, which were partially armoured and wielded swords. There were also small units of light infantry, which skirmished in front of the slower-moving phalanxes with bow and arrows. There was also a certain amount of artillery, which was used for sieges.

As the war progressed, more infantry were armed with swords alone, more cavalry was raised and more light infantry hired. But the Helvrans never succeeded in matching the growing use of missile arms by the Atlanteans, once these had realised that this was the best way of dealing with the heavy Helvran phalanxes which inflicted several defeats on them at the beginning of the wars.

The Atlanteans in peacetime had virtually no army, but in wartime, considerable numbers could be raised. Against the Phonerians, some 24,000 noble and 20,000 Imperial forces were mobilised, and these were never wholly disbanded thereafter. Similar sized forces were quickly raised again after 250, but then had to be increased vastly as the war progressed, to match the Helvrans and replace the Atlanteans' own losses in battle. More men were also raised from the Atlantid City States, and by 260 there were some 45,000 noble and 90,000 Imperial forces.

At the start of the Helvran Wars, the Atlanteans employed a number of large, rather unwieldy armies, often up to 20000 strong, each composed of many basic units of infantry (each about 1000 men), several ranks deep, of which about one-sixth were bowmen and the rest swordsmen. All these armies, whatever their exact sizes, were called "pueggisix" (armies). Later in the war these armies would be subdivided into "wings", about 5000 strong, which became largely independent themselves. They themselves adopted the name of "pueggisix" eventually. Cavalry were kept in separate units of about 500, roughly one per 5000 infantry. They used bows and later had some armour. As the 250s progressed, it became common for the average small unit to be about 800 strong in infantry, with some 400 cavalry attached. Light troops were increasingly used as the war went on. The main feature of the war, as regards Atlantean tactics, would be the growth in missile forces, first bow and arrow, later crossbows, to counter the Helvran reliance on pikes and swords.

At sea, the Helvrans had an unequalled navy of about 300 ships(250 fully seaworthy) in the Helvengio, based at Giezuat, and a smaller base south-east of Noehtens. The Atlanteans had built up a navy of some 150 ships during the Phonerian wars: these were individually stronger than the Helvran ships, but by 248 this number had fallen to 75. Over the next three or four years, Atlantis built up its fleets to over 200, (though all figures are approximate due to lack of detail in our sources.)

250

The war began in late 250, when the Emperor Carel II (249 - 252) was on the Atlantean throne, and Ruideneks II (240-258) was the Helvran Emperor. This was after more than two years of diplomatic exchanges and demands by Atlantis for Helvris to give way on the trade and boundary controversies. After several earlier skirmishes, there were two more considerable battles at sea between escorted Atlantean trading ships off the Th. Thiss. Coast and the Helvran navy, leading to a number of Atlantean casualties. Thereafter an Atlantean army crossed the river Fellepp and invaded Helvran Numidis. This force of about 12000 men met a Helvran army early in 251 and was defeated by the Helvran phalanxes. It retreated back over the river. At the same time another Atlantean army of some 10000 men temporarily moved into the northernmost Helvran territory, north of the Meilox mountains.

During 251 there were a number of other minor actions, but it was not until later in the year that a Helvran army of 14000 made a serious advance into the territory north-east of their empire and occupied Rundes on the Dodolla. This region was semi-independent but friendly to Atlantis. At the same time 10000 Helvrans also occupied Lillouth, north of the Meilox mountains. Now both sides began to arm themselves more seriously. Helvris prepared an army of as many as 30000 men in Numidis, with the intention of invading the Province of Atlantis itself, making straight for the capital. Simultaneously another force of 18000 would occupy all the Rundes area and threaten Atlantidieh from the south-east. Other armies of some 15000 were placed in Th. Thiss. and Helvris province, with a reserve army in Numidis. The navy was made ready to join the attack in the west from the sea.

Atlantis, meanwhile, had by this time raised about 55000 men (noble and royal forces), as she had in the earlier war with the Phonerians - far fewer than the Helvrans. Of these, 10000 remained near Atlantis city, 23000 guarded the Fellepp, 10000 were in Atlantidieh, and the rest went to the Lillouth-Lillerunix area. The navy, after further skirmishes off Th. Thiss. in 251, remained near the capital. The Atlanteans evidently envisioned another invasion of Numidis, and at the same time planned to increase their total forces to 65000. In general, it is clear that Atlantis had, in 250, expected a short limited war, somewhat like their (rather erroneous) memory of the Phonerian War, which would result in the Helvrans' giving in to their moderate demands. Despite the local defeats of 250-251, Atlantis remained complacent about 252.

252

This year the Helvrans crossed the Fellepp, outmanoeuvring and partly defeating the Atlanteans. For the first time the Emperor, Carel II, joined his army. He helped to rally it, and it stood on the defensive for the Battle of Cennis in August.

The Atlanteans, led by the Emperor, had an army of 20500 infantry, nearly all swordsmen, with a few bowmen, and 2500 cavalry. The Helvrans had 23500 heavy infantry, in phalanx formation, and 4500 cavalry. During the battle, the disciplined Helvran phalanx smashed the nobles on the Atlantean left, while the Helvran cavalry on this flank also beat its smaller opponents. These victorious forces then swung round against the flank of the Atlantean centre. On the Atlantean right, their cavalry beat the Helvran horsemen, but chased them right off the field. The result was that the Atlanteans were utterly defeated, losing 10000 men, including the Emperor himself. It is possible that a direct advance now on the city of Atlantis would have won the war for the Helvrans, but instead they lingered near Cennis and spent time occupying other towns of importance, such as the port of Celingé. In the east they occupied the whole of the neutral Rundes area, throwing back an attempt by the Atlanteans to retake it. At sea, the Helvran fleet, unlike the army, advanced as far as Atlantis and briefly blockaded the city, inflicting a minor but demoralising defeat on the Atlantean navy.

ATLANTIS ON THE DEFENSIVE, 253 - 256

253

Under the new Emperor, Carel III, the Atlanteans reorganised and recruited frenetically, and by the time the Helvran army slowly advanced on the capital, Atlantis could defend itself on the Algrunix, some miles south of the city, with an army of 22000 men. At the same time the citizens of Atlantis and another 15000 troops defended the city against attack from east or west (by sea). The Helvrans had an army of about 33000, but failed in their attempt to storm the strong Atlantean position on the hills of the Algrunix. They now retired, and by the winter had recrossed the Fellepp. At sea an Atlantean naval force advanced to the mouth of the Helvengio and there defeated a Helvran fleet.

254

Atlantis now tried to make Helvris agree to a peace treaty, but the Helvrans had plenty of resources left and refused. On the river Fellepp there were various manoeuvrings and at one point the Helvrans, crossing the river, nearly surrounded an Atlantean force, which narrowly escaped northwards. Atlantis put its main effort, and an army of 16000 men, into the Lillouth front. It took that town and advanced to the strong Helvran fortress of Trelkod, later renamed Ugholtis by the Atlanteans, which it put under siege. But to the east, the Helvrans near Rundes aimed to take over and neutralise the whole of Atlantidieh, and moved on as far as Gentes on the river Rollepp.

255

For the new year, Atlantis threw all its resources into the siege of Trelkod. An army of 27000 took up the siege. Only 18000 were left in the west, on the Fellepp, with 14000 defending what was left of North Atlantidieh and some 15-20000 elsewhere: this made a total of 70-75000 men under arms in total, at this stage. Helvris had 110000 men active altogether: 25000 in Atlantidieh, 17000 around and in Trelkod, 28000 in Numidis, south of the Fellepp, 18000 elsewhere in the Helvris area, and nearly 30000 south of the Helvengio, defending the Empire, all apart from additional militia and local troops.

The siege of Trelkod went badly for Atlantis at first, and then. Later, disastrously, when the Helvran army from Numidis moved north-east north of the Daigorunix mountains, and descending on the enemy besiegers from the rear, inflicted a serious defeat on the Atlanteans. Many of the defeated troops were killed or captured, and the remainder escaped to Lillouth. On the other hand an Atlantean naval force occupied the Zueltix Mandengix (Blue Isles) off the mouth of the Helvengio with little opposition. In the east, Helvran forces moved unhindered through S.W. Atlantidieh, occupying and plundering Tilrase and Yalgor, and overawing all Atlantean attempts to defend the area.

256

In the early part of the new year, the Helvrans now outflanked the Atlantean army at Lillouth with a combined force of 42000, and the Atlanteans retreated back north-west. Carel III now personally took command, and by a well thought-out manoeuvre joined this army at Yeldis with the one previously on the Fellepp, which had been marched back north, unknown to its weak opponents south of the river. The Helvrans subsequently attacked the Atlanteans at the Battle of Yeldis. The result was a draw, but the Atlanteans at any rate stood their ground and the Helvrans suffered heavy casualties. They withdrew back to Lillouth. In the east, the Atlanteans managed to retake Gentes after a full-scale siege.

THE ATLANTEANS GAIN THE INITIATIVE, 257 - 260

256 sees the end of what we may call the first part, or indeed quarter, of the war. This had seen Atlantis continuously on the defensive. Hereafter there will be no more Helvran invasions of Atlantean territory. In the second phase, lasting till 260, Atlantis now took the initiative. This was made possible by some important changes now made to the Atlantean armies. The officer ranks were increasingly opened to non-noble professionals; long-term military service was introduced; conscription was applied more and more widely; and the noble armies, being less professional and disciplined than the royal forces, became of less and less significance numerically: they tended to be put on quiet fronts or to hold conquered territory. Armies were in future more often divided into parts, or wings, for ease of handling; light troops became more common; more cavalry was used; and artillery came to the fore in the growing number of sieges undertaken on Helvran territory. After about 260 we first hear of crossbowmen in use, instead of bowmen. The navy too was much enlarged. Gradually Atlantean tactics of firepower and smaller and flexible army units overwhelmed the stiff Helvran pike formations, and bigger and better Atlantean ships outfought the smaller Helvran types.

The Helvran Wars, southern sector

257

On the Lillouth front, for the next few years, the two armies faced each other, manoeuvred but fought no serious battle, as the real action moved elsewhere. By 259 the Helvran army here had moved back to Trelkod, and each side gradually reduced its forces. The main action this year was the movement of a large Helvran fleet to the Zuettix Mandengix isles, where it encountered the Atlantean fleet, and was defeated. Thereafter the Helvran navy never again sortied out of the Helvengio.

258

The Zuettix Mandengix now became a permanent Atlantean naval base. In the east, the Atlantean reconquest of south Atlantidieh continued steadily. In the centre, Lillouth withstood Atlantean assault. In the west some 18000 Atlanteans took part in an amphibious landing north of Nosinge, which linked up with the army on the Fellepp west of the Daigorunix. The Helvrans retreated to the east of Numidis.

259

By the end of this year, the whole of the Rundes area had been retaken by an Atlantean army of about 36000 men. The Atlantean forces in Numidis were increased by land and sea to over 45000, of which 25000 were then moved amphibiously to Miolrel and the west City States - south of the Helvengio. Later in the year the Atlantean forces in Numidis, weakened as they now were, beat off a strong Helvran attack from the east.

It is clear that Atlantis had now conceived her strategy for crushing Helvris completely in the long term, although it was not till after Carel III's death that it is certain that Atlantis had decided to annex the whole enemy empire. From their base in the Zuelnix Mandengix the Atlanteans heard of and began to encourage rumours of rebellion in the south-western parts of the Helvran Empire, in the City States. They planned by the invasion at Miolrel to detach this whole province from the enemy.

THE ATLANTEANS FALTER, 260 - 261

260

Lillouth was at last retaken. In the south many City States did rebel and join Atlantis, and rebellions also began in Manralia, which was in any case, by long tradition, a partially independent kingdom under Helvris. The Helvrans were now having to stretch their forces rather thinly all round their empire, their total army never topping 130000. Their local militias seem to have been of little value. Then the Atlanteans' progress faltered. The main Helvran naval base was at Giezuat on Helvremon, the island in the middle of the Helvengio. The Atlantean navy was observing it from the west. Suddenly the Helvrans sortied and in the great first battle of Giezuat, they completely defeated the unprepared Atlanteans.

261

If 260 saw the progress of the Atlanteans begin to falter, 261 saw them faced with a series of disasters. They had already lost control of the western part of the Helvengio as the result of the battle of Giezuat. Meanwhile in Numidis, an Atlantean army of about 40000 men advanced on Cennetis (known at this time by its Helvran name of Preksidband) in September, across the river Numeras. There followed for the Atlanteans the disastrous defeat of the battle of Cennetis, as the Helvrans suddenly attacked them as they were in the middle of crossing the river.

The Helvran army was waiting on the far side of the river, partly concealed by rough ground and misty weather. In fact the Atlanteans believed them to be further south. They had about 32000 men, 23000 of which were the heavy infantry phalanxes, plus 4500 light infantry and 4500 cavalry with a few units of artillery. The Atlanteans had altogether 40000 men, of which 22000 had crossed the river as the enemy attacked. Most of these were infantry with about 2700 cavalry and 1500 light troops. The infantry consisted of some 14000 swordsmen and 4000 bowmen, of which just over 1000 were crossbowmen. Any artillery was out of range. In the battle, the Helvrans surprised these troops before they were properly deployed. The usual effect of the missile troops was thus neutralised, and the Helvrans were able to charge down from the hills in a fairly uncoordinated way. The Atlanteans were almost routed and lost 19000 men, 9000 being captured and many drowned. The Helvrans lost only 4500. The most serious event was the capture of the Emperor, Carel III, himself. He had been injured and died three months later as a result of both injuries and mistreatment.

Before Cao-Melion, Carel's appointed successor could succeed to the throne, there were various attempts by other pretenders to seize power in the period during which the fate of Carel in captivity remained uncertain. The main groups of rebels were a number of Class 1 noblemen, who had small armies fighting in the war, and a cousin of Cao-Melion called Cencon who was in Atlantis city. Cao-Melion himself was temporarily cut off from all this near Raihco where he had recently landed with the Atlantean amphibious force from Miolrel. Cencon quickly took over Atlantis city and declared himself Emperor, with the support of a small noble army nearby. He entered into negotiations with the rebel nobles, who finally agreed to support him- for the time being. These rebels really wanted to return Atlantis to the previous century - to abolish the position of Emperor and parcel the Empire up between themselves. Hitherto, however, they had achieved little except to manoeuvre mistrustfully around Atlantid'ieh.

In late October Cao-Melion crossed back to Miolrel and advanced on Atlantis. Cencon made desperate but unsuccessful calls to other army units to support him, and even the rebel nobles in Atlantid'ieh now decided it was safer to sit on the fence until they saw the result of the power struggle. Cao-Melion gathered an army of 18000 men and support from nearly all the army commanders. In a couple of skirmishes near Atlantis, Cencon's army melted away, and Cencon himself was captured and later exiled.

The noble conspiracy now collapsed as the two leading noblemen treacherously turned against their co-conspirators, and offered Cao-Melion their support. In a series of small fights the rebels were all killed or executed after capture by their erstwhile fellow conspirators, who were now determined to show their loyalty to Cao-Melion. In this way these turncoat nobles at least succeeded in ensuring that no further action would be taken against noble armies by the Emperors for another 100 years.

The only bright news for Atlantis came right at the end of the year in the Helvengio. In November another fleet ventured in and stood off Giezuat, to protect the amphibious movement of 8000 men from Miolrel to near Raihco, which fell within a few weeks. This was a daring move, as the Helvran navy was still superior and yet stayed in port. Meanwhile in the east, during the past two years, two Atlantean armies, each about 17000 strong, moved to the edge of the Meilox mountains.

THE FINAL VICTORY OF ATLANTIS, 262 - 267

The third and conclusive phase of the war now began. The Atlanteans shrugged off the defeats of the previous few years and under the new Emperor, they went for broke. They aimed to detach the provinces of the West City States and Manralia from Helvris and blockade and capture Giezuat, while maintaining pressure on the Helvrans from Numidis, the Meilox Mountains and the approach to the capital down the Cresslepp in the east. This involved over 130000 men by 263 (roughly 15000 in Numidis, 25000 in the east, 40000 in the south, 30000 in the Meilox Mountains and about 30000 around Trelkod.) By the end of the war this total had reached 170000. Atlantis clearly hoped that the capture of the capital city, Giezuat, would end the war because the Helvrans would sue for peace, but the old capital had been Helvris. The government moved back here from Giezuat in 261 and hence Helvris too had ultimately to be captured to end the war.

To achieve his goals, Cao-Melian oversaw further military reorganisation. This resulted in the appointment of permanent army commanders for the various fronts, each of whose forces were named after the commander. The name of Pueggis was now allotted to smaller forces of about 5000, formally the temporary "wings", and these were named and recruited from particular regions. The proportion of bowmen (and crossbowmen now) increased vis-à-vis swordsmen, leading to more devastating victories over the enemy. In 262 the main army, accompanied by the Emperor, moved to besiege Trelkod. In the east, meanwhile, the army from E. Atlantidieh prepared to march south across the Cresslepp to threaten Helvris from the east. On the island of Helvremon, the Atlantean navy moved back to blockade Giezuat, while two other armies moved into and across Manralia and W. City States. In Manralia they met little opposition, but in the City States they had to face strong counter-attacks by Helvran and local forces until 263. On the Helvran side some reinforcements were passed to Helvremon, as the government moved off to Helvris. A sortie by the Helvran navy covered these movements and broke the blockade, although the action with the Atlanteans was no better than a draw.

263

In the Helvengio the Atlanteans made no immediate attempt to renew their sea blockade of Giezuat, and concentrated near their new base north-west of Pruoddos on the south coast. In the City States Atlantis defeated and accepted the surrender of the final Helvran force, but a number of cities had declared themselves independent and refused to admit or ally with Atlantean troops. The siege of Trelkod absorbed armies of up to 50000 on each side, and the Helvrans defended the fortress and the nearby mountains tenaciously all year. In the east a major Helvran army of 25000 men set out from Helvris to force the Atlanteans back over the Cresslepp (called "Greuzlepp" in Helvran, meaning "war-river"). They were however defeated in a battle north of Noccsat. Finally a small Atlantean force made the difficult crossing of the Meilox Mountains to threaten the Helvrans from the north-west. However it could not cross the river and moved up the western side to link up with the main Atlantean army north of Noccsat.

This year saw a great deal of action on all fronts. Trelkond, almost starving, was finally stormed under Cao-Melion's eyes and sacked with great slaughter. Later this army advanced on Numercuat, but came up against another Helvran army in a string position outside the fortress. Attacks failed to dislodge the Helvrans. South of the Helvengio, the Atlanteans, having now cleared the southern parts of Helvris' empire, planned to occupy the whole of Helvremon island, in the hope that this would induce the enemy to surrender. The navy again blockaded the port of Giezuat after an indecisive sea-battle, the second battle of Giezuat - most of the Helvran navy now transferred to Noehtens. This did clear the way for an amphibious invasion by about 15000 men of the eastern end of the island, moving off from Raihco. Then in November a reinforced Helvran navy returned to the fight and defeated the Atlantean fleet in the third battle of Giezuat. The Atlantean navy retreated to Raihco. This was in fact the last remaining sizeable Helvran navy, whereas the Atlanteans had double the number of ships available, scattered around the Helvengio, on the open sea and at Atlantis.

On land, the Helvrans now had no important forces in the south. They had about 20000 men in Giezuat, up to 20000 more at Numercuat, 15000 about Cennetis, 23000 in and around Helvris and perhaps 15000 elsewhere - 90 - 100000 in all. Against this the Atlanteans had some 18000 in Numidis, 45000 north of Numercuat, 33000 in the north-east and east, 17000 on Helvremon, over 35000 in the City States and Manralia and perhaps 20000 in Atlantis and Atlantidieh Provinces - about 170000 altogether.

265

The Helvengio remained under Helvran control throughout this year, leaving the Atlantean army on Helvremon isolated. This was largely due to the short war which broke out unexpectedly with the Phonerians, and which involved considerable support from the navy. The Phonerians had taken this opportunity to seek revenge for their earlier defeat, and struck out independently from the Marossan Empire, of which they were nominally a part. In this brief war, half the Atlantean navy had to speed north, and there followed a few inconclusive naval battles. By 266, the Marossans had reasserted their control over the Phonerians, and the war stuttered to a halt. In any case the Atlantean forces on Helvremon were not seriously threatened by the Helvran garrison of Giezuat, nor did the Helvrans land any other sizeable number of troops on the island. The Atlanteans were therefore able to take control of most of the island. Elsewhere Numercuat was besieged, relieved once and rebesieged. Another Atlantean army crossed the river Numeras from Numidis, for the first time since the defeat in 261, and took the town of Cennetis. In the east the two Atlantean armies drew closer to Helvris itself.

266

Accompanied by the Emperor, a mighty Atlantean fleet moved out and defeated the Helvran navy in a final decisive battle, gaining complete control at last of the Helvengio. Further Atlantean forces were landed on the Helvremon and Cao-Melion himself witnessed the surrender of the Helvrans in Giezuat a little later on. The city of Helvris itself, well fortified, was now besieged. Numercuat was assaulted from north and south by two Atlantean armies and captured.

267

By the start of the new year, the Helvrans were almost finished. They had left only some 10000 men south of Numercuat, 19000 in Helvris itself and perhaps 14000 scattered about elsewhere. Nevertheless the leaders of Helvris decided to fight on to the bitter end, although to the west their troops were gradually surrendering. Helvris city itself had to be stormed by the Atlanteans with the loss of over 18000 Helvran lives, many of them civilian. The leaders still left alive were captured, the empire now fell apart and Atlantis was able to dictate peace-terms.

"Ceriex ceriun": ("An Imperialist as Emperor"): Cao-Melion, 261 - 285.

CAO-MELION'S VICTORY OVER THE REBELS AND THE HELVRANS, 261-7

Before Cao-Melion, Carel's appointed successor could succeed to the throne, there were various attempts by other pretenders to seize power in the period during which the fate of Carel in captivity remained uncertain. The main groups of rebels were a number of Class 1 noblemen, who had small armies fighting in the war, and a cousin of Cao-Melion called Cencon who was in Atlantis city. Cao-Melion himself was temporarily cut off from all this near Raihco where he had recently landed with the Atlantean amphibious force from Miolrel. Cencon quickly took over Atlantis city and declared himself Emperor, with the support of a small noble army nearby. He entered into negotiations with the rebel nobles, who finally agreed to support him- for the time being. These rebels really wanted to return Atlantis to the previous century - to abolish the position of Emperor and parcel the Empire up between themselves. Hitherto, however, they had achieved little except to manoeuvre mistrustfully around Atlantidieh.

In late October Cao-Melion crossed back to Miolrel and advanced on Atlantis. Cencon made desperate but unsuccessful calls to other army units to support him, and even the rebel nobles in Atlantidieh now decided it was safer to sit on the fence until they saw the result of the power struggle. Cao-Melion gathered an army of 18000 men and support from nearly all the army commanders. In a couple of skirmishes near Atlantis, Cencon's army melted away, and Cencon himself was captured and later exiled.

The noble conspiracy now collapsed as the two leading noblemen treacherously turned against their co-conspirators, and offered Cao-Melion their support. In a series of small fights the rebels were all killed or executed after capture by their erstwhile fellow conspirators, who were now determined to show their loyalty to Cao-Melion. In this way these turncoat nobles at least succeeded in ensuring that no further action would be taken against noble armies by the Emperors for another 100 years.

Cao-Melion was by nature an Imperialist and now bent all his efforts to concluding the war by breaking up and annexing the whole Helvran Empire. He believed fervently in the superiority of Atlantean arms and customs, and was particularly keen to wipe out the Helvran customs of human sacrifice and the religious slavery of Manralia.

Cao-Melion began by completing the reforms of the army. He placed permanent army-commanders on the different fronts. He made small forces of some 5000 men into PUEGGISIX, or Armies, which had a considerable amount of independence. He also increased the proportion of bowmen (and increasingly crossbow men) to swordsmen, which led to more and more devastating victories over the Helvrans, who still based their armies on the old slow-moving pike-phalanxes.

Cao-Melion planned in his strategy to detach the provinces of the Coastal City States and Manralia from the Helvran Empire, blockade and capture Giezuat, at the same time as maintaining pressure from Numidis the Meilox Mountains and the River Cresslepp. This involved in 262 over 130000 men, and by the end of the war nearly 170000 in all. In 262 the main Atlantean army besieged Ugholtis, while to the east the army from east Atlantidieh prepared to move south across the Cresslepp and threaten Helvris from the east. In the south the navy moved back to blockade Giezuat, while two other armies gradually took over the Coastal City States and Manralia, much helped by local rebellions against the Helvrans. Ugholtis was finally stormed and sacked with great slaughter under Cao-Melion's eyes in 264. In the south preparations were made to land on Giezuat island. Before this, however, the Helvran and Atlantean navies clashed in the Second Naval Battle of Giezuat, which was indecisive. The Atlantean amphibious force now proceeded to land on the island, only to be cut off by another Helvran naval sortie which defeated the Atlanteans at the Third Naval Battle of Giezuat

In 265 two Atlantean armies approached Helvris itself, while on Giezuat island the Atlanteans, although cut off, conquered most of the territory. Suddenly, at this point, the Phonerians took this opportunity to seek revenge for their earlier defeat, striking out independently from the Marossan Empire, of which they were nominally a part. In this brief war, half the Atlantean navy had to speed north, and there followed a few inconclusive naval battles. By 266, the Marossans had reasserted their control over the Phonerians, and the war stuttered to a halt. In the south, meanwhile, in 266, a large Atlantean fleet finally defeated the Helvrans in the Helvengio and regained complete control of the sea. Soon after the Helvrans on the island surrendered.

A few of the Helvrans flee as the Atlanteans capture Giezuat, 266

Helvris itself was now besieged, and Numercuat captured. The First Siege of Helvris lasted for eight months. By 267 the Helvrans were virtually finished, but the Emperor and leaders in Helvris determined to fight to the end. In the west the other Helvran armies now gradually surrendered, but Helvris itself had to be stormed with the loss of perhaps 18000 Helvran lives. The Emperor and many other leading nobles were killed in the fighting, the Empire fell apart and the Atlanteans were able to dictate peace terms.

3. *The First Age of Imperialism, 267-307.

THE AFTERMATH OF THE WAR AND THE NEW IMPERIALISM

Cao-Melion, having decisively defeated the Helvrans, now effectively annexed the whole of their empire, with the exception of the Jutes, who were perforce left to their independence. Helvran lands were expropriated freely by Atlantean nobles, including the Emperor. Nearly all Helvran institutions were destroyed, the language banned for official use, and many Helvran nobles and army commanders executed, exiled or impoverished. A great Memorial to the Helvran War was also erected on the outskirts of Atlantis. The Helvran naval base at Giezuat now became the main Atlantean harbour for the fleet in the Helvengio. This harsh treatment of a conquered country was unique for the Atlanteans. In 272 Helvrieh was made another Province, but few rights were granted to native Helvrans. Only after several decades were these conditions gradually eased.

Manralia was allowed to continue as a dependent ally of Atlantis, with its own priest-king, the Epecomi Meftemos, but also a resident force of Atlantean soldiers and advisers. Atlantis demanded that Manralia should abolish its "religious" slavery, but its government haved. Eventually in 287-8 there was an internal revolution, an Atlantean coup d'état, and the Atlanteans took over the running of the whole country. It became an Atlantean Province in 294.

There was further fighting all this time in the Coastal City States and the Chalcran states, in which Cao-Melion willingly meddled in order to increase the power of his Empire. He encouraged the northern cities of the City States to accept Atlantean leadership, as a result of their struggle against the Helvrans in the earlier war, and they were made another Province (Thoinen Thissaindix) in 274. Thereafter Atlantean forces joined with local armies to fight against the southern cities. Numedeas in the south allied itself with the northerners, and some years later the whole area became engulfed in a general civil war between Yallands (and Atlanteans) against Numedeans and other southern settlements.

Cao-Melion also intervened in a civil war between the Chalcran states, supporting some southern states against northern ones in a dispute over borders around the central lakes. By 282 Atlantis' faction had won, and Atlantis had gained control itself of Gasiroto and the lakes themselves.

INTERNAL REFORMS

Internally Cao-Melion continued the social legislation and reforms of Carel I. After 264 he laid down the framework of an empire-wide network of schools, with a Controller for Education. He also opened the first University, at Ghestis.

Other Controllers were also gradually created, producing a stronger and more centralised government. So in 269 came the Controller for Education, and in 270 a Controller for Imperial Affairs (this covered all Provinces except Atlantis, which had had its own Controller since 240.) A proper Controller for the State Treasury was created in 266. Finally in law, a Court of Appeal was set up in 269. Separate "Royal" and "Local" courts were founded after 281, the former now being restricted to trying serious crimes and the latter to cover all civil and minor criminal hearings. Most portentous of all, in 278 the first "Great Council" was set up, based on the Atlantean provincial Council, to cover all the other Provinces. It was purely consultative and its members were chosen by the Emperor himself. It also sat only when he said it should. But it was eventually to expand and develop to its later important role, largely due to the encouragement of Siphirixo after 300.

THE EMPEROR - HIS PERSONAL LIFE

The personality and private life of Cao-Melion is particularly well-known to us, as a result of the survival of some original sources, both Atlantean and also Helvran. But his life, with its family turmoil and upheaval, also interested later dramatists, such as Normelliel and Gildasso in the Second Empire, and many of their plays dealing with Cao-Melion (and other First Empire figures) have survived. Finally, too, the personal and marital ups and downs of Cao-Melion are important historically, as they led later to the Family Wars of 307-314.

It must first be recognised that Cao-Melion was a large, domineering and aggressive man, who was capable at times of terrible fits of suspicion and anger, but also at other times of moods of profound depression. The latter often were a result of his actions undertaken in periods of anger - these often led him to order brutal executions, often preceded by torture, against enemy prisoners, politicians who had upset him, and even his own family.

HIS WIVES AND TURBULENT DOMESTIC LIFE

Cao-Melion had a complicated domestic life, rather like Henry VIII of England, whom he resembled in a number of ways. He first married in 251, at the age of 22, and by this wife, Carnaxa, had two children, Siphirixo in 253 and Tuondo in 255. Siphirixo was thus his heir and succeeded him in 285. Cao-Melion always had a roving eye, and had a series of mistresses throughout his life. But while he assumed his wives would turn a blind eye to his behaviour, he was certainly not ready to do the same when he learnt in 267 that Carnaxa had been unfaithful to him while he was away during the Helvran War. In a fury he found out who these lovers were, or were purported to be, and had them arrested, imprisoned, tortured and killed. He then divorced his wife, imprisoned her and then had her secretly poisoned (268).

In 269 he married Millei, already his mistress. She had already borne him a son in 264, and was now pregnant again. She had a daughter, Puella, in this same year. In the early 270's, Cao-Melion came to suspect that Millei too was being unfaithful to him, and devised secret and elaborate tricks to test her fidelity. At the same time he had become bewitched by the young daughter of one of his Court nobles, Cairille. As things came into the open, the whole Court split into factions supporting one or other of the two ladies. Cao-Melion became ever more determined to rid himself of Millei and to marry Cairille, who was his mistress by 274. An attempt was made by the Millei faction to kidnap and perhaps murder Cairille, but this was thwarted. Then, probably with Cao-Melion's connivance, the Cairille faction poisoned Millei, who died a slow, lingering death in 275. Pausing only to execute two scapegoats, Cao-Melion quickly married Cairille in 276, and the next year they had a son. Several other children followed, but all died young.

By 282 Cao-Melion was again tiring of his young wife, and they soon became in all but the formalities, separated. Cao-Melion consoled himself, as usual, with his mistresses, while Cairille went into hiding in 284, fearing the fate of Millei. However, next year, Cao-Melion died, quite suddenly and in apparent good health. There was much whispering of poisoning by Cairille's friends, but Siphirixo, the new Emperor, insisted on no recriminations, and Cairille was left to her quiet retirement far from the Court. In the 290's she remarried and had some sons.

SIPHIRIXO AND CAO-MELION : TWO OPPOSITE CHARACTERS

Siphirixo was a much more intellectual and socially minded person than his father. While Cao-Melion had also carried out a number of important social and judicial reforms, it was Siphirixo who was by far the more involved with the liberal social, religious and artistic currents of the time, and who proved to be most strongly influenced by the liberal milieu with which he surrounded himself. Along with this, however, went a distaste for political and practical realities, a willingness to hand these areas completely over to advisers, and a personal lack of decisiveness and trust in his own judgement, which was very different from his father's character.

Another major difference with Cao-Melion was Siphirixo's distaste for imperialism and general lack of interest in foreign affairs. Creating a Controller for Foreign Affairs, and adjuring him not to start any foreign wars, Siphirixo quickly bowed out of foreign policy. Similarly Siphirixo reduced the overall size of the standing army from about 100000 in 284 to 75000 in 305. At the same time he created a "College of Military Art" in 292 to study and advise on strategy and tactics both in peace and war. One matter this College did warn the Emperor about- wholly ineffectively- was the growing power and independence of the old noble armies. These represented 35000 of the armed forces in 305, and in provinces like Th. Thiss. and Manralia, the noble generals became almost freebooters.

HIS SOCIAL REFORMS

Home and social affairs were Siphirixo's abiding interests. He set up a secure local government system throughout the Empire by forming a second or intermediary tier of "Regions" between the basic local municipal government and the Provincial level. These Districts were given the authority to impose local taxation and to run the imperial education system. Further responsibilities were allocated for social policies, and Siphirixo's achievements here can be measured by the fact that this whole organization was adopted by the Second Empire and lasted essentially unchanged until 588. In 296 Siphirixo permitted the Great Council to draw members from all Provinces, including Atlantis, and after 295 he allied the recruitment of Councilmen to the new local government structure. Thus a person progressed upwards via election or appointment from the local (or District) council to the Regional one and then either to a Provincial post or to the Great Council. After that progress to a national government position (Controller, Adviser, or their staff), or appointment as a Provincial Governor, depended at this stage very much on the whim of the Emperor, but under the Second Empire, it would become more formalised into the whole career ladder. To facilitate all of this, he supervised the building of Government and Council offices in the capital.

Siphirixo was also deeply interested in philosophy and art, and he surrounded himself with philosophers, religious thinkers and artists. He encouraged attempts by religious thinkers to "rationalise" the Atlantean religion, and supported their basic aim, largely unconscious at this stage, of producing a reasonable Theist monotheism out of the multiplicity of Atlantean gods. Two famous names from this period are Rathidel, the proponent of "legalist" philosophy (243-291) and Ciblahu, the great "monotheist" religious philosopher (257-299). Siphirixo took it upon himself to protect radical thinkers against the rage and fury of the traditional priesthood, and during this enlightened period, advanced religious thinkers and philosophers interested in religion worked together.

THE ARTS UNDER SIPHIRIXO

As regards the arts, the so-called "First Empire Romantic Style" developed from about 260 and reached its greatest flowering between 290 and 310 in the lyrical poetry of Carnaxa Lillie (274-327) and the epic nationalist poems of Bommel, who wrote between 295 and 330. In addition there were in this first great age of art an early heroic style of architecture, and the first plays, based on religious or mythological subjects. All too much of this work has perished, or been overshadowed by the even more exotically Romantic work of the period after the Family Wars (314-), but enough has survived to enable us to see its quality and to appreciate the role of Siphirixo in encouraging and often helping to found the arts.

Architecture and landscape gardening, too, were Siphirixo's passions. He used the best architects to build the new Government offices mentioned above; he also greatly extended the Royal Palace, and he turned the grounds around about it into pleasure gardens on a large scale.

Meanwhile military and family circumstances were developing, which were to lead ultimately to conflict, civil war and the death of Siphirixo and many of his family. While the professional army was reduced in numbers for the sake of economy and principle (though this chiefly affected only the conscripted element), the forces commanded by nobles grew, as some Class 2 nobles were also now allowed to own standing armies. These forces were encouraged to protect the borders of Th. Thiss, Manralia and the Chalcran states, where they engaged in a perpetual series of skirmishes against foreigners and sometimes even against each other.

THE PROBLEM OF THE SUCCESSION

The question of the succession became a major problem after 300, and the conflicts arising from this were the more serious because of the growing number of barely controlled semi-independent noble forces now at large. As Siphirixo's health deteriorated after 300, he began seriously to think about his heir. His eldest son, and "rightful" heir was Yeasor, Military Governor of Th. Thiss. after 304, and a brutal, aggressive and imperialistic young man. Siphirixo disliked him, and in 305, after years of dithering, and following a bad attack of asthma and bronchitis, appointed Carel, the grandson of Cao-Melion's second wife, his heir. This snubbed both Yeasor and his younger brother, but the latter stated he was happy to support Carel.

Yeasor was far from happy, however, and over the next two years plotted to be in a position to take the throne for himself. Siphirixo, by his actions, unconsciously strengthened Yeasor's hand. He at last tried to cut back the size and number of noble armies, causing great resentment, and enabling Yeasor to enrol them in his cause. By 307 he had all the forces in Th. Thiss (30000 men) under his thumb. Carel, who was Military Governor of Helvrĭeh, was an uncharismatic youth and he allowed the military commander in the east to be secretly suborned by Yeasor. Although by now aware of Yeasor's military preparations, Siphirixo and his government seemed paralysed, and made no attempt to mobilise all the Royal Army (50000 men), or any noble forces against him. As a result, when fighting did begin in 307, part of the Royal Army, still threatened by Siphirixo's cutbacks and lacking any imperial encouragement or morale boosting, defected to Yeasor in the east.

In March 307, civil war began - the start of the "Family Wars" - when Yeasor went to E.Helvrĭeh to rally support. transported 10000 men across the Helvengĭo, and moved to join the confused skirmishing which had already begun in the Chalcran state and Atlantidĭeh between noble forces supporting Yeasor and Siphirixo.

"Crehul daiton": The Military Traveller : Lasso Atlaniphon II, 409 - 448.

A COSMOPOLITAN AND LIBERAL PRINCE

Lasso was adopted as Emperor-to-be by his father, Iustos, in 404, following the decision made much earlier in the reign that the imperial succession should devolve by adoption of the best person, rather than automatically by hereditary succession as had happened hitherto. In practice this had little effect as the line of emperors remained within the same family. Lasso had been brought up in an enlightened fashion by his father, and was certainly the most intelligent and capable of his siblings, as well as being fortuitously the eldest male heir. When 24 years old, he married Suayosa, the beautiful and intelligent daughter, of a noble Helvran, who was an Imperial Controller at this time. This was a happy marriage to begin with, and it certainly helped to kindle Lasso's cosmopolitanism and interest in all parts of the empire.

Throughout his reign, Lasso travelled far and wide, and visited every Atlantean province at least once, as well as going abroad on sea journeys, and making state visits to Eliossie, Razira, Vulcania and Ugrïeh (the latter only in the course of a military campaign!) He deliberately encouraged non-Atlanteans to reach high posts in government, and granted full citizenship to the Provinces of Manralia's southern border, Borchalcrieh and Yallandix Thissandix, and initial citizenship to Meistayïeh, Naokeltaniëh and Dravidïeh. Equally he did much to encourage, indeed, initially, to force, uniformity of practice in law, education, language and other social practices throughout all the Provinces. One of his most important innovations was the abolition in 422 of the old Class system (though it has to be said this never really died, and came back to life later in the Second Empire). Lasso's cast of mind was very similar to his father, and he followed his generally liberal ideals in matters of government and social policy. However he was also much more interested than Iustos both in creating a successful cosmopolitan empire, and imposing a centralised and uniform method of government on all the Provinces. He was also intensely interested in warfare, and the military art, and in the first part of his reign, was determined to bring, by conquest, more peoples into the Empire of Atlantis

THE HELVRAN REVOLT - THE IMPERIAL FAMILY AT WAR WITH ITSELF

Lasso, despite his interest in the different races that made up his Empire, believed that the administration of such a vast body of peoples was only possible if they all used the same principles of law and education, and all spoke the same language, Atlantean, at least for all public purposes. In these matters, he reversed some of his father's liberal ideas, and imposed these practices quite harshly at first: this caused considerable resentment, especially amongst the Helvrans, Jutes and some of the Kelts. In the end this led to the Great Revolt of the Helvrans in 420-1. In some ways this was a reaction to the liberalisation granted by Iustos, which reversed a century of linguistic and political pressure against old Helvran uses, and which now seemed again to be put under threat by the new Emperor.

The first outbreaks of revolt in the Helvran areas were severely dealt with by the Atlantean army, with the tacit support of Lasso. But then, his wife, Suayosa, of Helvran origin herself, personally objected to this treatment of her fellow country folk, and symbolically changed her name to its (original) Helvran form, Slilin. Her eldest son also ran off and joined the rebels. Lasso at first would not change his views, claiming that his son had been kidnapped by the rebels. The climax to all this came in two weeks in 421, when Lasso, touring supposedly pacified areas of Helvrieh was nearly assassinated, his wife then suddenly vanished, and his rebel son was killed in action fighting against the Atlantean army. Stunned, Atlaniphon now turned to compromise, and the Revolt gradually ended. Helvrieh was to retain its present rights, as granted by Iustos, which nevertheless dwindled away over the following decades - although the Helvran language, still taught officially in schools for the next century, survived and was even to be used in duplicate with Atlantean in official documents until the middle of the next century. Atlaniphon's wife returned to him some months later from her hideout, but their relationship was never the same again, and they later lived apart. Suayosa died in 439, heartbroken also by the scandalous behaviour of one of their granddaughters, and Atlaniphon never remarried.

CLASSICAL ART REACHES ITS ZENITH

The reigns of the three Atlaniphon Emperors saw the rise and supremacy of classical art, including literature and architecture. The great literary names were these : Rasiphel (339-398), who is chiefly known as a writer of "classical" poetic dramas. They used a very limited number of metres and a small, elevated vocabulary, and were highly prized by Atlaniphon I as "Imperial Drama".

Rasiphel's successor, during the reign of Atlaniphon II, was Normelliel (400-461). Like Rasiphel, he saw himself as a poet first and a dramatist second. He developed the purely dramatic elements of his plays, and increasingly collaborated with musicians for accompanying music. The later plays were also set in specific landscapes, and should be played in particular locations.

Finally we must mention the great poet Huattiens (361-447), who was the poet of the classical First Empire "par excellence". In all cases, the classical canon prescribed the avoidance of writing in the first person, instead making use of the third. This was the case even in spoken drama.

Lasso also had two monumental statues of Atlaniphon I sculpted at Miolrel and Atlantis (not far from the much earlier monument to the Atlantean victory over the Helvrans).

THE EMPIRE REACHES ITS FULL EXTENT - THE SECOND UGHAN WAR ("BUOUYE CREHEI ANTE UGHANIX"), AND THE BATTLE OF YRULLIA

The Empire continued to grow during the 420s and 430s, with Lasso himself planning and leading some campaigns. Between 416-419 south Nunchalcrieh was conquered and made a Province in 421. In the 420s there was fighting with the N. Kelts, and further lands conquered (The Province of Geskeltanëh was formed in 431.) Lasso was keen to protect the frontiers of his huge Empire, and started to build a series of strongholds around the borders, especially along the river Gestes in the east - these included Dravipand and Atlanipand on the Gestes, and Keltanipand in the north. ("Pand" is simply the Atlantean for "fortress".) However, the revolt of the Helvrans in 420-1 turned the Emperor's mind increasingly to equality and liberalism for the peoples of the Empire, with toleration for local customs and languages. He avoided wars during most of the 430s, but then the increasing number of raids by the Ughans into Atlantean territory forced him to try to break this powerful neighbour after 439. This war, which he led personally rekindled his fascination for warfare, and his success in it induced him to risk the great Invasion of the East after 444. This proved to be a step too far even for the undoubted military abilities of the Emperor, and after it was over, he declared he would give up fighting and imperialism for all time.

The Second Ughan War took place in 439-443, and the Atlanteans, after inconclusive fighting in the Gestix mountains, marched north and north-east through Nunchalcrieh and the Diefillen, round the northern end of the Mountains. This march of over 200 miles surprised the Ughans, led by Tjaidli, who were beaten overwhelmingly in 441 in a battle across the Gestes. In 442, the Atlanteans moved south and faced the Ughans again at Yrullia. The Battle of Yrullia, 442, is a typical example of Classical Atlantean battlecraft. Atlaniphon led an army of nine Pueggisix, or 86000 men, 9000 of them cavalry, plus artillery and mounted infantry. The Ughans had 95000, mostly swordsmen, with some units of light bowmen, and 20000 cavalry. The Ughans formed up in two lines with their left flank on a river, and their centre and right on separate hills. Atlaniphon planned to seize this hill, which was held largely by Ughan bowmen, and then work against the Ughan flank, seeing how things developed.

In fact the Ughans moved first, sending cavalry and some infantry over the river on the left against the Atlantean flank. The Emperor counter-attacked, but his forces over here were forced to retreat again later. But already he was moving cavalry and two Armies against the hill on his left, which he had already sent mounted infantry on ahead to seize. After a short struggle, the hill was taken, but other Ughan forces counter-attacked it. Next, units on the Ughan left advanced quickly against the Atlantean right wing. This was successful at first, but Atlaniphon brought up his reserves, including cavalry, and counter-attacked, forcing the Ughans to flee. The Atlanteans now moved forwards with the centre, bombarding the Ughans on the hill there in advance. They were helped by their right wing, chasing the fleeing Ughans. A tough struggle for the hill ensued, but potential Ughan reinforcements were distracted by the Atlantean extreme left-wing, which, having secured the hills there, was now drawing off the Ughan reserves. Finally the two Armies to the left of the Atlantean centre also advanced, forced back their opponents, and attacked the central hill from the flank. This finally routed the Ughans, and Atlaniphon triumphed at the cost of 6000 men. The Ughans lost 18000 and 10000 prisoners.

As Atlantean forces now moved towards the Ughan capital, Gargros, Tjaidli was quick to seek terms. Lasso took over the whole of the Diefillen area for the Empire (previously an independent area partly under Ughan suzerainty), and also secured a large chunk of Ughan territory to the east across the Gestes, as far as the Cugh (river) Teceg. This included an important pass through the Gestix Mountains, the Teceg Buoumu, from the river at Fembepand. At the far end of the pass, Lasso had a great new fortress called Iustupand built, named after his father. At the same time, Vulcanieh, which had played a minor but important part in the war, threatening the southern confederation of Ughan states, with its capital at Psjasegargros, and thus preventing its rulers from supporting the northern kingdom. In 442, the Vulcans actually invaded their northern neighbour, and took a slice of territory south of Psjasegargros after 444.

THE FIRST INVASION OF THE EAST, 444 - 446

No sooner had he finished with the war against Ughrieh than Lasso, his interest in practical warfare well and truly kindled, decided to start a campaign which would really make his name famous in history. Atlantis had long traded with the distant countries and cities of the far east, either by sea or overland, in both cases a distance of many hundreds of miles. This trade overland to the south-east via Vulcanieih or Razira was at the mercy of both the nations or peoples lying along the route and the trading cities beyond, which mostly lay on the sea at that point. Atlantis had little definite idea of the political set-up of these towns or the countries beyond, from which the items traded actually came. It was believed, correctly, that there was a large empire involved.

Lasso had been turning his options over in his mind for a couple of years before 442. Now, as so often before, middlemen along this trade-route were charging ruinously high prices for importing and exporting goods: furthermore, two of the little kingdoms on the other side of Vulcanieih had become completely hostile to such trade. The Emperor decided to move an army of 100000 men down to the river Baccuel, and simply march east, quashing hostile forces en route, arrive at the trading-ports, capture them, and then trade directly with the mysterious empire to the east, fighting it too, if necessary. A large navy would sail there too, meeting the land forces and helping to blockade the towns. Vulcanieih had no choice but to allow the Emperor access, as well as to provide him with allied troops to help hold the long lines of communication.

The army, led by the Emperor, set off from Laccuel in May 444. It marched down the river, skirting the north of the area of the Polder Folk, and entered mountainous territory. With some difficulty, the Atlanteans forced their way through, defeating hostile peoples, and leaving garrisons behind and strategic intervals. Further on, the mountains gave way to steppe, and crossing these caused Lasso considerable wastage of troops. He finally came to the far side, and was faced with four large city-states, which had been expecting him, and had prepared defences. Lasso made contact with the great Empire of the East, Losang, while besieging two of these, and tried to reach a moderately amicable agreement in which the Losang remained neutral, to the future benefit of her relations with Atlantis. However, he failed. Losang did not want this western Power intervening so close to home, and declared war on the Lasso.

The next year saw part of the army besieging and storming two of the ports, Amtas and Ganaptas, while the navy tried to blockade them by sea. But there was a nasty surprise when a large Losang navy appeared and defeated the Atlanteans. Thereafter, the navy was not really able to stand up to the larger and stronger enemy ships, and could play little part in the war. On land, the sieges went slowly, and Lasso had to ward off at least one attack by Losang. By the autumn of 44 he held Amtas and Ganaptas, had the third city, Mauntan, under tight siege, but had done little against the fourth, Sarapas, as it was constantly being succoured by Losang troops. So now Lasso marched with 50000 men (he had received only a few reinforcements) into the territory of the Empire of Losang. There were, it seems, two major battles: the first led to a severe defeat of the enemy. Lasso pursued eastwards, deep into enemy territory. The army of Losang stood at bay in a very strong defensive position, and all attacks against it by the Atlanteans failed. With casualties of over 16000 men, Lasso had to admit defeat and retired back to his siege. The port of Mauntan finally fell early in 446.

THE TERRIBLE RETREAT

Lasso now realised that he had won as much glory as he ever would. Tribes along his long line of communication were rebelling; his navy could not face the enemy at sea, and he could only remain on the defensive against it on land. Furthermore, he had little chance of obtaining reinforcements for an army which now amounted to only 55000 men. He needed to retain most of his troops to protect his Empire, and in any case transport eastwards by sea was risky, and by land involved entanglement with the rebellious tribesmen. Lasso now betook himself home with a guard of 15000 men, most of which he dropped off to strengthen garrisons en route. He also persuaded the Vulcans to contribute 14000 men to protect this route. In the east, he left behind 20000 men to garrison the three captured towns, while 20000 guarded them against Losang.

For a while, the Atlanteans maintained their positions, and were able to dominate the trade-route. But this war, however successful, sickened the Emperor by the huge casualty list which had resulted from it. In 447 he personally abjured war and declared the Atlantean Empire "complete for all time". He withdrew some 11000 more troops from the east, but maintained all the rest there. Even before his death, the situation deteriorated, as a huge Empire army arrived on the scene and besieged one Atlantean-held town. The new Emperor, Carel, who assumed power in 448, was a pacific, arts-loving man, and had no interest in his predecessor's mad expedition to the east. But neither would he act decisively to withdraw the troops. As a result, things quickly went from bad to worse. Revolts along the line of communication led to nearly all the garrisons being besieged. At the same time, in the east, Mauntan was stormed by Losang and allied troops, and most of the garrison massacred when the survivors finally surrendered. Ganaptas was now besieged. Later in 449, the Vulcans declared their neutrality, and abandoned all their garrison positions.

Finally, almost too late, Carel gave orders for his troops to leave the towns, and fight their way back westwards, bringing along all the garrisons en route as they retired. The navy made one attempt to pick up troops by sea, but was beaten back by the enemy. The retreat of the Atlanteans overland via desert and mountain to Vulcanieh and on to the Gestes was an epic, though disastrous, marathon of courage and endurance. Firstly the march took place in ever worsening weather from November 449 to March 450. The troops were repeatedly attacked from the rear by Losang and other forces right into the steppes. Then, and especially in the mountains, they were attacked by the local warbands. These had already taken and killed a number of the garrisons en route, as well as the supplies stored there. The retreating troops marched from waypoint to waypoint, often having to storm when they were in enemy hands, sheltering and recovering in each of them, and then continuing their march. Of 30000 troops who began the march, and 13000 holding the forts en route, only 8000 straggled, exhausted, into Vulcanipand in March of 450. Thus an army of over 100000 which had set off eastwards in such high hopes in 444, was reduced in the end to just these 8000 barely able-bodied soldiers. During the campaign, perhaps another 18000 wounded had returned home and survived their injuries, at least to some extent. All the rest were dead, or prisoners - and virtually none of the latter ever returned.

THE END OF THE REIGN

Following the end of the War, Lasso went into semi-retirement, and soon became quite ill. He turned his thoughts to the succession. He had no son, and although he did have two daughters, he could not envisage leaving the empire to a female ruler. Looking beyond his own children, he sought a pacific, conciliatory, cultured man, who could be a capable administrator, and initially considered one or other of his Controllers. But in 445 he finally decided upon one of his elder brother's children, Carel, then aged 26, who was living quietly on his estate in Chalcrieh, unmarried. He held a post there in charge of the arts and games, and was himself the centre of an artistic circle. He met many of Lasso's criteria, and he knew him personally. His administrative abilities were fairly unknown, but Lasso intended to pass on to him the best of his Controllers. Thereafter Lasso's powers gradually declined, and he died after a long illness in 448.

AN ART-LOVING RULER

Carel proved to be the non-imperialistic, retiring, Atlantis-loving Emperor that Lasso had hoped for, although he ultimately became more retiring and wilful than he at first seemed. He never married, and was in fact homosexual, finding his greatest fulfillment in the arts and the company of artists. He indulged in and encouraged all the arts, including the laying out of great landscaped gardens, and the organising or sponsoring of settings for the new "Total Works of Art". He started the trend for living away from both towns and farms, on country estates where the well-off could indulge in fantasies of an ideal and leisurely life.

His circle, very much an elite, spearheaded the gradual turn in the arts, and indeed the Atlanteans' whole outlook on life, from Classicism to Romanticism, and his great protégé was Gildasso, the Chalcran composer and first great exponent of Total Works of Art. The Total Work of Art represented the fusion of music, drama and landscape into one art-form. Gildasso (431-485) wrote plays entirely in prose, and in a new, much more emotional manner than his predecessors. He concentrated on "historical" subjects (pre-361), and claimed that drama should above all be natural and truthful. He encouraged collaboration with all the other arts, and in fact coined the phrase "Total Work of Art" in 455. The Emperor was fascinated by his work, and willingly created whole landscapes to be the setting for his dramas.

Carel also found an outlet for his artistic talents in architecture and landscape. Most notable was the great new Imperial Palace he built some miles to the north-east of Atlantis city. This new Palace was really quite unnecessary and an extravagant waste of money, besides separating the Imperial Court from ordinary people within Atlantis itself. But the design and decoration of the buildings fascinated the Carel, and the results were a genuine collaboration between architects and Emperor.

A GOLDEN AGE

This period in Atlantean history was in later times looked back on as perhaps the most settled and happiest in her history. While Atlaniphon I was granted the accolade of the greatest of the Emperors of Atlantis, presiding over the most glorious and militarily successful period of the Empire, Atlaniphon III reigned during the most peaceful, most settled and happiest era for the inhabitants, a genuine "Golden Age". Carel hated warfare and in his time there was no deliberate external fighting. The only war of any importance, into which Carel had to be forced, was with the king of the Vulcans, Yrulwas, against Razira in 464-466. This was caused by the action of Atlantean traders in Razira secretly supporting revolts against Raziran over lordship. In 464, following a massacre of these traders by the exasperated Razirans, Atlantis and the Vulcans declared war. Razira was ruled by a matriarchal monarchy, and the Queen at this time was Zovahh. The decisive battle of the war was the Battle of Razira in 465.

THE BATTLE OF RAZIRA, 465

The Atlanteans, led by Carel Atlaniphon, had an army of seven Pueggisix, about 66000 men, plus a Local Army of 3000. As well as 50000 infantry, therefore, there was about 6500 light cavalry, 2000 medium cavalry and some 5000 mounted infantry. The Razirans, led by Queen Zovahh, were about 65000 strong, including 35000 swordsmen, including the Royal Band. There were only 5000 medium bowmen, as well as 5000 light bowmen, 9000 medium cavalry and 11000 light cavalry.

The battle, like most fights of this era, consisted of a series of attacks and manoeuvres by different units of the two armies against each other. The Razirans' moves were ill-co-ordinated and fairly random, resembling those of the Atlanteans during the latter part of the First Empire. The Atlanteans of this period, however, attacked and reacted according to a carefully thought out tactical plan, and that is why they nearly always won their battles. (The map shows the order of the attacks).

Firstly of all, the Raziran medium cavalry on their left flank charged and ultimately put to flight the weaker Atlantean cavalry (map 1).. However, the nearest Army prevented further Raziran incursions here. (2). Meanwhile, on their left, according to plan, the Atlantean mounted infantry and cavalry seized a hill on the right of the Raziran position, which was only lightly held by light cavalry. (2). A Yalland Army followed up and took possession of the area. Next, the two frontline Armies on the Atlantean left, Yallands 1 and 2, moved against their opponents. (3). They were held off and the Raziran forces to their left attacked the Atlanteans in flank. (4). The next Atlantean Armies in line, Meistayieh 1 and 2, now advanced and hit the exposed flank of these Razirans, in turn. (5). The battle was, however, still undecided in the centre, so the Raziran Royal Band, led by the Queen herself, now threw itself into the central fray, while some parts of it moved to the right to protect the rest from the growing number of attacks from the Atlantean forces on the left-hand hill. (6). In this crisis, the remaining Atlantean Army, Manralia 1, hastened to the centre and forced back the Royal Band. (7). This was now also attacked in flank from the Atlantean cavalry and infantry on the hill, and the whole Raziran position crumbled. The Queen and the remains of her army fled, leaving behind 15000 casualties. The Atlanteans lost 6300. Soon after, the Razirans admitted defeat, the Queen fled and Razira was made into a dependent state - with a pro-Atlantean princess to rule her.

QUEEN ZOVAHH OF RAZIRA, c464

In government, Carel saw himself merely as an arbiter of last resort, and increasingly abstracted himself from meetings and actual decision-making after the 460s. He could nevertheless assert himself from time to time, and had a wilful, even cruel streak. On several occasions he refused clemency to friends or colleagues whom rumour accused of breaking Atlantean laws (fraud, murder, treason). Famously in 471, and despite pleas from others, he insisted on the death-penalty for one of his nephews, the son of a Controller, who had organised a secret wargame involving real fighting.

Carel had no immediate family, and decided in 468 to adopt as the next Emperor his great friend Thildo Suayofa, an inward-looking artist. Carel's advisors warned him several times that Thildo was not suited to the imperial role, as he was too moody, self-centred and misanthropic. Carel refused to change his mind, and even, finally, banished the last person who criticised his choice. He died in 478, thrown from his horse whilst galloping round a new open-air theatre.

"Atlan folgiens fulgienthe tuaincuyehe tontan toumanan puouthienaxan."

"The Atlantean sun shines brightly on the whole civilized world". ( Gildasso, 468)

2. The Turmoil of the Imperialists and the defeat of the Republic, 610- 629

AUTHORITARIAN REPUBLICANISM

Until 600 the Republic remained under a relatively benign and tolerant regime. Giesti was succeeded as Leader in 597 by Soinin Eliol, a very charismatic and flamboyant woman, who was strongly in favour of equality of rights for women, and had been greatly influenced by the more academic co-writer of the 591 Constitution, Gorzen Pronen. Bronel followed her till 600, but after that a shadow begins to fall over the Republic.

It is particularly frustrating that it is precisely at this point that our sources for Republican - and Imperialist history, for that matter - begin to fail us. This is partly due to the ever-increasing chaos and upheaval which was spreading across the whole Atlantean Empire, as it had been. The Imperialist parts, as we shall see, were beginning to split into separate fiefdoms, with more and more rulers being thrown up, and later disappearing, who claimed to be the new Emperor, or indeed just a commander of a Province or two, but usually at loggerheads with other claimants or pretenders. Other countries - Basquecs, Ughans - begin to invade and occupy portions of Atlantean territory, while another wave of barbarians was battering at the borders. The other chief cause of this dearth of reliable sources is that later regimes wanted to hide or alter the course of events to their advantage, and quite ruthlessly destroyed or altered histories written at this time. Finally, the times were becoming so rough and turbulent that it was very difficult for any would-be writer to find the leisure or access to the sources he needed to write a contemporaneous history.

By 602 a number of political upheavals rend the Republic, as a result of a series of plots by Imperialist agents seeking to subvert or overthrow republican rule in various provinces. This, combined with a renewed flare-up of the war with the Imperialists led to a series of measures limiting democratic freedoms and tolerance, and the overthrow of the liberal regime by a more authoritarian, but non-religious group formerly Scale 4s. Gradually between 602 and 609 the constitution is subverted or changed into a strict authoritarian regime. The Republican Provinces are brought more forcibly under the central control of Atlantis, and many of the notions of the period between 590 and 594 reappear. These include the persecution and expulsion of remaining noble landlords, even if they had earlier agreed to support the Republic and give up most of their lands; restrictions on personal, artistic and religious freedoms; and the promulgation, eventually, of nationalist and secular propaganda. In 610, a dictator in all but name takes over the Republic, pledged to a militaristic, expansionistic and anti-religious regime.

INVASIONS AND INCURSIONS AGAINST THE IMPERIALISTS

Between 600 and 615, the old Imperialist parts of the Empire descended into complete chaos, under the pressures of revolts and rebellions by military leaders and indigenous peoples, as well as invasions from across the borders. By 610 and in the decade following it, a dispassionate observer would have been sure that the Atlantean Empire as such was doomed. It would certainly dissolve into an anarchic swirl of warlords, and the only question remaining would be how far and for how long the profoundly un-Atlantean Republican despotism in the western Provinces would survive a similar fate - certainly it appeared to have no chance of reconquering the old Imperialist areas in the south and east.

The Ughans now held all the west bank of the Gestes, and occupied much of the east of Dravidieh II. Pressure on this front did cease after 610, as a third wave of barbarians attacked the frontiers of Ughrieh, and then the country collapsed into civil war. However these same nomads, fast-moving horsemen, called Nechevif in Skalland, also attacked Atlantean provinces after 612, and soon occupied most of Nunchalcrieh, raiding right down into Chalcrieh II. The Basquecs had occupied Razira, and were invading Yall. Thiss., (Republican) Manralia and Vulcania. The founders of the future Southern Empire ("Rabarrieh") and other tribes began to dominate the Southern Seas and captured most of the smaller Atlantean colonies there, as well as taking hold of the Numedeas area of the Th. Thiss., and creeping north up the river Gosal.

Finally, the nomads - the Jenisdif, literally "strong soldiers" in Skalland, who some 60 years earlier had attacked the north-eastern frontiers of the Empire, had been forced further west by new waves of tribes, the horsemen Jeninechif pressing in from the east after the 580s. They took over the Eliossien Protectorate, and then attacked and finally overwhelmed Eliossie itself by 610. They then pressed into Marossan, which they completely occupied by 615, and attacked Yciel Atlantis, Naokeltanieh and even Republican Atlantis itself. Finally in 612 there began the great North Kelt rebellion, in which these people, fired by the example of the free nomads all around them, and encouraged by the collapse of central authority over their homelands, soon threw off all Atlantean control in Nunkeltanieh and north Nunchalcrieh.

THE COLLAPSE OF IMPERIALIST CONTROL

So much for the pressure on the Imperialists from outside. At the same time they had to cope with a resurgence of fighting with the Republicans after 602 (admittedly initiated by Norro to try to unite his failing Empire), but most debilitating of all, a series of internal revolts. As a result of these various revolts, now to be described, the whole Imperialist part of the Empire split up into a number of independent groups of Provinces, ruled by a selection of Kings, Emperors, Generals and despots. These coalesced into six Powers by about 615, which, in the later writings of Atlantean historians, were enumerated by the letters "A" to "F", for the sake of convenience. These groups fought against the Republicans, the barbarians, and themselves over the next few decades, until one man, Louron Ruthopheax, from the C group of Provinces conquered the Republicans, held off the nomads, and finally overcame all his rivals, and reunited the whole Empire in 648.

THE "OFFICIAL" EMPIRE (GROUP E) : NORRO TO CRECHONNI

The Emperor Norro ruled as the "official" Emperor, and successor to all the Emperors of the First and Second Empire, based in his temporary capital, Atlandravizzi. Already he was shorn of the south-eastern group of Provinces (C), which had declared their independence in 596 under Yeasor. In 603, Norro led his armies against the invading Ughans, and in his absence from the capital, one of his generals deposed him and set himself up as Emperor - this was Meison Suennon, the son of Norro's wife by her first marriage. Norro returned to Dravidieh I to try to drum up army support against Meison, but failed: threatened with capture and execution by troops loyal to Meison, Norro fled across the Gestes and threw himself, and some of the forces still loyal to him, on the mercies of the Ughans, his erstwhile enemies. The Ughans agreed to support him on condition of receiving substantial chunks of Atlantean territory, and in 606 the Ughans, with Norro, reinvade Dravidieh II. After initial successes, they are defeated by Meison, and Norro is wounded and captured. Prevented from committing suicide, he was cruelly tortured and finally killed by having each of his limbs hacked off, one by one, ending at last with his head. This "execution" in itself shows how the rulers of Atlantis, who earlier prided themselves on their humanity and civilisation, had by this stage descended into the depths of barbarity. This coarsening of behaviour and way of life would continue, - indeed increase -, throughout the whole Empire for the next fifty years, and even when the Third Empire was established in 648, its whole ethos was very different to that which prevailed before the Revolution.

THE IMPERIALISTS SPLIT UP

Meison was killed in a brawl and firefight in the Imperial Palace itself, and over the next few years a series of ephemeral Emperors were created and discarded - even their names are not definitely certain now. By 615, when some historical light again shines forth, a former general, of obviously Chalcran origin, called Crechonni, had become Emperor. However, by that time the Provinces over which he ruled had dwindled away. In 608, the southern colony of Siphya (the only colony remaining not captured by the Southern Empire forces) and the Province of Th. Thiss. threw off their allegiance to the shadowy Emperor at Atlandravizzi, and were ruled independently by General Fillasil, who for a while kept a tame, alternative Emperor, Cencon. (Group F).

Then in 611, the Governor of Naokeltanieh (whose command at this point also covered Marossan), General Norcairillel, rebelled and declared himself Emperor with the support of his troops. Determined to challenge the Emperor at Atlandravizzi, he marched on Chalcrieh I, denuding Marossan and much of Naokeltanieh of defenders. The northern barbarians, who had already occupied Eliossie, and were on the borders of Marossan, immediately flooded into Marossan, which they had conquered by 612. Norcairriel, having marched into Chalcrieh II, found himself threatened by the troops in Nunkeltanieh and Nunchalcrieh to the north, who remained loyal to Atlandravizzi. They are led into Naokeltanieh, in Norcairriel's rear, but once again the thereby left Nunkeltanieh empty of defenders. Almost at once the North Kelts, led by Volnan Dortainch, there broke into open revolt against all Atlantean rule, and defeated the Atlantean army when it retraced its steps. Norcairriel also tried to crush the revolt, but is himself overthrown by General Tuingel, of half-Kelt origin. He was able, by 615, to pacify the area, and then declared the Provinces of Naokelt., Nunkelt. and Nunchalc. an independent state under himself. (Group B). He was able to play on the nationalism of the Kelts, identifying with them and holding off attacks against them by barbarians and other Atlantean Provinces.

In 613 the Provinces of Chalcrieh II and Dravidieh I were split from Group E by General Buomil, who declared himself independent of everyone else (Group D). The final independent Group (A) appeared in 618. This was when General Proinen, who ruled Group C (Vulcanieh, Razira and Yall Thiss) invaded Manralia. He had already seized Meistayieh from Group E in 611, and had regained part of Helvrieh from the Republicans after 615; he was now successful in taking Manralia (except for the city and capital of Noehtens) from the Republicans. However his second-in-command, General Yesteyu, waiting till Proinen had returned to Yall Thiss, seized control of the Province himself. (Group A).

THE SUBVERSION OF THE REPUBLIC

By 610 the Republic was being ruled by an extreme left-wing dictatorship, which clamped down ferociously on any opposition, and militantly enforced its ideals of atheism and egalitarianism. Initially the regime was ruled by a rather anonymous committee with two or three people who really wielded power staying behind the scenes - the most powerful was Riuden Bronel. Each ruler was fearfully jealous of all the others, and every so often one or other was denounced, tried and executed for "crimes against the Republic". This regime was also determined to prosecute the war against the Imperialists more vigorously : it denounced its predecessors for adopting a peaceful accommodation with the enemy, and proclaimed that the Republic must take over the whole of the old Empire. This policy also served to deflect opposition from the regime.

So the war with the Imperialists flared up after 612 along the borders in Chalcrieh I and Helvrieh. For a while the impetus of the Republicans and the chaotic state of the Imperialists brought them some success, but by 615 the chaos of the Imperialists spread to the Republicans. Military commanders began to rebel against the unrealistic, arbitrary and often cruel orders of the leadership, and then the leaders of the Republic fell out amongst themselves. War and economic mismanagement led to famine and revolt among the population, and finally the incursions of the northern barbarians through Marossan began to seriously threaten the heartlands of the Republic. By 616 there was general anarchy, and several Republican commanders were making personal arrangements with Imperialist generals for ceasefires, or even secret alliances against other Republican or Imperialist generals who were their enemies. By 618 the Republic, like the Imperialist areas, had collapsed into four or five separate provinces, none giving allegiance to any overall government. Later in that year one commander, Mestaos, took over Atlantis, summarily arrested and executed all the remaining adherents of the dictatorship that he could lay his hands on, instituted a more moderate and pragmatic military dictatorship, and eventually regained control of all the other Republican provinces.

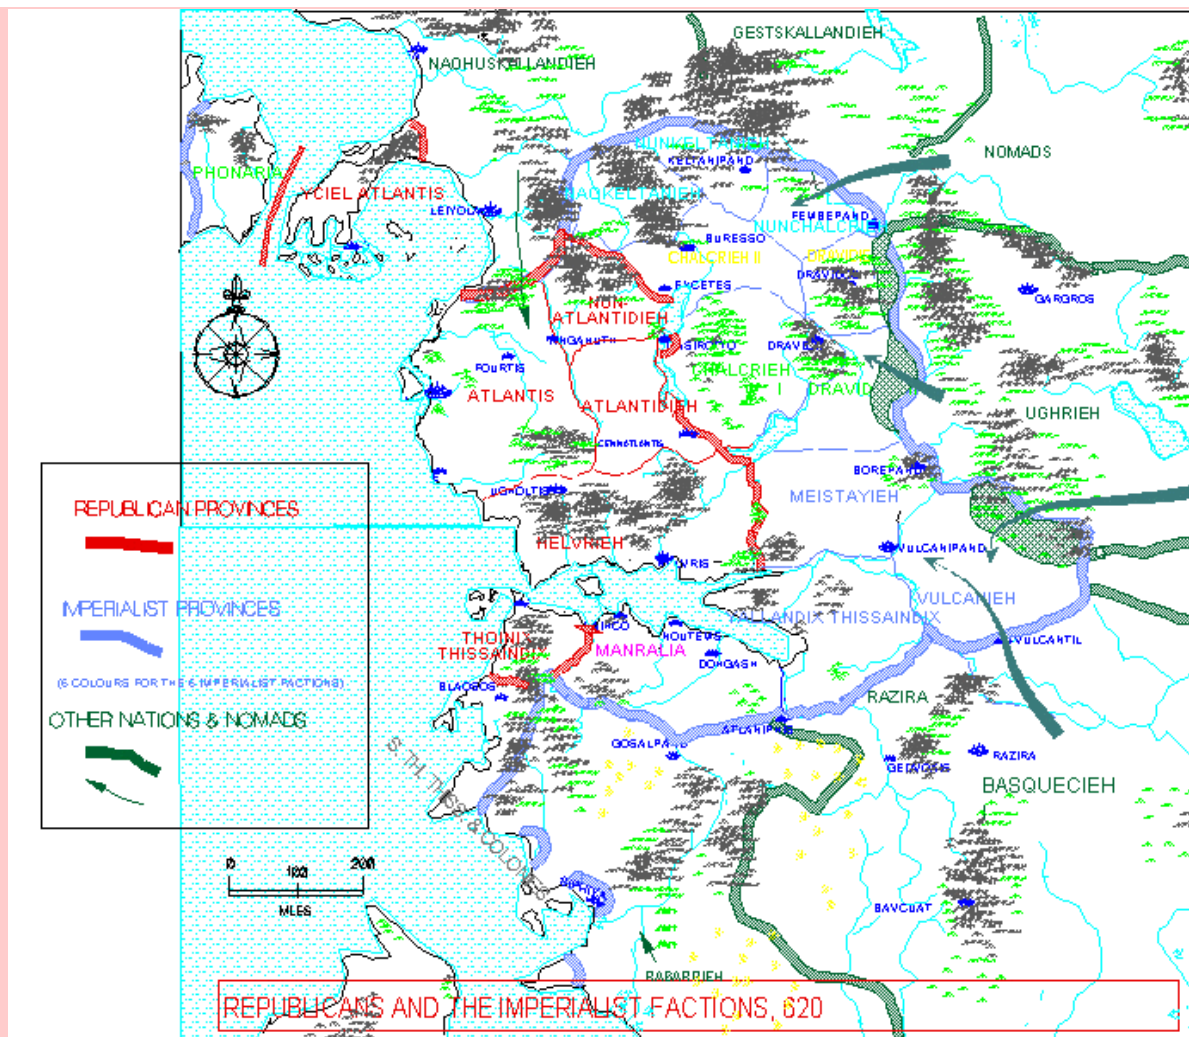

Over the next decade the Republic drifted on, with little forethought or policy, as the military concentrated on keeping control of their provinces and making themselves as rich as they could. Of course there was no longer the slightest pretence of democracy or rule by popular agreement - the old Council had become a rubber stamp before 610, and after a hopeless attempt to reassert itself in 615, was abolished. The mass of people in Republican areas were completely disillusioned by their government in the 620s, and it became more and more difficult for the leaders to inspire its army to fight on its behalf. Later in the 620s, as defeat by the Imperialists loomed ever closer, the Council was reconstituted as a purely advisory body, and later, in a last effort to gain the government some popularity, turned into a unique half civilian, half military republican institution to act as a "Council for Atlantean Salvation", organised according to the old 590s constitution.

THE RECOVERY OF THE IMPERIALISTS UNDER GENERAL PROINEN

The fortunes of the whole former Atlantean Empire touched their nadir in the 610s, yet in the 620s remarkable signs of revival appeared in some Imperialist territories, and by the end of the decade all the Republican Provinces were back again under Imperialist rule - though admittedly under only one of six Imperialist factions. This recovery began in the Provinces called "E" and "C", and were due largely to a new way of waging war, and to one or two men who had the foresight to understand how these innovations could give their armies the edge in battle. In particular we must single out the amazing career of Louron Ruthopheax (to call him by his later Imperial name). His life will be recounted in more detail later, but he, along with Generals Proinen and Treckol, organised the defeat of the Republicans, and marched into Atlantis city in 628. He then became Emperor and over the next 20 years reunited the whole of the former Empire under his control. Then, over the next 20 years he conducted a series of incredible campaigns against the Empire's neighbours, utterly defeating in turn Ugrieh and Basquecieh, and gaining additional territory east of Th. Thiss. At the same time he transformed Atlantean society.

During the 610s, state "C", under General Proinen, created a strong and well-motivated army drawn from his Provinces of Meistayieh, Yall Thiss and Vulcanieh, indulging in almost continual fighting against Republicans, other Imperialists, Basquecs and rebellious southern tribes. Towards the end of the decade this pressure lessened considerably - the Republicans had collapsed, the enmity with other Imperialist groups died down, and the Basquecs' aggression ceased when civil war broke out in the country. This gave the Army the chance to absorb some lessons from the recent revolution in the military art.

THE APPEARANCE OF GUNPOWDER WEAPONS

The most important innovation was the invention of weapons using gunpowder, an advance first made outside the Atlantean Empire, but soon adopted by the Imperialists and the Basquecs. After about 610 General Proinen's armies led the way with the adoption of muzzle-loading gunpowder artillery and then rockets (though not handguns, as the Atlanteans considered crossbows to be more powerful and more accurate in the field). These weapons were rapidly developed, and after 625 or 630, they were able to batter down nearly all the old fortifications which had stood up quite adequately to torsion-powered artillery. These guns were static at first, but became more mobile after 630. This innovation was combined with a new method of warfare - more aggressive and faster moving, seeking battle in the open, and not behind fortifications and earthworks. So light and medium cavalry were increased, and after 620 or so, heavy cavalry appeared armed with crossbow and lance. This hard-hitting, fast-moving aggressive style of warfare helped to beat the Republicans, who had not kept up with these developments. In addition, as it was Group "C"'s armies that led the way in their adoption, they greatly helped them to overcome the Armies of all the other Provinces after 630, and reunite the Empire by 648.

In 621 Proinen was assassinated, and was succeeded by his second-in-command General Treckol, an older but very able man, who was determined to use the new developments in warfare to their fullest extent. With Louron (Ruthopheax) as the commander of one of his armies, Treckol prepared for a decisive campaign against the Republicans.

THE DEFEAT OF THE REPUBLICANS AND THE CAPTURE OF ATLANTIS

Treckol forged a temporary alliance with Crechonni of Group "E" (Chalcrieh I and Dravidieh II), and in 624, while Crechonni assaulted the Republicans frontally along the river Dodolla, he turned their strategic flank across the Cresslepp into north Helvrieh and Atlantidieh. Cennatlantis was captured from the west by Treckol's army, and by 626 the whole of Atlantidieh had been recaptured. After a pause for recuperation, Treckol persuaded Group "D" (Chalcrieh II and Dravidieh I) under General Buomil to join in active warfare against the Republicans. So he pushed on, advancing westwards along the northern flank of the Meilox mountains, and on to the Lillerunix hills. At the same time, Crechonni's slower armies forced the Republicans back by frontal attacks.

In 627, Tuainnatlantis was invaded, and Treckol marched on west, with many skirmishes and small battles, to Yeldis. Treckol was determined to beat Crechonni to Atlantis city, and a race began now, narrowly won by Treckol's armies, under Ruthopheax's direct command, in 628. The Republican government and their armies collapsed in disarray, although a number of the leaders made good their escape to Yciel Atlantis. This now remained the sole surviving Republican Province apart from the Southern Island, as General Yesteyu from Manralia conquered Republican Th. Thiss. in 627. In 629, Treckol was assassinated by an agent of Crechonni, who was furious at Treckol's forces beating him to Atlantis. Following this, Ruthopheax took control of his armies. So, the Imperialists had finally defeated the Republicans after a schism of 40 years; now the question was - would it be possible to reunite the Imperialist Provinces, and if so, who would become the Emperor of the reunited Empire?

Rayix til fouthusil bennuyu ("The sons in the shadow of the father"): Ruthopheax II and III, 670 - 714

1. RUTHOPHEAX II, 670 - 690

Louron (Ruthopheax I)'s son was named Iustos after the great Second Empire ruler, whom his father had admired so much. He was 31 when he came to the throne, and spent the first part - some would say all - of his life trying to escape from the shadow of his great father. Until his father's death in 678, Iustos felt himself completely dominated by the influence of his father, who, though retired and out of government, seemed to be able to project his spirit into the activities and thoughts of his son. Iustos deliberately avoided seeing his father, so far as he was able, but every so often, Louron demanded a visit, or sent him his opinions on a political matter of the day. In particular Iustos was forced under oath to agree to abide by the "Terms of Empire", which his father wrote between 671 and 674, and which were intended to set in stone the form of government and social structure of the Third Empire. Ruthopheax I had also made sure his son had a suitable wife - namely the daughter of the Chief Imperial Adviser, one of his closest friends -, and Iustos married her in 668.

Nevertheless Iustos was forced to compromise his father's wishes in some areas during the first 8 years of his reign. Louron had been virtually forced from power by his Ministers and the Army refusing to take part in any further wars of conquest, and in 671 Iustos agreed to reduce slightly the size of the Army. But he dared not commit himself to abolishing conscription until 679, after Louron's death, despite his personal beliefs that the vast military structure set up by his father was far too expensive to be retained any longer.

THE INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCES AND "LIMITED WAR".

He also came up with the idea of regular International Conferences of Atlantis and the other neighbouring Great Powers. This was really a compromise between his father's plans to conquer or dominate the affairs of other nations (like Ughrieh and Basquecieh, whose governments had Atlantean officials within them), and the more realistic ideas of some statesmen of Iustos's government, who believed that it was impossible for Atlantis to try to run or regulate the whole of the known world. The Conferences aimed to solve international - and perhaps some domestic - problems by diplomatic, rather than military means. At the same time, they would show the world that Atlantis was the most powerful nation of them all, and ultimately they must do as she said - for their own good, of course. These Conferences soon became a regular institution, taking place every 4 years or so (675, 678, 683 and 687-8), and were copied at intervals by later Atlantean Emperors ( However the later Conferences were the result of different state philosophies. Those organised in the mid 700s, during the Fourth Empire, were idealistic plans to perpetuate international peace following the Great Continental War, and were supposed to be based on the dispassionate concepts of reasonableness, international law, and the common needs of humanity. Those of the 850s and 860s were partly a final effort by Atlantis to assert her influence abroad, and were based on the contemporary belief that there were codes of behaviour and morality common to all humanity). Initially the Conferences involved Atlantis, Ughrieh, Basquecieh and Anauren, and the N.E. Empire, "Gestskallandieh") joined in 678. In this Conference, a series of Demilitarised Zones were set up between S.E. Atlantis (around the Razira area) and N. Basquecieh, while as a result of the 683 Conference, an independent Keltish state was set up as a sort of buffer zone between Atlantis and Gestskallandieh, but it was not recognised by Skallandieh (the NW Empire).

Gradually the Conferences became a means of preventing wars or settling border disputes, while the earlier aim of the old-guard Atlanteans, that they would also enforce policies which Atlantis approved of, on the domestic and internal structures of neighbouring states was abandoned. Despite this, Atlantis maintained an immense moral superiority, especially over Basquecieh and Ughrieh throughout this period, and Atlantean nominees retained important posts in the Basquec government, and as rulers or deputies in many of the Ughan states. Atlantis stood above local disputes, and for example settled border skirmishing between Ughan states in the Conference of 687-8. Atlantis now tried to impose agreements on all the other participants relating to the limitation of wars. This meant that any fighting between the signatories had to be put to arbitration after 3 months; armies used were limited in size; prisoner exchanges were agreed in advance; and the invention or use of new weapons was banned.

THE PERSONAL LIFE OF AN EMPEROR

It will be seen that after Luron's death, Iustos felt able to emerge a little from his shell, and became particularly taken up with the notion of International Conferences, by means of which he sought to regulate the world, not by force like his father, but by international agreement. He also slightly loosened up some aspects of the rigid social structure of the Third Empire. But generally his outlook was almost as authoritarian as his father's was, and he could not conceive of any better way of running the Empire. But being less strong-minded and decisive, as well, he relied much more on a small coterie of like-minded advisers. His family life was based on a hypocrisy, which became standard for the Emperors and upper classes throughout the Third Empire. Thus he and his wife produced two children, and seemed to have a happy and conventional family life, while both secretly indulged in various affairs with other members of the ruling elite. These affairs, which challenged the stricter morality of Iustos's father's time, caused some scandal at first, but later became the norm.

Iustos was more constructive than his father in various practical ways, and encouraged the building of state-financed institutions, as well as building great memorial monuments to his father outside Atlantis City and Cennatlantis. He also did much to repair and rebuild towns, which had been damaged by the wars or years of neglect. Despite his dislike of military adventures, and his attempt to freeze military innovations everywhere, Iustos was farsighted enough to commission the rebuilding of the Empire's old fortifications in the new style of low casemates to cope with the threat of gunpowder cannon. His successors made sure this policy was completed.

From early on, Iustos's successor was accepted as his son, in accordance with the strictly hereditary principles laid down in his father's "Terms of Empire". This son, Siphon, was just 21 when Iustos, now aged 46, caught pneumonia in 690, and died after a short illness.

2. RUTHOPHEAX II, 690 - 714

THE REIGN WHICH CHANGED THE DIRECTION OF THE EMPIRE

Siphon Ruthopheax III was personally an unexceptional man. His great passion was the arts, and he surrounded himself with a coterie of artists, whose work he encouraged and furthered. He never married and was probably latently homosexual. He gave little deliberate new direction to the Empire, and yet during his 24 year reign, its whole structure and set-up was changed. It could be said that when he came to the throne, the Empire in itself and its relationship with its neighbours was still as it had been, when it had emerged from the Imperialist-Republican struggles of the first part of the century, and been moulded by Ruthopheax I. Society was rigidly controlled by the Squires, and peoples' classes were immutable. State Theism was strictly imposed on everyone. Atlantis was the single predominant Power on the Great Continent, and still had control of the fates of many other nations by means of force or diplomacy - a sort of "Pax Atlantica" lay over the whole of civilization. Atlantis also laid down strict limits on social changes and the use of any new inventions, especially in the military sphere, which were universally accepted.

By 714, the year of Siphon's death, all of this had either changed or was beginning to change. Processes were well underway, which would lead in 743 to the catastrophe of the Great Continental War between every nation on the Great Continent, and in 750 to the collapse of the Third Empire, with its elitist social structures, and the inauguration of the democratic Fourth Empire and the full-scale industrialisation of the Empire. Thus some increase of social mobility was developing by 714, both between Classes and also town and country. Also by that time, only three of the 12 original cities still had serious barriers between themselves and the countryside. Within towns, merchants began to prosper mightily, and business - even industry- started to take off, with the first small factories being built. Ruthopheax had no revolutionary aims of his own, and such advances as did happen, occurred mostly because the urban multitude, unable to participate in the running of the Empire, absorbed itself in trade and business, taking advantage of the long years of peace, and the growing prosperity of the Empire. In fact there developed something of a flight from country to town after 700, and this led to serious rural depopulation and shortage of labour by the 720s.

THE END OF ATLANTEAN DOMINATION ON THE GREAT CONTINENT

Foreign policy continued as Ruthopheax II had left it, with intermittent summit conferences between the nations, allowing Atlantis to try to enforce its will on them all. In fact relations between the various countries grew more disturbed, and Atlantis had repeatedly to enforce peace-settlements on local conflicts during these Conferences. In 692, war actually began between Atlantis and Ughrieh over the Versciun Pass, where Ughrieh claimed its right to more territory. The fighting was on a small scale, within the limits Atlantis and the other nations had laid down earlier, and the matter was settled, in Ughrieh's favour, at the International Conference no. 5 in 693. At the same time, in the early 690s the N.W. Empire (Skallandieh) began to expand westwards and, reaching the borders of Anauren, became involved in border clashes with it. Atlantis supported Anauren diplomatically and Skallandieh backed down.

The next Conference was not held till 700, and Basquecieh was allowed to occupy a large tract of land south and south-west of Vulcanieh to ward off the encroachments northwards of the Southern Empire (Rabarrieh). Also Atlantis agreed to allow the former Demilitarized Zone on Razira to become an independent, neutral state with a small army. After 703, the various Demilitarized Zones south of Laccues, which were supposed to be independent kingdoms without armies, became caught up in subversion by Atlantis and Basquecieh. In the Conference of 704, both sides agreed to withdraw, and some small territorial adjustments were made.

After 705, however, the whole diplomatic/moral superiority of Atlantis over her neighbours, and the Conference set-up itself started to collapse, as nations began to assert themselves, and Atlantis found herself unable to control them. This in turn led to gradual militarization, and the use of new weapons in conflicts, which had formerly been forbidden. After 703, Basquecieh fell under the control of various military leaders and adventurers. Then between 705 and 713 the five states into which Ughrieh had long been divided began an internecine war, ending with unification under just one emperor. Atlantis found her proteges in the defeated states summarily removed from power, and Ruthopheax could not, or would not, interfere. He had in fact withdrawn himself from active ruling almost completely, and Atlantis' foreign policy became very feeble in this period, due to continual power-struggles between Imperial Officers. In 711 Gestskallandieh, having unsuccessfully demanded an International Conference to discuss and condemn Ughrieh's unification, as well as its clashes with the assertive Skallandieh, unilaterally quit the Conferences. Skallandieh followed suit at once. Immediately after, it occupied the east of the independent Kelt state, while Skallandieh took over the west of it - and again Atlantis was impotent to interfere.

In 713 Atlantis finally persuaded Ughrieh and Basquecieh, plus Anauren, to come to another Conference (no. 8). This was doomed from the start. Bitter recriminations flew about: against Ughrieh for reuniting; against Basquecieh for the militarization of its government; and against Atlantis for not acting at all. Both Ughrieh and Basquecieh insisted on being allowed to choose their own constitutions and foreign policy (now that both had new governments), and in the end Basquecieh walked out. After this Atlantis's only close ally was Anauren, and she lost all control over the governments of the other Great Powers.

THE ARTS DURING THE EARLY THIRD EMPIRE, 650-714

All the styles of art, which were popular during the Second Empire either died out or were ruthlessly crushed in the period after 590. The Republicans hated elitist art and abolished all esoteric art (and many esoteric artists), encouraging only Nationalist and Popular art. The Imperialists of course could not permit Popular art either, and this meant that in the period after about 630, the only public art was nationalistic art, which praised the new regime of Ruthopheax I.

In general terms, all the art forms became more small-scale and intimate, and sought to deal with personal or family matters, or, in the case of music, concentrated on chamber music. Second Empire-type large-scale Total Works of Art, or grandiose dramas of political and national destiny vanished as if they had never been. Clearly the mood of the times did not encourage any criticism or even commentary on political or social matters, and artists felt more secure in dealing with non-controversial topics.

Painting had been the predominant art form in the 600-660, depicting scenes of epic grandeur which glorified the regime. Afterwards painting reverted to purely domestic or landscape scenes.

A small model of a horse and rider, believed to be of Ruthopheax III. This sort of small-scale, intimate art is typical of this period. Artist unknown, date around 700.

Music, as we have seen, concentrated on chamber works after 660. As far as literature was concerned, poetry took over from drama as the most favoured art form. At first it went through a neo-classical, then a nature-descriptive phase, but later, especially in the reign of Ruthopheax III, who took a great interest in poetry, a deeper, more psychological style of writing came to the fore. The foremost poet in this style was Gialloni (fl 685-715). This was a sort of harbinger of the "psychological" novel, which was popular after the 720s. Before that time, after the 690s, novel writing consisted of little more than simple story-telling.

Finally architecture. After the functionalist and military-style building of the Republican and Imperialist periods, using brick and stone, the Squires interested themselves in large mansions, placed in vast country landscapes. Brick was used, covered in stone cladding. The style is less forbidding than in the earlier decades, with a number of smaller buildings instead of one huge one, each some two storeys high, with pillars and rounded arches, and linked together by chains of columns. Ordinary town-dwellings were now invariably made of brick, and were unpretentious in character.

THE DEATH OF RUTHOPHEAX III, AND THE CATASTROPHE OF THE SUCCESSION

Days after Basquecieh had walked out of the Conference, which was being held in Bradghus, a town on the border with Ughrieh in the foothills of the kuadgh (mountains), Ruthopheax was assassinated by a man who was himself killed as he tried to escape. He had shouted "Land for all - death to the tyrant" as he stabbed the Emperor, and it emerged later that he had come from Ughrieh. Some saw this as an Ughan plot, and this further embittered relations between Atlantis and Ughrieh. Ruthopheax III had no heir, and the next in line was Ruthopheax II's brother, who was now 70 years old. This man, Louron, was well-known as a die-hard reactionary, who worshipped his father, Ruthopheax I. Liberal advisers had tried to persuade Ruthopheax III to nominate one of his father's illegitimate sons as successor, but Siphon prevaricated. In the end he is supposed to have agreed, but following his death, during the short but vicious power-struggle between councillors, this will was destroyed and a forged one nominating Louron produced. Louron's faction gained the upper hand, and several liberals were executed or banished, including all Ruthopheax's sons. Army units patrolled Cennatlantis, beating or murdering protestors and everyone else at will.

The war spreads to the whole Continent, 744

THE BASQUECS CROSS THE RIVER GESTES

By the beginning of 744, Gossalt had lined all his armies up on the south bank of the river Gestes, and was ready to start the second part of the campaign – to cross the river, defeat the Atlanteans, and, along with the Ughans further north, to occupy Nunhelvengieh and Dravidieh. His plans thereafter would obviously depend on circumstances, but he recognised that his main objective must be to seize the strategically important hills and fortresses of the Crolde Mountains (Dravizzi, Atlandravizzi and Dravidos), to clear his flank and rear before advancing on Cennatlantis. He assumed he would have to approach the latter from the north-east, across the river Burastoura and through the Province of Cennatlantis, but he could make diversionary threats from Nunhelvengieh across the rivers Helveslepp and Burtounna towards the south of Cennatlantis and towards Helvris. He hoped to involve the Ughans directly in all his offensives.

Gosscault collected forces amounting to 150000 men south of Vulcanipand, and encouraged the Ughans to distract the enemy with attacks across the Gestes, especially against Borepande, which was an immensely strong position. By his conquests the previous year, Gosscault had cleared the whole river Gairase of enemy forces, and now he slipped a large armada of transport boats, supported by some small warships, all long since prepared, down the Gairase and into the southern arm of the Helvengio. The Atlantean navy was based at Giezuat on the Helvremon (island), and its nearest units were off Noehtens, aiding the defenders there, who were under siege by a Basquec Army. So the armada was able to pass unseen along and into the river Gayvot, which ran the across the Jutish peninsula to the river Gestes itself. Again, Basquec troops had earlier crossed the Gayvot, and although they were still bogged down trying to conquer the recalcitrant Jutes (a task not completed till much later in the year, and thereafter limited by incessant guerrilla warfare), they had cleared the land on both sides of this river. In order to distract Atlantean warships at the mouth of the Gestes, the Basquecs made a number of offensive forays towards Noutens from the Gairase. Thus the Atlanteans were to be completely surprised by the crossing of the Basquec army over the Gestes by means of these boats.

The Atlanteans, indeed, thought they were prepared for an attempted enemy crossing, and had small picquets spread along the banks of the river, a strong force at Borepande and Vulcanipand fortresses, and a large army of 105000 men north of Vulcanipand, ready to react in any direction against an attempted Basquec attack. These forces included the remnants of those defeated in Vulcanieh (about 60000), plus reinforcements from the west (30000). Other armies were rushed over to defend Dravizzi, Helvris and Cennatlantis itself, all of which now suddenly appeared under threat. Gosscault, however, carried out one of his cleverest manoeuvres to cross the Gestes, feinting an attack at Vulcanipand with 30000, then secretly shifting 80000 westwards to his planned crossing point, by the boats. Another 400000 marched eastwards again, and tried to cross the Gestes there. Most succeeded, and quickly moved east, where they came up against the main Atlantean army from north-west of Vulcanipand, which moved west against them. Outnumbered 75000 to 40000, the Basquecs soon retired westwards, holding off the Atlantean pursuit with their powerful weapons. During this time (the first days of March), the rest of the Basquec army crossed the river by boat, and immediately moved east on the north bank to strike the Atlantean army. They came up with them from a north-westerly direction, at first only 30000, with the remaining 50000 following fast behind. In the subsequent Battle of Vulcanipand (March 4th-5th), the Atlanteans, facing equal numbers, at first held the enemy off, but on the second day, as Basquec reinforcements steadily moved up, they were signally defeated, with Basquec cavalry and mounted infantry smashing into their flanks.

Gosscault exploited his victory with the same vigour as earlier at the Battle of Zhadvech. While a small force moved west to Vailat to protect the flank, The main Basquec Army pursued the Atlanteans eastwards. The Atlanteans deliberately made for Borepande, leaving Vulcanipand to its fate. The Basquecs followed on the Atlanteans' heels, and allowed the Atlanteans no time to make a stand on the Huainarayix, the hills on which the fortress of Borepande stood. Attacked from in front by over 50000 Ughans, and with 80000 Basquecs rushing in from the rear, the Atlanteans tried to halt the Basquecs here, but were decisively crushed and put to flight.

The Atlanteans, who had "what if" scenarios planned for almost every eventuality, had long realised that if an attacker crossed the Gestes and defeated their armies, they could retire and make a stand in the large Borepande complex, or retreat to the Croiden Hills. Although Borepande could act as a fairly secure base, and would be dangerously on the flank of an enemy advance northwards past it, most strategists considered it would be safer to retire on Atlandravizzi. In the reality of this war, with the Basquecs carrying all before them, and the Ughans attacking all along the Gestes, the Atlanteans realised they had no choice. One small corps of 20000 was forced into Borepande, but the rest of the army moved off north. It was followed up by the Basquecs, moving towards the Croiden Hills. The Atlantean armies were now very demoralised, and were unable to make a serious stand until they reached the Croiden Hills 200 miles away.

THE ASSAULT ON THE CROIDEN HILLS

Gosscault advanced northwards as fast as he could after the Atlanteans, through Pustabuataya and Giestisso on the river Burastoura. He paused briefly here for a quick reorganisation, and to co-ordinate his moves with the Ughans

The latter were still largely held up before the Atlantean fortifications along the northern part of the Gestes, but once the fortress of Borepande had been attacked from the rear and then surrounded and besieged, the Ughans found themselves able to strike north up the western bank of the Gestes, rolling up the Atlantean forts one by one. So their army of about 50000 men from Borepande, with some help from a smaller Basquec force, moved onto Atlanipand in April, and were able to storm and capture it after two weeks. This army continued northwards, joining up with other armies on the river Galos, and invested Puegathis in May.

Meanwhile Gosscault moved to force the Atlantean position at Atlandravizzi, and seize as much of the Croiden Hills as he could. The Atlanteans had concentrated quite a large armies hereabouts, although they were also distracted by the possible threat of the Ughans from the south-east, up the river Thyggis. Gosscault also tried to encourage them to believe he might cross the Burastoura at Giestisso, and make a lunge on the capital. In fact, he knew this would be extremely dangerous while the Croiden Hills were still held by the enemy, and knew he had to clear the Hills first. A first, fairly frontal assault on Atlandravizzi failed, but then, on May 5th, he contrived an attack from the west and a feint from the east. This Battle of Atlandravizzi, fought between 110000 Basquecs and about 95000 Atlanteans was extremely hard-fought, but the Basquecs still reaped the benefits of their superior weaponry – they had more long-range breech-loading cannon, and half as many again breech-loading rifles as the Atlanteans. (Both sides still had crossbows, but the Basquecs had few enough of them to be able to keep them out of the front line.) In the end, the Atlanteans retired, still in good order, to the massive fortress of Dravizzi, twenty miles further north.

Gossalc now decided his initial impetus was spent, and used the next two months to rest and reorganise, and plan his next strategic moves and diplomatic initiatives.

SKALLANDIEH ATTACKS ANAUREN – THE BATTLE OF PHAIOSO

Gossalc had helped to rearm Skallandieh for some years, and encouraged her to attack Anauren as soon as possible, hoping thereby to bring Atlantis into the war on Anauren's side – or even, on Skallandieh's side, enabling the two countries to gobble up Anauren between them. Either way, Atlantis would be distracted from her war-effort on the Gestes, and have to transfer troops westwards to Anauren. Skallandieh was usually nervous of provoking Atlantis, although she dearly wanted to occupy Anauren, and seize her ports. Gossalc had already provided Skallandieh in the person of its Emperor, Sherecim Gochosi Gishi, and future war-leader, Gochel, with a detailed and brilliantly conceived plan of how to invade Anauren.

He suggested that the armies should advance quickly to the sea, at the same time as the navy moved south from its bases north of Yciel Atlantis. (In fact it should have moved nearly to the Bay of Marossan even before war was declared.) Then the navy would move towards Phaiosos to hem in the Anauren navy, while the army occupied the naval ports. The Anauren navy would then be forced either to surrender, or to fight it out with the Skallandieh navy, which would be in a superior position within the cramped and island-dotted bay. The Skalland navy had also benefitted from the advice of Gossalc's naval advisers and was much larger and more modern than the Anauren fleet, with breech-loading cannon on most ships and some which were ironclad and propelled by steam. Thus the Anauren navy would be defeated, and most of it should indeed be captured by the Skallandans. Now all depended on Atlantis' attitude. The less likely possibility was that it would join Skallandieh with the proviso that it should occupy the southern part of Anauren. The more likely outcome, which Gossalc tried to conceal from Gochel, was that it would declare war on Skallandieh. If so, Skallandieh would have obtained a large navy, and should be able to seriously threaten Atlantis from both land and sea. The matter of how to crew all these additional Anauren warships would be solved partly by using their original Anauren sailors, who would simply be "taken over" by Skallandieh, and partly by training in advance a reserve Skalland "navy" of trained sailors, who would join the Anauren ships, once they were under Skalland control.

Gochel hesitated when Gossalc declared war on Atlantis in 743, and insisted on waiting till Atlantis seemed completely committed to the war, and indeed was apparently succumbing to the Basquec/Ughan onslaught. Gossalc finally persuaded him to attack Anauren on June 1st 744. The attack came as a real surprise to both Anauren and Atlantis, despite the years of secret preparations by Skallandieh. In earlier years, Gochel had indeed mooted the possibility of an alliance with Anauren, and a joint invasion of Atlantis, especially Yciel Atlantis. The build-up of Gochel's army could be disguised as a preparation for war against Atlantis, with or without Anauren's help. At the same time, there was a sizeable Skalland-friendly fifth column within Anauren, ready to act as soon as Skallandieh invaded.

The invader's armies concentrated around the fortress of Marossulo, and the main force made straight for Phaiosos, Anauren's chief naval base, keeping north of the river Ruphaio, which thus protected its flank. At the same time, the Skalland fleet sailed round the Phonerian headland and into the Bay of Marossan, making for Phaiosos from the sea. The Anauren army was mostly concentrated to the south of the Ruphaio, watching Atlantis, and overwhelming numbers, plus a series of flanking movements led to its complete defeat. Forcing it to retreat to the north, the first units of the Skalland army reached Phaiosos as soon as 5th June. Resistance en route was seriously impeded by sabotage caused by Skalland secret agents.

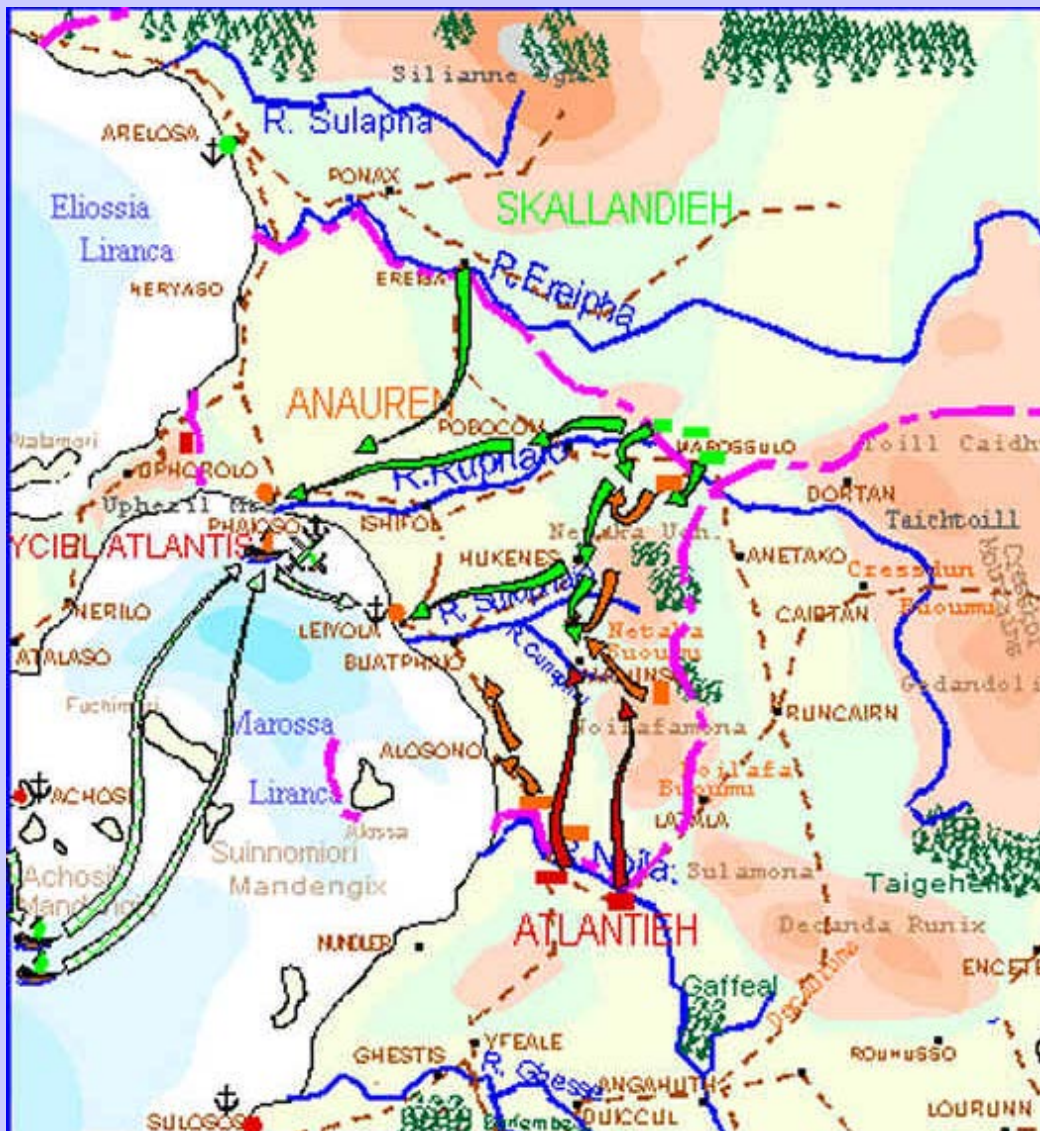

The Anauren navy was taken completely by surprise. Part of it had put to sea when the war began, but retired close to the port, as the Skalland navy approached from the west. On 6th June, the small force defending Phaiosos was contemptuously pushed aside by the arriving Skallands, and cavalry and infantry poured into the harbour. They fired at the ships, soon using cannon. The navy half-heartedly fired back, but the admiral realised he was seriously damaging the town, then ceased cannon fire. Some of his navy was meanwhile exchanging shots with the approaching Skalland ships, a few miles out to sea. He ordered his whole force to set sail and move out of the port, against the Skalland navy. But the Skalland army commander now requested a short truce, and suggested the Anauren situation was hopeless, and she should surrender her ships to the Skallands. Indignantly refusing at first, the Admiral was now faced with a few ships and sailors refusing to fight – these were fifth-columnists of the Skallands, and the Anauren sailors they had won over. In themselves, they were insignificant, but they started a slide to insubordination, fright and loss of the will to fight by many Anauren sailors. Fighting began again on land and at sea, and the Admiral was soon wounded. Surrenders now began in earnest. Some ships still anchored or moored in the harbour were simply boarded and taken over. Others were forced to give up when beaten by Skalland firing. Still others went and fought it out at sea, but their attacks were unco-ordinated, and they were in any case badly outnumbered. Most of these, too, surrendered or sailed away. They joined others, which tried to slip down the coast, but nearly all were eventually caught by the Skallands. Only a few reached neutral (later friendly) Atlantean waters, or survived for a time as independent privateers, dodging around the seas, avoiding major Skalland forces, and attacking isolated merchant ships. By 8th June, the Battle of Phaiosos was over, and conclusively won by the aggressors.

THE SKALLANDS CONQUER ANAUREN AS FAR AS THE RIVER SULOPHAIO, AND ATLANTIS DECLARES WAR

During these dramatic events in the north of Anauren, other Skalland forces were fighting in the south. Two columns from Marossulo attacked south of the river Ruphaio, and came up against stronger resistance as they slowly pressed southwards. After three battles, the Anauren troops were forced to the south of the river Buatphaio, but repulsed all attempts by the enemy to cross it. Meanwhile the right-hand column moved west down the river to the sea, and attacked the capital, Leiyola. This was also a port, but had very few ships based there. Following the victory at Phaios, part of the Skalland navy had made for Leiyola, defeated a small force which it met en route, and blockaded the rest of the Anauren ships in port. But the army defending the capital put up a strong resistance against the Skalland attackers. Nevertheless, the port commander knew the outcome could only go one way, and on June 28th, he ordered the scuttling of the Anauren ships in the harbour. Then, to save further destruction, he surrendered the town, and committed suicide.

By July, the whole of the north of Anauren was in Skalland hands, and its government had fled south to Alosono. General surrender seemed to be the only conceivable option now, but then Atlantis intervened. She had watched the defeat of Anauren with some equanimity at first, but the surrender of most of her navy to the Skallands horrified her. Brancerix demanded Skallandieh should withdraw, and hand back the navy. Gochel refused, and Anauren begged Atlantis for help. Atlantis sent one army north to help defend the Ruphaio, while Skallandieh threatened to attack Atlantis on other fronts. Her southern army forced the Anauren troops finally back over the Ruphaio in the east, and advanced to the Sulophaio. Atlantean troops entered the fortress of Amounoso, which Skalland forces attacked in vain. At this point, July 19th, Atlantis declared war, and moved two more armies into southern Anauren. This virtually halted the Skalland occupation of Anauren for the rest of the year.

THE BATTLES OF TUELLPLAS AND THE BASQUEC SEIZURE OF THE CROLDEN HILLS

As Gossalt had hoped, the declaration of war between Skallandieh and Atlantis upset the Atlanteans' strategic thinking. They had hoped to hold the Basquecs, and Ughans, at bay from the Dravizzi-Dravidos positions, and meanwhile build up an army to counterattack, either across the Burastoura, or down the right bank of the Gestes, or even round the south of Lake Trannolla, against the Basquecs' line of communications with Vulcanieh. But now they needed to strengthen their positions in Yeldatlantis, Yciel Atlantis and Naokeltanieh, which only held a total of 4 ½ Armies between them. Reinforcements were sent here, which otherwise would have gone to the east. But at first, in early July, the Atlanteans scored a success against the Ughans. The latter had been blockading the fort of Dravipand for months, and finally decided to side-step it to the south, and come round in rear of it. Gossalt had warned them earlier not to underestimate the Atlanteans, and wait till this army could be linked up with the one, which had been besieging Pueggathis since May. However the Ughans went ahead, and in the First Battle of Tuellplas, were duly struck on their right flank by an Atlantean army, which consisted of most of the army from Dravipand, plus considerable reinforcements rushed down from Dravidos.

Duly chastened, the Ughans now listened to Gossalt, when he proposed a plan to defeat the enemy using the combined forces of Atlantis and Ughrieh. Firstly, while staying on the defensive at Atlandravizzi, he moved a force across to help the speed the Ughans' capture of Pueggathis. This fell on July 4th. By now, Skallandieh was at war with Anauren, and Gossalt expected Atlantis to become embroiled very shortly. Thus he decided to wait for a few more weeks. Sure enough, by July 17th the Atlanteans and Skallands were at war, and the Atlantean armies in Cennatlantis and Dravidieh would henceforth have to manage without any support.

Gossalt aimed to lure the Atlantean army out from its strong defensive positions in Dravizzi and Dravidos, by setting up a trap for them. The Ughans were to be the bait. So, at the beginning of August, the Ughan army still overseeing the siege of Dravipand moved ostentatiously southwards towards Tuellplas. At the same time, the Ughans at Pueggathis started moving northwards to link up with them. However, even when joined, the two armies would only amount to about 80000 men. The Atlantean army at Dravipand (apart from the force besieged in the town) was about 45000, with another 45000 south of Dravidos. These two followed the Ughans, and linked up. Meanwhile Gossalt had quietly moved a force of 60000 Basquecs from Atlandravizzi to Bratatinnu. Here it lay on the Atlanteans' flank, west of the river Thyggis. The Atlanteans, however, became nervous of this flank, and, thinking better of surprising the Ughans, retreated some way north to a hilly, defensive position west of Tuellplas. The combined Ughan armies followed them, and attacked them on August 7th in the Second Battle of Tuellplas.

They made no impression on the first day, but then, when the Atlanteans were fully involved in the fight, Gossalt and his Basquecs loomed up from the south-west, and smashed into their flank. The Atlanteans were decisively defeated, with over 20000 casualties, and they reeled back north. Gossalt, perhaps mistakenly, left the Ughans to pursue them, because he wanted to return quickly to Atlandravizzi, in case the Atlantean army in Dravizzi decided to strike south, while he and half his army was away over at Tuellplas. As a result of a sluggish pursuit, the Atlanteans mostly escaped back to Dravipand and Dravidos.

Nevertheless, this battle was decisive for the possession of the Crolden Hills. When the Ughans did reach Dravipand, the Atlanteans there all retired to Dravidos, and, despairing of relief, the defenders of Dravipand surrendered on August 19th. Now Gossalt helped himself to a contingent of Ughans, and in the middle of September advanced with over 110000 men on Dravizzi. Unwilling to be trapped in the fortifications, and cut off from Cennatlantis, the Atlanteans met the Ughans for battle on open ground. In this First Battle of Dravizzi, the Basquecs and Ughans were victorious, though only after suffering heavy losses. The Basquecs' superiority in weaponry was by now much smaller. The Atlantean army retreated north and then west across the Burastoura, forming up again behind Yellis, where there was already a moderate force of Atlanteans. A brave rearguard prevented Gossalt from pursuing them closely.

GESTSKALLANDIEH JOINS THE CONFLICT, WHICH BECOMES CONTINENT-WIDE

Throughout July and August, Atlantis was seeking desperately for allies, surrounded as she now was by her enemies. Quendelie rebuffed her, determined to remain neutral, but Gestskallandieh had long been at loggerheads with Skallandieh, and now saw her chance to strike her in the back, while she was preoccupied in the west. So on August 30th, Gestskallandieh, under her Leader, Hizilpir, joined Atlantis against Skallandieh, though not Ughrieh or Basquecieh: indeed, she went out of her way to express her neutral intentions to Ughrieh, in particular. However, Ughrieh now herself saw a chance of striking Gestskallandieh in the back, as the two countries had long been rivals across their joint frontier. Without asking for Gossalt's agreement, which she knew would not be forthcoming, Tjaidon, the Ughan Emperor, hastily concentrated troops along the northern Gestes, and the river Gargros, and attacked Gestskallandieh, without declaring war, on October 3rd. This act of treachery was decried by Atlantis and all her allies, (despite Skallandieh's somewhat similar action a few weeks earlier), and it does indeed show how the stress of war was lowering the normal standards of political behaviour. Even Gossalt offered no public support, and the Ughan action strained relations between the two countries to the limit. This was not for any moral qualms: Gossalt was quite happy to see a potential enemy of Skallandieh thus "neutralised"; but the time and the manner of the act appalled him. The way in which it was performed branded Ughrieh, and thus its allies, in the world's eyes as uncivilised, while the withdrawal of Ughan troops from the central Gestes front stymied any immediate action Gossalt might have wanted to take against the Atlanteans there, so soon after their recent defeat.

THE ATLANTEANS COUNTER-ATTACK IN NUNHELVENGIEH – THE BATTLE OF VAILAT

A further hindrance to a continuing Basquec attack across the Burastoura was an unexpected counter-attack by the Atlanteans from south of Cennatlantis across the river Burtounna and into east Nunhelvengieh. This was planned deliberately to threaten Gossalt's communications back across the Gestes around Vulcanipand, and it was the brainchild largely of General Lingon, who commanded these armies. A force of 55000 was collected from the west of Nunhelvengieh, and reserves in Cennatlantis, and concentrated on the high ground south of Lake Trannolla, where the two rivers Burtounna and Helveslepp had their sources. This hill was of great strategic importance, in that it protected the southern approaches to Cennatlantis and Helvris from eastern attacks. But the local Basquec army had made only a feeble attempt to capture it earlier in the year, and had then retired some way east, where it remained ever since. It was only 35000 strong, and was thus easily overwhelmed by the Atlantean attack on September 25th.

It retreated slowly east to Vailat, and on Gossalt's orders, collected in reserves from Vulcanipand and south of the Gestes. But these were few, and in the First Battle of Vailat, the Basquecs again came off worse, though more narrowly. Gossalt was not seriously worried about his communications, but saw a chance to strike at the flank of this army. Ordering the southern army to try to maintain its position, he personally set off south with 40000 men from his main army. The distance was over 150 miles, but the Basquecs marched it in 4 days. As the southern Basquec army fell further back towards Vulcanipand, Gossalt and his force suddenly loomed up out of the north. Fortunately for the Atlanteans, General Lingon was a cautious man, and had many cavalry screens out. These gave him just enough warning of the arrival of Gossalt, and in the Second Battle of Vailat, he was able to stave off outright destruction, and scuttled back to the hill where he had started. The news of Ughrieh's declaration of war on Gestskallandieh now reached Gossalt, and he abandoned any further movement west, and hurried back to the Crolden Hills.

As a result of this declaration of war, the Ughans undertook no further actions that year here, except to advance on Dravidos, and observe it from a safe distance. Gossalt made one tentative lunge across the Burastoura at Yellis in November, but then he too settled down where he was to reorganise and prepare for a campaign against Cennatlantis in 745.

OTHER THEATRES OF WAR

The other important area of action in this war, which now embraced the whole of the Continent, was in the south. In Manralia, the Basquecs pressed across the Trothyum, and advanced as far as Louprut in the south, while on the coast of the Helvengio, they captured Noehtens, and occupied the Algrunix Hills, surrounding the port of Raihco.

Meanwhile further south, in the war against Rabarrieh, a combined Atlantean and Rabarran army held off Basquec assaults on the Siphians Ugholix, west of the river Gosal, and limited their movements to the east. In the far south, Basquec forces crossed the river Basquec and gained control of its delta. At the end of the year, the Basquec navy inflicted a serious defeat on the Rabarran navy, most of which was thereafter blockaded in its harbours. The Atlanteans also had a navy in these waters, of course, which had not been co-operating as closely with the Rabarrans, as it should have been. This was in fact the Basquecs' next target.

Crisis for Atlantis – her enemies close in for the kill, 745

ATLANTIS BEGINS THE OVERHAUL OF ITS MILITARY ORGANISATION AND STRATEGY

It was not until the First Battle of Vailat, and the advance of the Basquecs into Nunhelvengieh, that Atlantis really understood that she faced a crisis greater than any other in her history, certainly since the Revolutionary Wars of the 600s, and possibly even since the Helvran Wars of the Third Century. The main concern of Brancerix, the Imperial Generalissimo, and the other Imperial Officers of State who ran the Empire and the Army, was to sort out the Army. As early as January 744, all Internal Security Armed Forces were amalgamated into the main Armies, while the rearming of all forces with breech-loading rifled weapons to match the Basquecs went on more and more rapidly. Uniforms were also changed over the next year or so: the "picturesque" style of the Third Empire, with breeches, long socks, boots, large hat and elaborate coat, was abolished. In its place, the new rifle-armed infantry wore a close leather hat, a tighter-fitting jacket with fewer decorations, and trousers and socks or gaiters.

As casualties mounted, and Gossclat advanced to the Croiden Hills, the Atlantean regime realised that it needed to create massive reinforcements for the fronts, and limited conscription was now introduced. After the entry of Skallandieh into the war, conscription was extended.

Atlantean soldier, c746

By 745, there were about 40 Armies in the field, each in theory about 23000 men strong, with up to 150000 inland, garrisoning fortresses, or being trained. These PUEGGISIX were now grouped into BORPUEGGISIX (Grand Armies) of from 3 to 7 Armies each. One of more of these BORPUEGGISIX defended the various fronts, on which Atlantis faced her enemies. These Fronts became "official" after 745, and each had its own Commander, or Grand General. The Fronts in 745-5 were Central (around Cennatlantis and north), Nunhelvengieh, Manralia, Siphia and the extreme south, and Anauren (the front opposite Skallandieh). Some changing of generals had begun in 744, but thereafter the successive Atlantean disasters led Brancerix to a much greater overhaul of his whole administration. At the start of 745, the commander of the Central Front, as it became, was dismissed and replaced by General Buentel, who had impressed Brancerix by his tenacious defence in the battle of Dravizzi. The northern front, against Skallandieh, was handed to General Elthul in 746, to try to retrieve the situation there.

But the war was producing other, larger-scale social changes in Atlantis as well. Conscription and larger armies increased social mobility and a desire for change from the moribund and rigid Third Empire structure, with all power still being in the hands of the Squires. Factories had to be built, and production increased to meet the demands for new weapons, and this strengthened the status and power of middle-class businessmen and factory-owners. The military disasters of 743-746 led to a realisation by everyone that the current military structure and personnel were ossified. Brancerix, to give him credit, soon realised this, and gradually made changes, which brought non-noble but efficient commanders to the fore, purely as a result of merit, not birth. Such men, who also entered some parts of government in the crisis of the times, would not willingly want to relinquish power again, after the war was over.

And what of the Emperor himself? It has to be said that he rose to the occasion. He knew his limitations, and made no attempt to lead his armies, or pretend to be a great general, like Gossalt on the other side. Rather, he made himself a facilitator, the person who organised the whole Atlantean war-effort at the administrative level, sacking and appointing men as needed, and making sure supplies reached the fronts, and, above all, that Atlantis never admitted any possibility of defeat, even in the darkest hours of 745 and 746.

DISASTER IN THE EAST – THE ATLANTEANS ARE FORCED BACK TO CENNATLANTIS

Gossclalt spent the winter of 744-5 refining the next stage of his attack against the Atlanteans from the Crolden Hills. His great objective was the capital, Cennatlantis. He was certain that if he could once take that city, Brancerix would at the very least consent to negotiations towards peace, and would perforce have to hand over large tracts of territory. The Basquecs now had about 230000 men facing the Atlanteans north of the Gestes, while the Ughans had 170000, that is 400000 altogether. This far outnumbered the Atlanteans, who had about 310000 facing their enemies in these areas. Gossclalt planned a double-pronged attack against Cennatlantis: the northern prong would cross the river Burastoura, while the southern approached south of Lake Trannolla. This force would also try to find the chance to advance on to Helvris, which lay only 70 miles or so further west. The northern army also contained a token force of 18000 Ughans, though for Gossclalt, the main function of the Ughans would be to protect his northern flank.

The chief problem was how to deal with the Atlantean army at present sitting at Yellis. Gossclalt decided on a feint against Yellis with 20000 men, while the main army, of 120000 men, crossed the Burastoura some 20 miles to the north, hit the Atlanteans in flank, brushing them southwards, while most of the Basquecs stormed on south down the main road to Cennatlantis, behind the now demoralised Atlantean army. Gossclalt knew there were various defences on the hills near Snattarona, and around Cennatlantis itself, but hoped that his speed of movement would enable him to sweep through these.

General Buentel, who now commanded the Atlantean armies on this front, (about 120000 along the Burastoura, with another 100000 facing the Ughans north of Dravidos), was ready for tactical trickery by Gossclalt, and was not taken in by the feint at Yellis, with which the Basquecs began their campaign on March 10th 745. He heard of the main Basquec crossing of the river further north, and rushed most of his forces there to confront it (about 80000 in the end). In the scrappy running battle that ensued, the Basquecs' advance was halted for a time, but Buentel was unable to force them backwards, and was himself gradually outflanked to the north. Outnumbered as he was, he retreated on March 12th westwards to the Babemme woods, which he thought would make a good defensive position. Gossclalt followed him up with 110000 men, and there followed on March 16th, the Battle of the Babemme. Buentel's position on the edge of the woods proved nearly impregnable, and Gossclalt soon decided that he must manoeuvre his way past this. He sent cavalry, and small forces of mounted infantry directly south down the main road towards Gilliso, thereby threatening both Buentel's communications with Cennatlantis, and the city itself. Buentel had foreseen this, and believed that Gossclalt would not dare march much further in that direction, as long as the Atlanteans remained in the Babemme, and threatened the Basquecs' flank, and communications with Yellis and Atlandravizzi. But the isolated Basquec forces roaming around Gilliso, and even approaching the Snattarona position terrified the government in Cennatlantis, and though Brancerix was certainly willing to give Buentel the chance to stay where he was for a little longer, the Imperial Generalissimo insisted he move back to the Snattarona defences, and protect the capital directly. Buentel accomplished this flank move with great skill on March 20th, and placed his army on the range of hills, already entrenched, which lay north-west of Snattarona.

This defensive position had long been the vital one, which protected the approaches to Cennatlantis, and the access to Atlantidieh, from the east. It had played a vital role in 525, when Cenccos and the rebels had unsuccessfully tried to defend the capital against Atlanicerex's enveloping attack from the east in the First Battle of Snattarona. Again in the Imperialist-Republican wars of the 590s – 620s, this whole range of hills marked part of the boundary between the two sides. Since then, Snattarona itself, and the hills to the north and south had been made into permanent defensive positions, with forts and trenches and gun-emplacements.

The Second Battle of Snattarona began on March 30th. Gossclalt planned to strike the main Atlantean position, on the northern range of hills, frontally, and then surprise the enemy by assaulting the southern hills from Snattarona, occupying the top of them, and taking control of the main road to Cennatlantis, which ran in a pass between the two hills. The northern attack predictably failed with heavy loss, and overnight Gossclalt moved much of the assaulting force, plus reserves, (75000 in all), to Snattarona and the woods all round it. Earlier in the day a small force had insinuated its way to the top of these hills, using one of the same paths that Cenccos had over 200 years earlier. Needless to say it ran into a strong fort specifically designed to defend this approach, and could move no further. News of this did, however, alert Buentel, who prepared some 40000 of his total force to occupy these southern hills, in case Gossclalt should try to occupy them, as was indeed his plan. As a result, when Gossclalt's army swarmed up the northern slopes of this range of hills on March 31st, it soon met Buentel's force partly in position, and partly approaching from the south. In a fierce daylong battle, the Basquecs slowly forced back the Atlanteans by sheer force of numbers, and seized the top of the hills by early afternoon. Buentel had continually sent more forces to help hold, and then retake these southern hills, but by the end of the afternoon, he realised the game was up, having suffered over 16000 casualties. Still holding the northern hills securely, he withdrew as night fell, and moved to cross the Cresslepp some 20 miles north of Cennatlantis. During April 1st, he completed the crossing and moved south into the Cennatlantis defences. Gossclalt was scarcely aware he had gone, at first, and made no attempt to chase him up, having himself suffered at least 15000 casualties.

THE (THIRD) SIEGE OF CENNATLANTIS

There now followed something of a panic within Cennatlantis, as citizens and government officers alike tried to flee from what seemed like the imminent capture of the city by the Basquecs. But the Emperor and his immediate colleagues insisted on remaining in the city to set an example, and after the first few days, a military cordon was placed around Cennatlantis, to stop any further flight. Nevertheless, over the next month most government offices were quietly evacuated to Atlantis as the enemy loomed ever closer to the Imperial Palaces and administrative offices north of the city, and the Emperor himself moved back to Atlantis, when it appeared that the city was going to be completely surrounded. In fact this never quite happened, and Gossclalt's failure to isolate the city during the siege was one reason why he was never finally able to capture it. Nevertheless, the situation was very serious for the Atlanteans throughout the siege, which lasted a year, into 746. For although the Basquecs were just held off at Cennatlantis, other enemy armies continued to press forward on almost every other front for the rest of the year.

Cennatlantis' initial salvation was due to four things: the permanent defences around the city, the reinforcing of the Atlantean army there from the south, the decision of Gossclalt to split up his army east of the Dodolla, rather than pressing forwards with overwhelming force against the city, and his failure to involve much of the Ughan Army in a joint attack. Cennatlantis' defences had been improved at various intervals since the sixth century, notably the updating of the forts surrounding it to withstand artillery in the 640s and 650s, and the construction of a ring of forts along the Dodolla and around the town, for a circumference of sixty miles or so, during the earlier Third Empire. These forts protected the government suburbs, but did not stretch as far west as the river Gonril. Further defences were built in the few years before the war began, partly to join up the forts, and partly to provide further defences south of the city, down to the Cresslepp. One particular military problem in this area was that the Trannolla Thounca (Marshes) had been drained after 700. These marshes had hitherto covered the whole area west of Lake Trannolla, between the rivers Burtounna, Cresslepp and Dodolla, and seriously constrained any attempt to move on Cennatlantis from the south. In 744 and early 745, cohorts of civilians, as well as army personnel, were mobilised to make Cennatlantis completely impregnable. This involved digging lines of trenches all round the capital, between the forts already there, and the deliberate destruction of the dykes and canals, which had been built to drain the Trannolla marshes.

Now at the same time as Gossclalt's main army had advanced on Cennatlantis from the north-east, a second army moved down the east side of Lake Trannolla. As in the previous year, this army's task was to capture the hill between the rivers Burtounna and Helvenslepp, and then move on Cennatlantis and Helvris. The hill was duly captured, but then the Atlanteans attacked it again with reinforcements from Cennatlantis itself on March 12th. The Basquecs were defeated at this Battle of the River Burtounna, and the Atlanteans began to pursue them. However, the defeats north of the lake caused them to halt, and then the shattering defeat at Snattarona led to their immediate recall to defend Cennatlantis – they counter-marched, and arrived in the nick of time. Meanwhile, as mentioned above, Gossclalt had divided his victorious army after Snattarona, sending part of it north to try to move west between the lakes at Gasiroto. As a result, he had only 80000 men with which to attack Cennatlantis initially, later increased to 110000, including a few Ughans. The Atlanteans' two armies there in the ringed defences were over 90000.

Gossclalt's frontal assaults on various forts and trenches failed during April, with considerable casualties. Thereafter both sides reinforced themselves, and the Basquecs in particular, essayed to get past the Cennatlantis defences, either by attacking up from the south, or round the north from the north-west. The decisive battle occurred on July 12th – the Second Battle of Failrunn. This was an attempt by the Basquecs to completely surround the Atlantean defences at Cennatlantis. It led to a disastrous defeat, and the wounding of Gossclalt himself, when an Atlantean army, which had been stationed around Gentes to the west, preparatory to an attack on the Basquecs, struck the enemy in flank at Failrunn. The planned Atlantean attack followed up immediately afterwards – too soon, as the Atlanteans were held off west of the Dodolla, and forced to retire.

The rest of the year on this front was spent in pointless static trench warfare, which served to teach the two sides, that now that both of them were equally well armed, and of similar numbers, the defence, if it used forts and trenches, had become much the stronger. However, to the south of Lake Trannolla, following the retreat of the Atlanteans into Cennatlantis after the battle of the Burtounna, the southern Basquec army was able to advance right up to the gates of Helvris by June. At that point, however, the strength of its defences, as with Cennatlantis, prevented the Basquecs gaining any further ground for the rest of the year.

THE VICTORIES OF THE UGHANS

The offensive of the Basquecs in the spring of 745 occupied the attention of the Atlanteans, and attracted reinforcements and replacements away from the armies facing the Ughans. There was a total of about six Ughan corps, or 170000 men facing the Atlanteans from Dravidos north up the river Gestes. The Atlanteans had some 140000 men, but many were locked up in fortresses across Dravidieh and Nunchalcrieh. After consultations with Gossclalt, it was agreed that initially the Ughans would protect the Basquecs' right wing, take Dravidos, and then advance to Micazzo, as well as providing a small token force in the Basquec army attacking Cennatlantis. Further north, the Ughans had their own agenda, which involved moving into the Diefillen woods, and up the river Merros, seizing the fort of Fembepand, partly in order to broaden the front of their attacks on Gestskallandieh.

The Ughans' plans for the campaign turned out very successfully, and this year certainly represents the highest point of their war-effort. In March, 80000 Ughan surrounded Dravidos, and besieged the garrison of about 25000. Soon after, another army crossed the Gestes near Pand-aneyu, and advanced up the Merros. The Atlanteans had hardly any mobile forces in this area, and were unable to prevent the Ughans moving north to besiege Fembepand. This siege dragged on, however, because the Ughans kept withdrawing forces from the besiegers to join the battles against Gestskallandieh. It was not until July that the fortress fell, and thereafter the Ughans moved leisurely north through the Diefillen across the border with Gestskallandieh.

The siege of Dravidos lasted some time, too, but the main Ughan army soon left it to rear and moved to occupy Dravizzi. Dravidos finally fell in June, and six weeks later, the Ughans moved towards Micazzo. However, the Atlanteans had built up their numbers by now, and threatened the Ughans' right flank from the Chalcran Forests. After a series of skirmishes and small battles, both sides retreated. After this, the Ughans made no further attempt to take Micazzo, but spread out their forces across the north-east, taking Bemmetisso and Balbemme, though the latter was later retaken by the Atlanteans.

At the same time, Ughan armies of over 160000 were invading Gestskallandieh, and forcing back their enemies, who had about the same number of troops. Again, though, by the autumn, the Ughans' advance had been halted.

SKALLANDIEH ADVANCES ON LAND AND SEA

Skallandieh began the campaigning season of 745 with as successful an attack on the Atlanteans as the Basquecs and Ughans elsewhere. The Skallands left alone the front west of the Netaka Mountains, where the two sides faced each other across the river Sulophaio, the Atlanteans and the remaining Anauren forces having the strong fortress of Amounoso to rely on. Instead they opened a new front to the east, moving through the passes of the Cresskor Mountains to surprise Cairtan in April, as well as making a frontal attack on the strong fortress of Anetako, which defended the low ground between the Netaka Mountains to the west and the river Ruphaio and the Cresskor Mountains to the east.

Anetako was soon surrounded, and surrendered after a siege of two weeks. An Atlantean army, which was to have relieved the fortress, lay to the south, where it was immobilised by enemy attacks from the east. In these mountain passes, the Atlanteans had very few defences, and the Skallands pressed back the Atlantean army into the lower and more open country to the west. Another army then joined the attack from west of the Netaka Mountains, and the two combined, turned the flanks of the Atlanteans, and decisively defeated them on May 2nd, at the Battle of Runcairn. After this, the floodgates opened, and Atlantis suffered such a run of defeats as seemed to threaten in the end the very existence of the Province of Atlantis, and the whole west of the Empire. The Skallands advanced south through Runcairn, completely turning the lines on the river Sulophaio, though fortunately for the Atlanteans, a range of mountains, the Netaka, separated the two theatres. By July, the Skallands had reached the hills of the Decanda Runix, and were trying to cross the pass called the Decabrumu. If they succeeded, they would reach the rolling open country around the river Rollepp, and could then move either west on Atlantis, or south on Cennatlantis. But the Atlanteans managed to block this pass in time.

The Skalland advances during 745

To the west, the advancing Skallands threatened the eastern flank of the Atlanteans on the river Sulophaio, through the Netaka Buoumu (Pass). Encouraged by a frontal attack as well, the Atlanteans had to retreat back to the river Noilafa, where they were for the time being able to protect their eastern flank from attack through another pass, the Noilafa Buoumu, by holding the fort of Latala. But, apart from Latala, the Anaurens and Atlanteans had now been ejected from the whole of Anauren, and were on the borders of Atlantis itself. Temporarily stymied here, the Skallands now tried a direct attack on the Province of Yciel Atlantis, across the Upheril Mountains. This position was immensely strong, however, and the Atlanteans were able to hold off the attack at the Battle of the Upheril Mountains.

At the same time as they were winning these victories on land, the Ughans were exploiting their strength at sea. During the year, their new navies gained control of the Marossa Liranca (Bay of Marossan). They took over the former Anauren naval base in the Suinnomiori Isles, and then sent out a series of naval and amphibious expeditions towards the other islands in the Bay, which were nearly all Atlantean possessions, but with small or no garrisons. The nearest Atlantean naval base was at Achosil, and the navy here contented itself for most of the year with fending off a series of attacks on the islands nearby. One major amphibious expedition tried to effect a landing near Nerilo on the southern coast of Yciel Atlantis, but the landing was decisively defeated after the fleet was forced off. Nevertheless the Skalland moves to the south were more successful, and by the end of the year, Skalland garrisons had been placed on all the important islands of the Bay, including those lying off Nundler, which was only 70 miles north of Atlantis.

THE GREAT BASQUEC NAVAL EXPEDITION TO THE HELVENGIO

South of the Helvengio, the war continued. In Marossan, neither side made much progress, despite a number of attacks by both sides, and at the end of the year, the armies were in almost the same places as they had been at the start. Further south, however, Basquec troops continued to advance slowly southwards from the river Gosal. But additional attempts to seize the Siphians Mountains, which would leave the Atlantean port of Siphia at their mercy, continued to elude the Basquecs. In the far south, the Basquecs were more successful. They made further raids against the inlets and estuaries of Rabarrieh's coast, and, having defeated its navy the previous year, were able to blockade most of its ports on the Eriphicko (Southern Sea).

The most spectacular Basquec success at this time was a naval one. The Basquec navy, having defeated the Rabarran navy the previous year and blockaded its survivors in port, now faced up to the Atlantean navy in these waters, based at Siphia. This force was in a perilous position in early 745, with Basquec armies threatening to take the port from the north, the Basquec navy hovering near the Siphian islands, and no hope of Atlantean naval reinforcements, because of the threat posed by the Skalland ships in the north. On the other hand, the Basquec navy could not actually harm the Atlantean navy at Siphia, protected as it was by a maze of fortified islands, booms, and primitive minefields. But the colony was very nearly cut off from Atlantis itself, the only contact being by a difficult land route along the coast to the west, and from occasional naval convoys from Atlantis. The Basquec admiral, one of the boldest seamen of the War, now saw a chance of defeating the Atlantean navy, taking control of the whole Eriphicko, and threatening not just Siphia, but the western coast of Th. Thiss. too. In April he moved the Basquec navy north to threaten the approach of the Atlantean supply convoy from the direction of Th Thiss, which he knew should be due to arrive shortly. Hitherto these had come with minimal naval protection, and usually with some of the Siphia force emerging to protect the convoy for the last part of the journey. On these occasions, the only threat had been from one or two Basquec raiders. This time the convoy, which was indeed on its way, was threatened by the whole Basquec navy. As the Basquecs had anticipated, most of the Atlantean navy emerged to guard the convoy, and the Basquecs had the chance of forcing a decisive sea-battle.

The Atlanteans were outnumbered and out-maneuvred. Moreover, new technology was beginning to make its mark. Both sides now had all their main ships armed with very heavy cannon, and increasing numbers on both sides were ironclad. Finally, steam had arrived, and by now most ships were steam-powered. The battle, called the First Battle of the Siphian Islands, was an overwhelming Basquec victory. Many Atlantean ships were sunk or captured, and the rest fled back to Siphia. The convoy, though damaged, managed to flee to an Atlantean port and colony some miles down the coast to the west, and its provisions reached Siphia overland.

Over the next months, the Atlanteans were firmly blockaded in port, and a landing was made west of Siphia, which completely now cut it off from contact with the outside world. Then, in July, frustrated by his attempts to take Cennatlantis or Helvris, and unable to take control of the Helvengio, because of the presence at Giezuat of a sizeable Atlantean naval force, Gossclat was stuck by an idea. It can be viewed as either a stroke of genius, or a harebrained folly; it was called both at the time, and has been ever since. His plan was that the Basquec navy, or nearly all of it, now in control of the Eriphicko, should sail out westwards, up the coast of Th Thiss, seize control of the forts guarding the entrance to the Helvengio, and enter it, defeating or eluding the Atlantean navy based at Giezuat. It should then help to transport an army from Noehtens to Giezuat, using transports hitherto blockaded up the river Gairase. It would take the island, then land on the shore near Helvris – or perhaps further west. Meanwhile, the Basquec navy would re-emerge from the Helvengio, and prevent or defeat any Atlantean attempt to move naval forces down from the northern bases to the Helvengio or the Eriphicko. Combined with further land attacks, the Atlanteans should then realise they were facing utter defeat, and sue for peace.

The whole scheme was obviously extremely risky, and could be ruined by any number of things going wrong. In particular, it would leave the Eriphicko empty of Basquec forces, save for a token force blockading the Atlantean and Rabarran navies in port. Nevertheless, egged on by Gossclat, it was organised and the expedition set off in October. Determined to be in at the kill, Gossclat himself left the central front, and betook himself to Noehtens. The fleet, meanwhile, successfully made its way round and up the coast of Th Thiss., though not without the Atlanteans learning of its approach. The Basquec Admiral had anticipated this, and hoped that it would encourage the Giezuat fleet to come out of the Helvengio to face him – thus making it easier for him to slip in. To further lead the Atlanteans on, he did not take the fleet straight to the entrance of the sea, but carried on north, as if to threaten Atlantis itself. The Giezuat navy took the bait, and hurried out to protect Atlantis, which actually had virtually no naval protection of its own, although the main Sulosos navy was on alert just to the north of it, having to look in two directions at once, north to the Skalland navy, and now south to the potential new Basquec threat. The Basquecs did not intend to fight the Atlanteans head on; instead they sailed round them, and pausing only to drop off a small landing-force at Miolrel, entered the Helvengio.

Hastening eastwards, the by now bedraggled fleet moved to the port of Giezuat, which promptly surrendered, amazed at the apparent disappearance of the Atlantean navy. Meanwhile Miolrel had fallen to the Basquecs (though no attempt was made to take control of the Nosinge peninsula to the north). The Atlantean navy outside the Helvengio, having beaten a small Basquec diversionary force, now tried tentatively to re-enter the sea, but was beaten back by the Basquec navy and the land batteries now under Basquec control. In the Helvengio, a delighted Gossclat now watched his troops sail unopposed from the Gairase to Giezuat island.

For a brief moment, now, Gossclat imagined his daring plan had worked. He ordered his land armies to make new attacks on the Atlanteans, and encouraged the build-up of forces on Giezuat, preparatory to an invasion of the Helvran mainland. He also sent out a suggestion to the Atlantean Government that it might like now to consider an armistice and peace negotiations – on Basquec terms, naturally. Then it all collapsed, like a pack of cards. The Atlantean fleet outside the Helvengio was now reinforced by additional ships from Sulosos, and again tried to re-enter the Helvengio. This time, in late November, mid atrocious weather, it succeeded, as the Basquec fleet was scattered for miles around. The Basquecs, depleted by the journey, storms, and ships dispersed to Giezuat and the Gairase, were beaten in a battle to the west of Giezuat. Forced to flee, most of the navy abandoned the Helvengio altogether, and hid in the Gairase estuary, where it was shortly to be blockaded. The troops already on Giezuat island, over 15000, were thus abandoned and cut off. The year ended with an Atlantean army landing on the island; shortly, it would defeat the Basquecs, and force them to surrender. It was also only a matter of time, before the Atlantean and Rabarran navies, blockaded in the Eriphicko by a token Basquec navy, shorn of the majority of its forces which had disappeared forever into the Helvengio, realised the new situation, and emerged again to seize control of the seas.

746: The year of decision

THE BATTLES OF GENTIS AND RUNNATES: THE CLIMACTIC ATTEMPTS TO BEAT THE ATLANTEANS IN THE CENTRE

The year 746 dawned with the Basquecs, and their allies the Ughans and Skallands, still facing an intransigent Atlantean Empire. But despite a series of disappointments and narrow failures in 745, Gossalc still thought he could force the enemy to the negotiating chamber by inflicting one or two more decisive defeats on them. There is little doubt that this was still possible, though not for much longer, as Atlantis was really gearing up to total war, and the size of her armed forces would decisively overtake Basquecieh's during 746.

Gossalc decided that the siege, or blockade of Cennatlantis was not getting him anywhere, and he decided to abandon it in favour of a campaign of manoeuvre in 746. In March, he withdrew most of his forces from Cennatlantis, and marched north to Gasiroto, hoping to force his way between the two lakes, seizing or bypassing the fort, and then moving south-west against the flank of the Atlanteans around Cennatlantis. He also tried to co-ordinate this attack with contemporaneous ones by the Ughans towards Runnates, and the Skallands against Atlantis itself. The Ughans and Basquecs did manage to move almost at the same time, but it was very difficult to communicate at all with the Skallands, who were virtually cut off from the Basquecs, and in the event, they did not attack for another two months. It could indeed be argued that Gossalc should have made more effort to persuade the Ughans to join his own armies in a combined attack via Gasiroto, rather than allowing them to move off at a tangent to Runnates. But the Ughans were throughout the whole war, extremely unwilling to see their armies act in a sort of junior role to those of the Basquecs, and they frequently went their own way.

The attack on Gasiroto took the Atlanteans by surprise, and the city fell after a brief siege and assault. The army had already pressed on westwards, at first trending towards Ancahouth. But the Atlanteans gathered their defences quickly, and a relatively small force positioned itself east of Gentis. Seeing this as a more serious threat than it really was, Gossalc moved the bulk of his forces west against this army. A first battle, on April 3rd pushed back, but did not defeat the Atlanteans. A back-up for the Atlanteans now rushed up from the Cennatlantis front, but instead of attacking the smaller Basquec force north of Ancahouth, it joined the Atlantean force now west of Gentis. Strategically, this seems a surprising move for the astute General Buentel, but he believed that Gossalc would expect him to attack from the south, and so wanted to do something, which would be more unexpected. Gossalc hoped to beat the Gentis force quickly, and then turn south on the enemy there. In the Battle of Gentis on April 5th, 125000 Basquecs tried to break a defensive force of 50000 Atlanteans at first, later rising to 102000. Gossalc was reduced to straightforward frontal assault, which at first had some success, but then was overwhelmed by the Atlantean reserves gradually fed into the battle as they arrived. After suffering over 19000 casualties, the Basquecs admitted defeat, and leaving a blocking force at Gasiroto, retreated east, to Sirottis.

The Battle of Runnates, April 27th - 28th.

Meanwhile, the Ughans had finally wound themselves up to advance westwards as well, acting as a protection to the Basquecs' right flank. With a force of 90000 men, they attacked the opposing smaller Atlantean army near Micazzo, which retreated rather precipitately as news arrived of the Basquecs' advance past Gasiroto. The Atlanteans retired to a strong defensive position at Runnates, behind the river Chakratoura. They hold the town itself, behind the river in the centre, behind which are hills trending south-westwards away from the river. The Ughans made a frontal attack on the town on April 27th, while other corps crossed the river a few miles to the south onto the plain. The Atlanteans retreated to the strong position of the hills in rear, abandoning Runnates, save for a small garrison left behind. The next day the Ughans forced their way through Runnates and on April 29th unsubtly tried to storm the hills immediately behind. After a whole day of fighting, they give up the attempt. They now try to turn the Atlantean right flank, and march off to seize these hills the following night. However, the Atlanteans have anticipated this move, and have a small force already guarding these heights. Other troops are rushed over from the north, and although the Ughans retain a footing on the hills at nightfall, they again fail to defeat the Atlanteans: indeed, they themselves are now seriously weakened by their heavy losses of over 17000 men.

The Battle of Runnates, April 29th

The Atlanteans now seize the chance for a decisive counterstroke. Early next morning they strike with their left wing into Runnates, which had been left with a minimal defence when the Ughans moved most of their forces across to their left. Runnates is taken, and the Atlanteans now move to the right to strike the Ughans on the hills in flank, while smaller forces crossed the river. However, the Ughans had already started to withdraw the night before. But they were seriously mauled as they moved back over the river by having to ward off these flank attacks. Once over the river, they again had to run the gauntlet of the Atlantean cavalry and infantry. Thus the Battle of Runnates (April 27th-30th) was in the end a bad defeat for the Ughans, who lost in all some 26000 men. In a closely pursued retreat, the Ughans were chased back to Micazzo, and then when the Atlanteans threatened to turn their right flank, they retreated further back to Dravizzi.

The Battle of Runnates, April 30th

Greatly disappointed at these defeats, Gossclat now moved south to a position around Gilliso. There was very little further fighting in the centre for the rest of the year. The Atlanteans were content with defending what they had won and building up their forces, while fending off the serious attack in the west by the Skallands. Gossclat now handed over command of this army to General Guentich (usually "atlanteanised" to "Guentich"), a capable but uninspired man, who would soon prove no match to Atlantis' General Lingon, who was to take over Buentel's position in 747. Gossclat now moved back to Basqueciah for several months to deal with political troubles and military reorganisation, and to concentrate on the increasing threat by Rabarran and Atlantean forces in the south.

SKALLANDIEH'S AMPHIBIOUS THREATS TO ATLANTIS

Skallandieh planned what it hoped would be a decisive series of amphibious attacks against Atlantis, starting in May. These, it was hoped, would end ultimately in the capture of the old capital, Atlantis, itself. They would coincide with land assaults towards the Gaffeal, and across the rivers in Marossan. The campaign began with further attacks by the Skalland navy, which was at present showing itself more than an equal for the Atlantean fleet. The latter's lack of wartime experience for many years had been very apparent. The attacks were against the main Atlantean base at Achosil, and were intended to distract the enemy from the amphibious force, which then slid down the coast past Nundler to the river Bore estuary. There, on May 27th, it landed a large army, which immediately marched towards Atlantis. News of these events prompted the Atlanteans to order the Achosil fleet southwards to defeat the enemy navy off the Bore, while the relatively small Atlantean fleet at Atlantis stayed to defend the city. (This fleet was normally at the naval base of Sulosos, but following the Basquec naval scare in 745, when it looked as if the Basquecs might move on Atlantis itself, this fleet had been moved to Atlantis, where it had stayed ever since. The Skallands were aware of this, which made their amphibious landings much less risky than they would have been, had the Atlantean navy still been stationed at Sulosos).

The defeat of the Skalland invasions of Atlantieh, 746

The diversionary Skalland fleet had, however, already been engaging the Atlanteans near Achosil while the Bore landing was happening. After some inconclusive fighting, it pulled away to the south, nearer the Bore fleet, where the Atlanteans followed it. In a lengthy series of manoeuvres and battles the Skallands came off worse, and were forced to retire north-eastwards. The Atlantean fleet now carried on south. Meanwhile, the Skalland invasion fleet, having sent the transports back north, had moved on past Sulosos, where it had defeated the fleet from Atlantis on June 6th. But the Achosil navy now arrived, and manoeuvring so as to link up with the remains of the Atlantean navy, inflicted a crushing defeat on the Skallands at the Naval Battle of Sulosos on June 15th.

(For a detailed account of this battle, with maps, see the section on the navy during the Continental War, which is part of the general article on the Atlantean navy: The Atlantean Navy )

Meanwhile on land, the Skalland army, landed at the Bore, crossed the river, took Sulosos, and forcing back two small blocking forces, reached the very gates of Atlantis. Every last Atlantean was now put into the firing line, and at the Battle of Atlantis, on June 5th, the Skalland force was defeated and virtually surrounded. Out of 33000 men, only 7000 escaped death, injury or capture.

To compound the Atlanteans' troubles, the Skallands launched other attacks at the beginning of June. One army tried to cross the river Noilafa, and move to link up with the amphibious force on the Bore. In fact, it was unable to force the Atlanteans' defences, and had to retreat back across the river. At the same time, to the east of the Netaka Mountains, a second army forced the Decabrumu pass in the Decanda Mountains. These marked the border between the Province of Naokeltanieh, now wholly in Skalland hands, and that of Cennatlantis, from which there were straight marches south on Cennatlantis, or west into Yeldatlantis. There is no doubt that at this stage, the beginning of June, the very existence of the Atlantean Empire seemed to lie on a knife-edge – for the fourth time in a few months, following the Basquec naval expedition in 745, and the Basquec and Ughan attacks beyond the central lakes earlier in 746. In reality, as these various offensives were not simultaneous, the Atlanteans, even if defeated at first, would almost certainly have been able to fight off each of them individually, using their immense resources scattered on other fronts throughout the Empire. Even so, a continuous series of setbacks and defeats like this would have gradually weakened Atlantis and made it far more likely she would sue for some sort of truce or formal peace.

The Skalland attack began well, and after forcing the Decabrumu, moved around the Gaffeal (literally "old wood"). The army crossed the river Rollepp, taking Angahuth, and moved westwards. But already the Atlanteans had defeated the Bore amphibious force, and the attempted crossing of the Noilafa. The Atlantean defenders fell back toward the Borfembe, where they were reinforced by units from both the other, victorious Atlantean armies. On June 14th, as the Skallands tried to force their way into the Atlantean position in the woods, these reinforcements turned the Atlantean defensive into an all-out attack from front and flank. The result of this Battle of the Borfembe was the narrow defeat of the Skallands. Out of an army outnumbered in the end by 65000 to 55000, they suffered 10000 casualties. The army was forced to retire, the more so as more Atlantean troops were arriving to press their retreat. They went no further than the Gaffeal, where, expecting reinforcements, they stood and dared the Atlanteans to attack them there.

The Atlanteans to the west realised the strength of the new enemy position, but General Elthul had other plans. He requested and was granted the shift across of 35000 men from Runnates, led by General Lingon. Two months earlier, this force had helped defeat the Ughans, and it was now in reserve. The Skallands half expected something like this, and decided to retreat further to the Decanda Mountains. However, the Runnates force was directed north of these mountains, and hit the Skallands in flank, just as they were emerging from the Decabrumu pass. This resulted in an absolutely decisive defeat for them, and the remains of the army fled back to Runcairn by the middle of July. Thereafter, there was little further movement for the rest of the year, but the initiative had now decisively passed to the Atlanteans.

THE WAR IN THE BALANCE ON OTHER FRONTS

These were the most decisive campaigns of the year, but fighting was taking place elsewhere, throughout the continent, and here too, the balance was turning.

In the north, Gestskallandieh stayed on the defensive in the west, and started to shift her forces east to deal with the Ughans' incursions into her territory over the past year or so. Later in the year, following her defeat at Runnates, and with her morale lowered, Ughrieh was attacked by Gestskallandieh, and her forces ejected from her territory, and thrown back across the river Gestes.

In the south, the removal of the Basquec navy to the Helvengio at the end of 745 made it much easier for Atlantis and Rabarrieh to regain control of the southern seas. Rabarrieh was now receiving considerable help – military and naval – from Yciel Tuaince Mandagge (the Far South Continent), whose rulers were much in sympathy with those of Rabarrieh. The fleets of Atlantis and Rabarrieh, with this help, were able to break the Basquec blockade, and defeat them at the Second battle of the Siphian islands.

They then retook those of the Siphian islands, which were in Basquec hands, and in August, concentrated their forces and advanced into the Siphians Mountains. They made a few tentative attempts to force back the Basquecs from here, but were not very successful. However, they started to build up during the winter a really significant base at Siphia, and a large, offensively minded army. This was to be part Atlantean and part Rabarran. At the same time, the resurgence of Rabarran fortunes continued with further operations in the delta of the river Kataba, and the blockade of some Basquec ports.

Finally, what happened in the Helvengio, where the great Basquec fleet had been forced into hiding in the Gairase estuary the previous year? It remained impotently here for the whole year, loosely blockaded by the Atlanteans, and emerging only twice, for a couple of ineffectual skirmishes. The Atlanteans also isolated the enemy forces on Giezuat island, and later in the year landed and took their surrender almost bloodlessly. They also continued to land reinforcements at the mouth of the river Sheinteph in Manralia, advancing south a little way, but aiming at a real offensive in 747.

Victory abroad and rebellion at home, 747-750

The great allied counter-attack begins to move, 747

THE SHIFTING BALANCE OF FORCE AMONGST THE BELLIGERENTS

If the year 746 had seen the turning-point in this great war, 747 saw a definitive shift in fortune in favour of Atlantis and her allies. There were virtually no more great advances by their enemies: on the contrary, they began counter-offensives, which grew more and more overwhelming over the next three years, leading to universal victory by 750. How did this happen?

Firstly, Atlantis and Rabarrieh were rapidly increasing the size of their armed forces, which, in Atlantis' case, reached their maximum size in 748. This was achieved by the growing efficiency of the organisation of the war, the militarisation of population and resources, and the favoured status these two nations had achieved in the eyes of Yciel Tuaince Manage and the Western Empire. Secondly, the armies themselves were now better trained, and were led by better generals. For example, in early 747 Atlantis had General Lingon in charge in Cennatlantis, Buentel in Manralia (moved from Cennatlantis), and Elthul and Giben respectively to command the land and sea counter-attacks against Skallandieh. All these were talented, efficient and experienced generals, and in the cases of Buentel and Elthul, touched with genius. Finally, of course, the new technology, which had given Rabarrieh such an advantage in 743, was now in everyday use in nearly all the combatants armies, most especially Atlantis. Indeed, Atlantis was able to exploit her industrial base, which Brancerix was encouraging, to invent new and improved weapons – mines, explosive shells, balloons, steam-powered transport, though most of these were very experimental, and had little overall effect on the war. Strategically, too, Atlantis and her allies were able to exploit their new superiority in sea-power to make amphibious landings or threats of landings against their enemies.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF ATLANTEAN MILITARY POWER

Atlantis had developed and improved her military forces in various ways since the start of the wars. Full conscription since 745 meant that she could field forces of over 1110000 men in 747, rising to a maximum in 748 of 1400000. Individual armies (PUEGGISIX) were grouped into Army Groups (BORPUEGGISIX), each with 3 to 7 Armies. Each Army Group (or effectively Front) had its own Grand General (Elthul in the west, Lingon in the Centre, Buentel in Manralia). The PUEGGISIX, about 24000 strong in 743, and divided into 4 CENNARCOYIX, (literally "NEW THIRDS") were reduced to about 20000 by 746, and their sub-units rechristened as THEINULPUEGGISIX (literally "QUARTER ARMIES"), later simply THEINUIX (or "QUARTERS"). Also another unit was created between those of THEINUIX (5000) and PUONDIX (480). This was the DARCOYO of 1200, while the PUONDIX were reduced in size to about 200. In 749 these DARCOYIX were also given new names – OCHOSSIX, as a deliberate reminder of Second Empire times. Cavalry were also reorganised, and new, larger, independent cavalry armies were created after 746, to carry out wide manoeuvres and make the rapid advances, which were such a feature of the later stages of the war, compared with the trench-bound middle years. Thus pistol-armed, cavalry THEINUIX, of 4000 –5000 men appeared, ultimately under the control only of the BORPUEGGISIX. They were then often combined into cavalry PUEGGISIX.

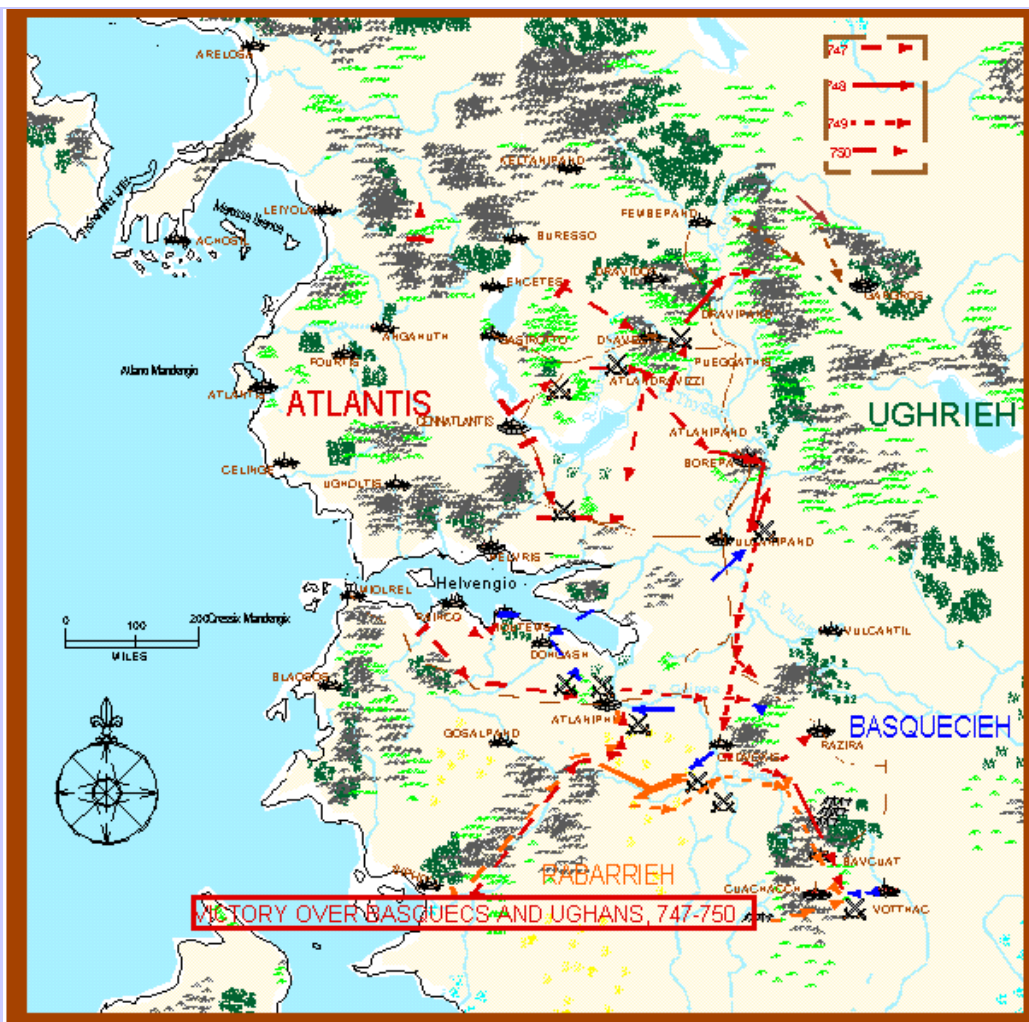

Changes in tactics and weaponry even by 747 were considerable compared with 743, and the changes continued up till the war's end. We have already spoken about the new, larger cavalry units. Infantry formations grew looser, with heavier firepower (breech-loading rifles for all soldiers). Men spread out more, and skirmishers were used more consistently. As far as artillery was concerned, all mechanical types soon vanished, in favour of rifled breech-loaders and howitzers. As many as 5 or 6 guns per 1000 men were deployed. Finally transport and support: the system which Ruthopheax I had built up, and which had declined throughout the Third Empire, had to be laboriously re-introduced during the war. This time, horses and carts were supplemented on a small scale by steam-powered vehicles.

There were also changes in Atlantis' military leadership, as we have already noted. Hitherto, overall leadership of the war had rested with the Emperor and Officers of State, part of which now constituted a War Council. There was increasing pressure to appoint a military man as overall Commander-in-Chief, but Brancerix resisted this, determined to keep this post in his own hands, as indeed he did throughout the war. Similarly the War Council, and the Officers of State remained traditional Imperial nobles, although there were some changes amongst them. But in the field, increasing numbers of commanders at the highest levels were being replaced by more effective, lower-class men. And of course, the back-up to the whole war effort was an increasingly large and efficient industrial base, also led by middle class factory and workshop owners.

The command of the war against Skallandieh was given, on land, to General Elthul in 746, who narrowly managed to survive the great Skalland attacks on Atlantis. In the years to come, he would show his true colours by leading the great counter-attack against Skallandieh. In this he would be ably seconded by the new Admiral of the Achosil fleet, Giben. More controversial were the changes to the commands in Cennatlantis and Manralia. General Buentel had admirably succeeded in holding off all Gossalt's attacks on Cennatlantis since 745, but in the eyes of his superiors, he then seemed to settle down into inactivity for much of 746. Brancerix was desperate for a counter-attack to free Imperial soil of the Basquecs and Ughans. However, the removal of Buentel turned into a political matter as well at this stage. Buentel was of Class 3 background, and had never made much secret of his dislike of the Imperial regime. He expressed this normally by demanding more lower class, and hence, to his mind, efficient commanders on his staff. But then, at the end of 746, he went much further, and asked that he himself should be created overall Commander-in-Chief of the war. This was too much for Brancerix, and he ordered his removal from post, and transfer to Manralia to head the planned offensive there. This was an important position, but could in no way compare with Buentel's former post.

Brancerix also knew very well with whom he wanted to replace Buentel. He chose General Lingon. Lingon, as an army commander, had fought very well against the Basquecs ever since the start of 745, and had contributed greatly to the defence of Cennatlantis. He was later the commander of the small group of armies under Buentel's command, which had rushed up to reinforce his defence at the Battle of Runnates against the Ughans in 746, and had then been moved west to defeat the Skallands at the Decabrumu Pass. Thereafter he had harried the Skallands in small-scale warfare on his own initiative. His appointment was one of Brancerix's most inspired choices, and his leadership during the next two or three years was to contribute decisively to the utter defeat of the Basquecs. In this, he was to reveal talents bordering on genius for strategical warfare, and was able to outwit even Gossalt. But at the time of his appointment, Lingon's real virtue in the eyes of Brancerix and his colleagues was his impeccable Class 2 background, and his devoted and vocal support of the traditional Imperial regime. This had indeed led him into a number of conflicts with Buentel, who had been pleased to lose him to the Skalland front in 746. In four years' time, in fact, the conflict between the two men would become not just a verbal, but a military one.

DEFEAT AND VICTORY: THE RECOVERY OF CENNATLANTIS

At the start of 747, on the central front, the Basquecs had two Armies near Atlandravizzi in the Crolden Hills (150000), and another two south of the Cresslepp at Helvris (70000). Gosscault himself had returned to Atlandravizzi by the end of February. On the other side, the Atlanteans had concentrated nearly all their forces around Cennatlantis – about 200000 -, leaving only about 60000 men west of Helvris. General Lingon started off in his new job with a plan, which was just asking for disaster, when faced with someone like Gosscault. Determined to carry out an attack as soon as possible, Lingon left about 80000 men at Cennatlantis, to guard against an attack from the south, and launched the rest of his force directly eastwards, aiming to seize Giestisso and threaten Gosscault's line of communications with Borepande. He knew this would make the Basquecs emerge from their defences on the Crolden Hills, and he intended then to defeat them in the open. In the event, it was a case of the biter bit. Gosscault did emerge, but threw a force of 120000 men on to Lingon's flank and communications, before the Atlanteans were prepared. Although still just outnumbered by the Atlanteans, the latter were badly defeated at this Second Battle of Giestisso on March 23rd, and retreated quickly back to Cennatlantis. Meantime, on Gosscault's orders, his army at Helvris had moved up the Cresslepp to threaten Cennatlantis from the south. However, the Atlanteans had held off this attack, and on the return of the main Atlantean army from Giestisso, the Basquecs abandoned their attacks, but remained in the area of Giezat, north of the Cresslepp, which was in their rear.

Lingon now pulled himself together. He spent a month reorganising his armies, which were now concentrated at Cennatlantis. He began operations by throwing 120000 men at the Basquec 60000 south of the city. These were utterly defeated at the Battle of Giezat on April 27th, and forced back to Noccsat. They still maintained a hold on the city of Helvris, however. Then, in the middle of May, as Atlantean armies were approaching Atlaniphis in Manralia, Gosscault decided that he must be on the spot, and travelled south. Before he left, he warned General Guentich, who was left in command of the army, to remain on the defensive. However, not realising the true skill of Lingon, he added that if the Atlanteans again attacked east, he could, cautiously, try to manoeuvre against them. At the beginning of June, Lingon moved most of his force of 170000 eastwards, precisely to try to make the Basquecs move out against him. But then he detached a force of 70000 men off to the north to catch any such enemy move in flank. Guentich fell completely into the Atlantean trap, and advanced westwards with 130000 men. The Atlanteans deliberately fell back cautiously before them to the defensive position at Snattarona. Then, on June 7th, the detached force crashed down into the Basquecs from the north. At the Third Battle of Snattarona, the Basquecs were decisively defeated, losing 45000 men, including 25000 prisoners. Guentich was forced back south-eastwards away from Atlandravizzi, and in a brilliant pursuit, Lingon forced him to retire right back to Borepande by the end of July. At the same time, the Atlantean forces west of Helvrís besieged and took the city, while in August, a force marched westwards around the south of Lake Trannolla. This forced the Basquec army at Noccsat to retire gradually towards Vulcanipand.

REARWARD MOVEMENTS BY THE UGHANS

Lingon made no serious attempt to remove the Ughans from their position at Dravidos, until his northern army had received replacements for the force, which had been sent against the Skallands the previous year. In fact, the attention of the Ughans was being increasingly diverted to the north, where the Gestskallands were continuing to gain ground. They had 200000 men in the field against the Ughans' 160000. They sent a force into the Diefillen, and by August this had retaken Fembepand. Other armies crossed the upper Gestes and threatened the heartland of Ughrieh. At this stage, Atlantis had 90000 men opposite what had been 110000 Ughans at Dravidos and Dravizzi, but were now only 85000. In a carefully co-ordinated plan, Lingon moved his northern army against Dravizzi, while part of his southern force (60000) swung north-eastwards from Atlandravizzi across the Thyggis towards the communications of the Ughans at Dravidos. There was a fierce battle to take Dravizzi, but the Dravidos force, after a half-hearted lunge at the Atlanteans, retreated behind the Gestes.

ATLANTIS' RECONQUEST OF MANRALIA AND THE DEFEAT AT ATLANIPHIS

South of the Helvengio, both Atlanteans and Rabarrans undertook offensives, which made such progress as to sweep the Basquecs out of most of the gains they had made since the beginning of the war. In Manralia, General Buentel, newly in command, organised an army of 100000 men to try to reconquer the Province from the Basquecs. The latter had some 85000 men in the Province, but only 45000 facing the Atlanteans in the west. On March 20th, the advance started from the area of Louprut. Over the next month, the Atlanteans defeated the main Basquec army, and then moved steadily eastwards round the south of Manralia, along the highlands, following the main road called the Lairrado, and on to Nostohs. This city fell on April 16th, and Buentel now aimed to take Atlaniphis, the great fortress where the war had begun in 743. This would completely cut off the Basquec forces in Manralia from Basquecieh and all the other fronts. At the same time, a subsidiary force moved east on Noutens on the coast. However, Noutens was a hard nut to crack, containing 18000 men, and it easily held off the Atlantean attacks.

At this point, Gossclat decided he needed to be on the spot, as he did not want to lose Atlaniphis. He set about concentrating a relief force, partly from reserves on and south of the river Gestes, partly from the main armies at Helvrís and Atlandravizzi. These he sent south to Ophinoutho, and followed them himself in mid May. By this time, the Atlanteans, with about 70000 men were approaching Atlaniphis from the direction of Nostohs. Gossclat wanted to defeat this force with something better than a straightforward defence, or even counter-attack, at Atlaniphis, but he could see that his relief forces were already cut off by land from entering Manralia. He decided, therefore, on a typically brilliant flank attack from the north. He ordered the concentration of all forces in the north of the Province (except for a reduced garrison to be left in Noutens) at Dohgash, on the river Tephyens, about 100 miles NW of Atlaniphis. This amounted to about 30000 men. There were also 25000 retiring on Atlaniphis, which had a garrison of 13000, soon raised to 21000.

As Buentel moved cautiously towards Atlaniphis at the end of May, Gossclat arranged for the 40000 men he had collected at Ophinoutho to march to the mouth of the river Gayvot, opposite Dohgash and the estuary of the Tephyens. Now the remains of the great Basquec southern navy had been sheltering near Noehtens for over a year, watched by the Atlantean fleet in the Helvengio. Gossclat left part of this in place, and borrowed the rest of it, plus other boats, to ferry his army across the water to Dohgash, entirely unsuspected by the Atlanteans. Joining this force himself, he had now concentrated 70000 men on Buentel's flank. As the latter moved up to Atlaniphis, and began to besiege it in mid June, Gossclat launched his army across the Tephyens and into Buentel's flank and rear. The Third Battle of Atlaniphis was a disaster for the Atlanteans, who lost over 28000 men, and were forced to retreat back towards Nostohs.

THE ADVANCE UP THE RIVER GOSAL, AND THE RETAKING OF ATLANIPHIS

At about the same time as the Atlanteans were reoccupying Manralia, an army of Rabarrans, with some Atlanteans began its long advance north from Siphya up the river Gosal. A force of 120000 Rabarrans and 65000 Atlanteans, 185000 in all, attacked a Basquec defending force of 110000 in the Siphians Mountains and their foothills on April 28th. After some fierce fighting, the Basquecs were forced to retreat up the Gosal. Then, for the next two months, the allies gradually compelled the Basquecs to continue to retreat through the Kharadars Mountains, and on up the river, for 300 miles, to the fortress of Kharadis. This was captured after a lengthy siege on August 12th, and then there followed a serious disagreement about which way to move next.

To put this into context, we need to know that other Rabarran offensives were taking place at the same time as the advance up the Gosal. One army, of Rabarran and a few Atlantean forces, having consolidated its position in the river Katabu delta, advanced along that river eastwards towards its junction with the river Basquec. Other Rabarran units were fighting for the Basquec forts at the mouth of the river Basquec. Overall there were 200000 Rabarran men in the south of Basquecieh by August, more than in the Gosal army, facing nearly as many Basquecs. Now the Rabarrans saw this direct attack on the heartland of Basquecieh as their main strategic goal, and the threat it represented to Basquecieh was in fact evident from the reaction of Gossclat in August. At that time, he returned to his capital, Quachach, to supervise the defence of his country against the attacks from the south. The Rabarrans were increasingly impatient with Atlantis' prioritisation of freeing her own Empire first, which meant Manralia, Vulcanieh and Razira.

To this end, she wanted to take Atlaniphis before anything else, making use of the Gosal army. Seeldu, the Rabarran Commander-in-Chief, however insisted the army turn east along the river Itheerdi to its junction with the Gairase, and then south-east up the Gedvox and into the heart of Basquecieh. Thus the Basquecs would be attacked on two fronts. Seeldu became all the more insistent as he heard during August of the counter-attacks by the Basquecs on his forces on the rivers Katabu and Basquec. Atlantis countered by saying that there were not enough men in the Gosal army to carry out this plan at present. Lengthy communications back to Cennatlantis made this dispute long and laborious, and increasingly acrimonious. Brancerix threatened to remove his forces from the Gosal army and march on Atlaniphis on his own, but knew really that the army would be too small. It was finally agreed in September to use the full army to first take Atlaniphis and destroy the Basquec army there completely, while threatening to move up the Itheerdi. Then the army would split – the Rabarrans would move up the Itheerdi, with additional reinforcements from the south, while the Atlanteans combined with the Manralian army under Buentel and marched north-east across the Gairase to attack the communications of the Basquec forces on the Gestes.

The result of this compromise was an initial victory for the Atlanteans at Atlaniphis, but difficulties later, while the Rabarran advances were all stymied one after the other right into 748. So in early October, the Gosal army moved on Atlaniphis from the south, joined by Buentel from the west (where he had spent the last few months clearing out remaining Basquec garrisons in the interior, and awaiting the arrival of the Gosal army). In the climactic Fourth Battle of Atlaniphis, on October 25th, about 160000 Atlanteans and Rabarrans closed in on Atlaniphis, and the 80000 strong Basquec army there. The latter was more or less surrounded, and only 20000 men escaped. Atlaniphis, however, only fell after a full-scale storm a week later. Rabarrans and Atlanteans now went their separate ways, all the Atlanteans now coming under Buentel's command. No more serious operations took place this year now, apart from one event.

Gosscalt, accepting the temporary loss of Atlaniphis, decided that he could hamper any attempt by the Atlanteans at crossing the Gairase, by building up the Basquec garrison in Noutens. This was now the only Basquec occupied city left in Manralia apart from Dohgash. As a result, he slipped 20000 men across the water into Noutens, under cover of the Basquec fleet in the estuary. The Atlantean fleet finally tried to prevent this in November, and this led to a major fleet clash off Noutens. The Basquecs were defeated, and retired further up the estuary towards the mouth of the Gairase, but the Atlantean navy was still unwilling to follow it, due to fears about minefields and shore and floating batteries. This meant that although the Atlanteans did blockade Noutens from the sea, their efforts were repeatedly interrupted by hit-and-run Basquec naval attacks from the estuary.

ATLANTIS REGAINS COMMAND OF THE MAROSSA LIRANCA

Counter-offensives were also taking place in the war against Skallandieh, by both Atlantis and Gestskallandieh. The Gestskallands managed to make some progress westwards through the forests north of the Nundor Mountains, but they put their main efforts into an offensive into the Nundor Mountains themselves. They managed to take the passes south of the tallest mountain in the range, the Dorodil, moving from the source of the river Gedanleng. They made a serious effort, in so doing, to rouse the North Kelts here to take up arms against their Skalland masters, though this was hardly successful until the following year.

Meanwhile, Admiral Giben was seizing control of the seas bordering Anauren and Yciel Atlantis, the necessary preparation for the amphibious landings on to Skalland territory, which were in the end planned for 748. Following its defeat in 746, the Skalland navy was unable to stand up to an Atlantean fleet, which consisted of the unified navies of Sulosos (then Atlantis) and Achosil. Throughout the year, the Atlanteans managed to land on and retake all the important islands in the Marossa Liranca, including, finally, the Suinnomiori Mandengix, just west of Alosono, in which lay the main Skalland naval base in the area. This was achieved by a fierce battle, which led to the near destruction of the Skalland naval force.

The other main event at sea, on the opposite side of Yciel Atlantis, was the sortie in July by the Skalland fleet based near Arelosa, the capital of former Eliossie. This navy sailed into the Eliossia Liranca (the Bay of Eliossie), and then south through the Phonerianix Lirilix (the Phonerian straits), aiming to attack the Atlantean naval base at Achosil, or at least to take control of the seas hereabouts, and put a spoke in the Atlantean successes. The Atlanteans had most of their forces concentrated in the Marossan islands, and the small force left at Achosil was quite easily beaten at the Battle of Nundler, when it sailed up the coast of Yciel Atlantis to face the Skallands. But then the main Atlantean fleet concentrated near Phonimori island, west of Achosil, and comprehensively smashed the enemy at the Battle of Phonimori on July 29th. The remains of the Skalland fleet was harried back to Eliossien waters, and this time the Atlanteans made sure they followed the fleet up and stayed to observe it in the Eliossia Liranca.

On land, meanwhile, General Elthul advanced a great distance up the low ground between the Netaka Mountains and the river Ruphaio, taking Runcairn, and moving as far as Anetako. In fact he then retired to Runcairn, because of the dangers of Skalland attacks into the flanks of this army, as he was unable to cross the river Noilafa into the main part of Marossan at all.

Success for Atlantis in the north; in the south, the Basquecs hold the line, 748

THE SLOWING DOWN OF THE WAR AGAINST THE BASQUECS

After the great successes of 747, it appeared to both sides in the War that the victory of Atlantis and her allies must take place within the next year. However, this view soon seemed cruelly mistaken. Certainly, Atlantean advances continued in the north, where she undertook a meticulously prepared and wholly successful amphibious invasion of Anauren, while Gestskallandieh continued to make inroads into Skalland territory. But these successes did not end the war with Skallandieh, and later in the year, Atlantean and Gestskalland armies had bogged down again.

The war against the Ughans was less successful, and despite the Atlantean and Gestskalland armies gradually forcing them back into the Ughan interior, the war was still going on at the end of the year. As far as the Basquecs were concerned, Gossclat showed his strategic genius at its greatest, moving quickly between the Atlantean and Rabarran armies, and defeating or halting each in turn. The allies were not helped by the increasing mistrust between Atlanteans and Basquecs over their war plans and objectives, after the final defeat of the Basquecs. The Rabarrans, although still the recipients of large amounts of military aid from the Atlanteans, resented being tied to their war aims, which obviously involved the restoration of the former Atlantean Empire, at the expense of both Basquecieh and Rabarrieh. The Rabarrans wanted to make their own way to victory, and conclude their own peace-terms with the Basquecs, irrespective of the aspirations of their overbearing ally.

Atlantis, of course, wanted to make sure she reaped the benefits and glory of the defeat of the Basquecs, but found, as the year progressed, that for reasons of both geographical distance and internal military and political difficulties, she could not match the growing strength of the Rabarran armies. Thus it was a simple geographical fact that the Rabarran armies, especially after they had split from any united command with the Atlanteans, were much closer to the heart of the Basquec Empire than was their ally: the Atlantean forces were hundreds of miles from Bavcuat or Quachach, whether in Manralia or on the river Gestes. Moreover, although the overall Atlantean armed forces reached a peak of some 1400000 men at the start of 748, their numbers fell off rapidly after that. By the beginning of 749, they were down to 855000 and falling (especially those actually at the frontline), while the Rabarrans had gone up from 700000 in 748 to 790000 by 749, and passed the Atlantean total later in that year. There are various reasons for this Atlantean decline. One was that Brancerix was finding it increasingly difficult to conscript more men, due to organisational shortcomings, war casualties, lack of manpower available, and outright opposition to the continuing war. Thus, while the enemies of Atlantis were threatening her very heart, the citizens of the Empire were very willing to fight to defend her. But by 748 and 749, when all or nearly all Atlantean territory was cleared of enemy forces, many people felt a much diminished urge to risk their lives in the war. Furthermore, as we shall see in more detail below, political opposition to the Third Empire regime was building up fast. This meant more unwillingness to fight for a hated Government, and the need to deploy more and more forces internally to quell riots and other armed opposition.

GOSSCALT'S PLAN TO SAVE HIS COUNTRY

Gossclat had spent the winter reconstituting his main army on the Gestes at Vulcanipand, and creating a mobile strategic force of 80000 men. At the same time, he made his first – and only – feelers for peace with Atlantis. But his conditions were utterly unacceptable, demanding that the Basquecs should retain all the territory still in their hands south of the river Gestes, and east of the Gairase. He refused to treat with the Rabarrans, and obviously intended to throw his whole army against that nation, if he obtained peace from the Atlanteans. Anyway the negotiations came to nothing. Gossclat now intended to use a central strategic force plus himself to reinforce the army on the Itheerdi, and crush the Rabarrans there, then move to relieve Atlaniphis, and finally return to deal with the main Atlantean army, still west of the Gestes, as he hoped. If he was successful, he could then either carry on with proper offensives, or try again to make Atlantis settle for peace. Elsewhere, he would stay on the defensive.

So during March, he reinforced his army on the Itheerdi, near the Basquec border to 170000 men, and hurled it at the Rabarrans, who had 180000 men, many of them straggled out in little groups along the river. In the Battles of the River Itheerdi on April 2nd-7th, Gossalt crushed parts of these forces in detail, and sent them all retreating many miles eastwards up the river. He then turned his mobile force northwards to Atlaniphis. Here he joined the army of 60000 men already in place, facing about 65000 Atlanteans. An initial attack forced the Atlanteans back, and Gossalt surrounded the city, and began its siege at the beginning of May. Atlantean attempts to relieve it repeatedly failed, and Buentel was forced to abandon his siege of Noutens, and bring 30000 more men south to try to force the Basquecs back. Gossalt had foreseen this, and his forces in Noutens emerged and harassed the rear of the retreating Atlanteans.

But then a new emergency arose. Gossalt had always intended to finally move on north, and fight the Atlanteans west of the Gestes, but at the beginning of June, he received news that this army, having earlier made some ineffectual gestures against the Basquec forces in the well-defended Vulcanipand position, had seized Borepande, and crossed the river. In fact Lingon had soon become aware that he could not defeat the well-defended enemy force at Vulcanipand (although it was only half the strength of his army), and his lunges here were only ruses. At the end of May, he suddenly threw 110000 men against the much less well-defended fortress of Borepande. The Basquecs here, numbering only 40000, defended well, but were out manoeuvred and surrounded in the fort. Leaving a besieging force behind, Lingon now crossed the Gestes with 90000 men. He advanced south down the east of the river, and crossed the Thawril. The Basquec Vulcanipand army succeeded in limiting any further move south by the Atlanteans, and held them back till the hurried arrival of Gossalt and his mobile force at the end of June. There followed a series of cautious manoeuvres by the two sides. Gossalt deliberately drew Atlanteans south, over the river Vulcan, while maintaining a strong force in Vulcanipand. Then, on July 20th, he struck. He counter-attacked across the Thawril with 80000 men, and a force of 40000 emerged from Vulcanipand against the enemy flank. This Battle of the River Vulcan saw the Atlanteans badly defeated, losing 30000 men out of 100000, and forced to retreat northward. But they still remained on the east of the Gestes, and ultimately the Basquecs were unable to force them back across it.

STALEMATE ON THE OTHER FRONTS

Few further successes were obtained by Atlanteans or Rabarrans elsewhere, either. Buentel did relieve the siege of Atlaniphis eventually, at the cost of having abandoned the siege of Noutens. On the other hand, the city of Dohgash, the only other one still in Basquec hands in Manralia, fell to the Atlanteans on their march south from Noutens. The siege of Noutens was re-established in the autumn, using reinforcements, and the city finally fell in December. To the south, Rabarran attacks against the Basquecs in the interior of the country, and on the river Basquec, were largely unsuccessful, especially when Gossalt returned to take charge of this front after the Battle of the River Vulcan.

The war with the Ughans produced few victories for the Atlanteans during this year. The Gestes was crossed in a few places, but the defensive positions of the Ughans in the Gestix Mountains were far too strong for the Atlanteans to be able to take them. Their army here had in any case been reduced to 90000 by the summer. Some more success was obtained by the Gestskallands, who were able to concentrate over 240000 men against 140000 Ughans in the north. By the end of 748, the Gestskallands had forced their way through the gap between the Gestix and Yrullia Mountains, and captured Yrullia in December. However, they were unable to reach the capital, Gargros, itself.

THE AMPHIBIOUS INVASION OF SKALLANDIEH

The main success for the Atlanteans in 748 was the amphibious invasion of Skallandieh. Having decided it was impossible to force a decision by land, a large armada, along with 40000 troops, was prepared, in order to invade Skallandieh by sea. As the Bay of Marossan was now under complete Atlantean control (the Skalland fleets were blockaded in Phaiosos, and isolated in the Bay of Eliossia), the plan was to invade the former territory of Marossan in the region south of the river Ruphaio.

The victory of Atlantis over Skallandieh, 747 - 749

The invasion duly took place on April 28th, and went off without hitch, the remains of the Skalland navy being blockaded in Phaios. The invading troops turned south-eastwards after the landing, aiming to strike the Skalland forces defending the line of the river Noilafa in rear. The Skallands put up a strong resistance, and brought reinforcements north from the south. Nevertheless, they were decisively beaten at the Battle of Buatphaio, on May 22nd, and soon after, the Atlantean forces south of the Noilafa were able to advance northwards, and join up with the amphibious troops. However, the Atlanteans found themselves unable to gain any more successes in this area, as the Skallands poured in reinforcements.

Now the area north of the river Ruphaio remained wholly in Skalland hands, and a perpetual threat to the left flank of the Atlanteans. So a second amphibious invasion was organised for later in the year, this time to the north, in the Bay of Eliossie, near Neryaso. A large naval force moved into the Bay in August, forcing the remains of the Skalland navy here back into port. Then the amphibious troops landed, as planned, on August 30th. Even greater surprise was achieved than in the earlier invasion, and soon the Atlanteans, numbering from 35000 to 50000 men, swept south, taking the Skalland troops on the border of Yciel Atlantis in rear. They then seized Phaios, linked up with the southern forces, and moved 100 miles to the east, before the Skallands forced them to halt. By the end of the year, virtually the whole of former Anauren had been liberated, and the Skallands were defending their own Empire.

Atlantis: Victory abroad, civil turmoil at home, 749

GROWING DISCONTENT WITHIN THE EMPIRE

In 749, Atlantis and her allies approached complete victory at last. In June, Ughrieh, her capital taken by the Gestskallands, sued for peace. Then in September, Skallandieh too, invaded by Atlantis and Gestskallandieh, surrendered. Only Basquecieh remained defiant by the end of the year, and she too was under siege by Atlantis and Rabarrieh, and could not survive much longer. And yet, despite these harbingers of victory, the Atlantean Empire became immersed in civil turmoil, and almost revolution, in 749. This disorder continued into 750, when final victory was gained over Basquecieh, and only finally ceased in 751, with the establishment of the Fourth Empire, and an entirely new social and political order.

As we have already noted, discontent with the war had been growing for a year or more amongst Atlanteans unwilling to submit to conscription. Core Atlantean territory had already been largely cleared of the enemy, and victory seemed only a matter of time, so why should ordinary Atlanteans risk their lives unnecessarily? But this was only part of much wider social and political unrest. There was a growing impatience with the whole rigid Third Empire structure. Brancerix and the ruling Squires were determined not to change one iota of the social set-up, during or after the war. Yet the war itself was producing many changes of its own. Conscription and the movement of large armies all over the Empire and beyond led to increased social mobility, and a widening of the horizons of ordinary people. Large-scale industrialisation enhanced the importance of industrialists, factory-owners, and the middle classes in general. All these now wanted some participation in the running of the Empire. Equally, early military disasters and political mishaps had shown the need to extend participation in government and army beyond the elite, which currently ran the country. Indeed Brancerix had been forced to throw open careers in the military to the middle classes, and offer important posts to talented people, whatever their social class. He also created an Advisory Council of representatives from the major industrial towns in 746, and, on a limited scale, he included some "outsiders" in the governing circles. Finally, there had been cautious demands for political change for the past twenty years - more freedom, democracy, and social mobility -, but now, in the war years, these became much louder and more insistent.

Up until 747, the government faced little trouble, as the whole population was concerned only to fight off the Empire's enemies. But in 748 and 749, internal order in the Empire began to break down with frightening rapidity. Vocal demands for more of the population to be able to share in national and local government increased. Then, when occupying Basquec or Ughan troops were thrown out of lands and estates they had occupied in Dravidieh and Cennatlantis by the military counter-attacks of 747-8, the original landlords, usually Squires, found themselves unable to simply reoccupy their traditional places. They were threatened, evicted or removed from power by local people. The Government had to employ the Army to protect its representatives, and indeed Class 1 and 2 Squires, and several Provinces were placed under martial law in 748-9. However, this policy began to collapse, too, as unrest grew within the army itself, with revolts and disorder by lower ranks in favour of the non-landowning classes.

Brancerix and his colleagues tried to crack down hard. The Emperor refused to make any further concessions after 748, and tried to turn the political clock back to 742. He aimed to keep the Army in Squire hands. He supported his Minister for the Provinces, who was leading the way by imprisoning objectors and dissidents, and enforcing martial law. He recreated the old Internal Security Force, now called the Internal Military Police. Most damningly, though, he made no attempt to alleviate the personal and economic hardship and suffering, which the war was producing in towns and countryside. This misery led to further disorder and food riots in many places throughout 749. Nevertheless, the Emperor tried desperately to unite the Empire, by asking them to make one last effort together to finish off the enemy, who were already so nearly beaten.

"Tehens puancaxa ditontehe bourun cencsun ergain dan, puouthun e ruthouson, e losso ergain tontix ei teh e peth ulle malcethen".

" We have nearly won the great battle for God, peace and happiness, and the freedom for all to do and think as they wish."

THE OVERTHROW OF BRANCERIX III

By 749, many in the ruling class had come to the decision that Brancerix himself would have to be sacrificed. Some felt a few concessions to the rebels would have to be made; others considered the Emperor had not been harsh enough in repressing the discontent. As a result, a successful and bloodless military coup took place in May, and Brancerix was removed from power. There were a few pre-emptive arrests of his closest supporters, but it is amazing how few friends he seemed to have, when the crunch came. He was allowed to retire to his estates, and his place was temporarily taken by an Imperial Succession Council, under the close control of the Army Generalissimo and three Officers of State. But the political crisis convulsing the Empire now went from bad to worse. The members of the new Council were totally unable to agree on anything themselves, and riots and disorder spread throughout the Empire.

The parties now jockeying, and, increasingly, fighting for power, can be put into three groups. Firstly, the old Squirearchy - the landowning Classes 1 and 2 -, who were themselves divided into liberals, who were willing to make some further concessions, and traditionalists, who wanted to force the Empire back to the way it had been before the war. Secondly, the new Middle Classes, industrialists, businessmen, professional people, small landowners and writers and thinkers, who were generally moderate in their demands, but wanted to make a new start with a mildly democratic government, which would include themselves in its ranks. They wanted to see the end of elite rule by Squires, and of authoritarian rule and imposed political and religious faiths. They did, however, want to keep the lower classes in their place. But the lower classes were in fact a third group rebelling against the Third Empire, and they were much more extreme in their views. They demanded far greater equality for all, and in some cases sought the replacement of the Empire by a Republic. This demand sent a cold chill down the backs of both other groups, and opposition to it was one area in which they found common ground.

There was of course a fourth power in the land, a very strong one at this time, the Army. Most of it was still on the fronts fighting the enemy, but increasing sections of it were left behind to enforce internal security. As we have seen, there was already some disorder within the middle and lower ranks, which sometimes tended to support the rebels and rioters. The leaders now also flexed their muscles, and forced the Succession Council to come to a decision about a new Emperor. In December, they persuaded it to install Riuden, a slightly liberal Squire, to be supported by a Reform Council.

VICTORY OVER UGHRIEH

Meanwhile, the wars went on, and on two fronts they led to the victory of Atlantis and her allies within the year. The first success was against Ughrieh. By March, the Ughans were in a desperate situation. Two Gestskalland armies of over 20000 men were at the gates of the capital, Gargros, and to the east, devoid of defences, numbers of nomadic tribes were pushing into Ughan territory. East of the Gestes, but still west of the Gestix Mountains was an Atlantean army of 70000. To defend itself, the Ughans had over 80000 men against Atlantis, but only 140000 against the NE Empire, with other garrisons scattered around the country.

Within two months, Gargros had fallen to the Gestskallands after a fierce final battle, but already the country was disintegrating. Southern areas had thrown off their allegiance to Emperor Tjaidon, and had made an armistice with Ughrieh. In the north, Tjaidon, having fled his capital with the court, was deposed, and soon murdered. Atlantis and Gestskallandieh had previously agreed to make a joint peace settlement, and insisted on a formal Ughan surrender. But the trouble was that it was no longer easy to work out with which party peace should be made. Moreover, the two victors had hardly agreed amongst themselves on the peace terms, as Atlantis had far smaller armies in the field than the Gestskallands, who were indeed in possession of the Ughan capital.

Peace was agreed in June, but the peace terms were haggled over for months afterwards. The victors had long intended to split Ughrieh up as unified country, each taking portions either as outright annexations or as zones of control. This scheme was facilitated by the fact that the old Empire was splitting up of its own accord after April. Three separate kingdoms, north, central and south, had appeared, which in fact partly reflected the Ughan situation before unification after 710. The capital, Gargros, with Tjaidon's successor as Emperor became the central section. Atlantis took control of the area immediately east of the Gargros mountains, which she already occupied. But after much discussion and controversy, she did not annex it as such, but left it as one of the Ughan kingdoms, under close Atlantean supervision. Gestskallandieh annexed much territory north and south of the river Gestes as far as the Yrullia Mountains, and also made sure she had direct control of the northern Ughan kingdom. Overall, Ughrieh was left in an utterly wrecked political situation, with most of her population at the mercy, directly or indirectly, of the two victorious powers. But Gestskallandieh had come out of the war at least as well off as Atlantis, partly because of the strength of her military position at the time of victory, and partly because Atlantis was increasingly preoccupied by her internal political divisions.

VICTORY OVER SKALLANDIEH

Victory over the Ughans was followed in September, by the surrender of Skallandieh. As with Ughrieh, it was clear by the start of 749 that Skalland defeat could only be a matter of time, and Atlantis and Gestskallandieh began talking about their plans for the post-war settlement. Gestskallandieh was determined that she should take over and reunite the whole Skalland Empire again, and there was obviously no way Atlantis could prevent this. But while Brancerix was still in power, the Atlanteans insisted that Anauren should be reconstituted as part of the Atlantean Empire. The North Kelt area, mostly under Gestskalland occupation anyway should be split. During this period, the first half of the year, the Atlanteans retook the whole of former Anauren, but had problems advancing across the Ruphaio into Skalland territory. The Gestskallands were more successful in their progress westwards, and also into Kelt areas.

After the fall of Brancerix, Atlantis' position weakened, and she agreed in the end to annexing just the south of Anauren, up to the river Sulophaio, and leaving the rest as an independent kingdom. Arguments over the Keltish lands continued, and although Gestskallandieh had already occupied them, Atlantis insisted she still had a Province there called Nunkeltanieh. This fiction was finally abandoned in 752, when a comprehensive settlement made this whole area a theoretically separate Kelt state, under Gestskalland supervision. It fell soon after completely under Gestskalland control. Meanwhile the war rolled on to its end in September, with the Skallands finally surrendering to the two victors simultaneously. By this stage, Atlantean forces were penetrating into the Skalland homeland, and into the former Eliossien area, to which the Skalland capital had been moved in 747.

VICTORY OVER BASQUECIEH STILL ELUDES ATLANTIS AND RABARRIEH

Atlantean and Rabarran pincers slowly but inexorably closed in on Gossalt's armies throughout 749, and for all his genius, the writing was clearly on the wall by the latter part of the year. At the same time, Atlantis could see the initiative in the war gradually passing from her to the Rabarrans. Her armies were further from the heartlands of Basquecieh, and they were becoming outnumbered by the Rabarrans, in any case. Throughout the year 300000 Rabarrans were moving into the interior of the Basquec Empire from the south, 160000 of them advancing up the river Basquec towards Quachach and Bavcuat. Gossalt had to spend at least half of his time dealing with this threat, and the mobile army, which he had employed to good effect against the allies in 748, had had to be sent south during the winter to deal with these Basquec armies. On the Gestes, his army of 110000 men, which he accompanied at first, made a slow and careful withdrawal to the river Vulcan in March, and then across it and the river Yalldairu, south-eastwards through Vulcanieh towards the Raziris mountains during April, May and June. Lingon's Atlantean army, numbering 160000, followed the Basquecs, but was unable to bring it to a real battle. It was joined in due course by Buentel's Manralian army from Atlaniphis, 100000 strong, which edged back its Basquec opponent (70000) up the Gairase.

Meanwhile the Rabarran army on the Itheerdi, now 180000 strong, finally overwhelmed the opposing army of 110000 in a battle in August. The Basquecs were forced to retreat SE up the river Banchat, and the Basquec position in the Raziris Mountains was turned. Rather than try at this stage to deal with the Basquecs in Vulcanieh and Razira, who were left to the mercies of the Atlantean army, the Rabarrans opted to follow up the Basquecs right down to the Och Therult (Therult Mountains), which protected Bavcuat from the north. Seeing that he was now being left out of the chase altogether, Lingon suggested that Buentel should remain behind in Razira and Vulcanieh to deal with the remaining Basquecs there, to prevent them from interfering with the decisive battles further south, while he hurried on south, up the Gairase and Banchat, to join the Rabarrans in the Therult Mountains. This plan had the merit of giving the Atlanteans a presence, though only a minor one, in the final battles against Gossca't next year. It also upset Gossca't's plans for the rest of the year, as he was sure that if he left a reasonable sized force behind in Razira and the Raziran Mountains, then all the Atlantean forces would have to stay behind to deal with them. This might then give him the chance of separating the two allies, and allowing him either to defeat them independently, or make peace with the Atlanteans separately from the Rabarrans.

The Rabarrans moved up to the river Gedvox later in the autumn, but the Basquecs were able to prevent them crossing it for some time. Lingon, meanwhile, had hurried down the Gairase and round the Raziris mountains to join up with the Rabarrans in what appeared to be the final battles. The approach of the Atlanteans made the Basquecs abandon the river Gedvox and retire back to the Therult mountains by December. To the north, Buentel remained behind with some 100000 men and faced 80000 Basquecs and the forts in the Raziris Mountains. He sent a force round them to the south, to threaten Raziris itself, and protect Lingon's rear (although he had an alternative line of communications now up the river Itheerdi, like the Rabarrans.)

Victory over the Basquecs, and the collapse of the Third Empire of Atlantis, 750

THE ADVANCE ON BAVCUAT, MARCH - APRIL 750

In the spring of 750, Atlantean and Rabarran armies closed in on the mountainous homeland of the Basquecs from every direction. In the south 180000 Rabarrans were moving up the river Basquec and the roads to the east forcing back an army of about 150000 Basquecs. By the end of April the Basquecs had entrenched themselves on southernmost end of the high ground which covered the whole area for about 200 miles to the north up to the source of the river Banchat, and also stretched some 120 miles west to the sources of the rivers Gedvox and Basquec and east to Quachach and almost to Votthac. Here the almost uncrossable Thecvach mountains separated the eastern road to Quachach and the western road to Tovduith. At the beginning of March, the Rabarrans forced the Basquecs to split their armies: the largest force, about 70000 men moved some miles north-east to protect the capital, while a smaller force of 50000 men guarded the difficult route to Tovduith. At first the Rabarrans sent 110000 men on the Quachach road and contented themselves with observing the Basquecs to the west with just 70000. Separately from them, 120000 Rabarrans were roughly parallel on the river Rualtacch pressing back about 50000 Rabarrans, with the eventual aim of reaching Votthac, which lay on the river about 50 miles east of the capital, Quachach. The latter armies were not involved in the great battles of April and May, however.

In the north, Lingon with his 120000 Atlanteans began moving south up the river Banchat in March: he was accompanied by 50000 Rabarrans. The remaining 90000 men of the Rabarrans' Army of the River Itheerdi and commanded by General Seeldu, branched off south up the Gedvox. This was a plan agreed between the two commanders, which, it was hoped, would allow this southern Rabarran army to cross the pass through the mountains by the Gedvox and aim straight for Bavcuat. This was the base of the main Basquec army facing Lingon in the Therult mountains, where Gossca't himself was now situated. This threat to his rear ought to make Gossca't retreat south on Bavcuat and open the northern routes of the mountains to Lingon.

At the beginning of April, the allied army under Lingon had reached the narrow mountain pass through which ran the direct road to Bavcuat. On a ridge of high ground in the middle of this pass was the defensive position held by the Basquecs in 661 during the First Battle of Quachach. At that time Ruthopheax defeated the Basquecs with a brilliantly conceived attack. This time Gossca't again placed part of his army here, but as armies, because of modern weapons with longer ranges, could nowadays occupy wider fronts than in the earlier wars, he also occupied some of the hills to the west. Lingon had no intention of trying to break down this position. Due to entrenchments and the range of rifled weapons, it was much stronger than in the time of Ruthopheax. Instead some 70000 men moved west through other passes of the mountains near Cuaduiith, while Lingon just demonstrated in front of the main Basquec position. Gossca't had placed forces to defend the other passes, but the allies managed to get through some of them. At the same time the southern Rabarran army had moved up the Gedvox and through the mountains on the road leading to Bavcuat from the west. Gossca't realised by April 8th that his whole position had been turned, and reluctantly retreated slowly southwards, finally taking up a position on the high ground north of Bavcuat on the 14th. This position allowed him to command both the road to the south-east which led to Quachach, while also guarding the road west to the Gedvox and the route south-west to Tovduith. Behind him lay the insurmountable peaks of the Thecvach mountains. The allied army followed warily, while the Seeldu's army from the Gedvox positioned itself on hills about 40 miles west of Bavcuat, and, crucially, in a rather isolated position.

The advance of the allies into Basquecieh, 749 - April 750

GOSSCALT'S COUNTER-ATTACK AND THE RETREAT OF THE ALLIES TO CUADUITTH, APRIL 17th - 23rd

Gossalt realised as he retreated on Bavcuat that he had a brief chance of defeating the two enemy armies separately, and at then forcing them off to the north and west. At Bavcuat he had about 150000 men facing Lingon's allied force of 170000. About 40 miles to the west lay Seeldu's 95000 Rabarrans facing a Basquec army of 60000. Gossalt quietly disengaged 70000 of the 150000 men at Bavcuat, marched them westwards on April 15th - 16th and on the 17th they smashed into the Rabarrans from the south-east. The Rabarran army was comprehensively defeated, losing 26000 men and sent reeling back north-west. This was away from their communications down the Gedvox and into the forested area around the edges of the Therult mountains. Meanwhile the Basquec army turned round and marched back eastwards on the 18th, this time aiming to join the main army in an attack on the allies in front of Bavcuat. In this Battle of Bavcuat, on 19th April, the Basquecs were again successful, inflicting 23000 casualties on the Lingon's army of 170000. In these two battles the Basquecs only lost about 15000 men in total.

The allies were initially forced to retreat northwards up the road along which they had approached Bavcuat just a few days earlier. This was also Gossalt's plan, as it would completely separate Lingon's army from the Rabarrans down on the Gedvox. Lingon, however, had managed to keep in contact with Seeldu and by the 20th decided to continue his retreat north-westwards, if possible, to the passes behind Cuaduitth. There he would perhaps remain within reach of help from Seeldu. But at the same time he sent 30000 Atlanteans to take up a defensive position in the woods east of the main north road, to prevent Gossalt trying to break through in that direction. He then positioned a strong force on high ground to the west of this road, allowing him to slip his main forces north-west behind it. Gossalt was unable to move this blocking force, despite several attacks, and thus it was that the allies avoided having to continue retreating north up the main road. The allies moved on towards the high ground near Cuaduitth, attacked continually by the Basquecs, who wanted to force them into the mountains away from the passes.

All this time Seeldu had continued his retreat through the woods and round to the rear of the mountains. He managed to control the army, which had been virtually in a state of rout on the 18th. He even succeeded in losing his pursuers in this difficult country. Thus by the 21st he was climbing up the almost trackless Therult mountains and by the 22nd had passed them and lay only 13 miles from Lingon's army near Cuaduitth. Gossalt had no inkling of the presence of this force.

THE BATTLE OF CUADUITH, THE SECOND RETREAT OF THE BASQUECS TO BAVCUAT AND THE ADVANCE OF THE RABARRANS IN THE SOUTH, APRIL 23rd - 28th

Lingon had about 120000 men defending his position at Cuaduitth, facing about 130000 Basquecs. The Battle of Cuaduitth raged from late on the 22nd and on into the 23rd, with Lingon being forced gradually back into the mountains and through the pass. But about 2pm, Seeldu emerged from the north-west and smashed into Gossalt's left flank with about 45000 men. This decided the battle and the Basquecs were forced finally to retreat back on Bavcuat. They had lost as many as 28000 men, as against the allies' loss of 16000. The final Basquec offensive was finished and only complete disaster lay ahead of them now.

The Basquec counter-attack until the Battle of Cuaduitth, April 17th - 23rd

Meanwhile communications remained difficult between the Rabarran armies in the south and the north. Messages between the two, even using the newly invented electrical telegraph, often took over a week. It was easier for the Basquecs, and Gossalt had at the beginning of April ordered the small army defending the western route from the south to Tovduith to be prepared to pull back northwards, so that it could, if necessary, join in his planned manoeuvres against Seeldu's army. The eastern army, which was acting as a defence of Quachach against an advance from the south, was told to stay put, sending some men to Quachach itself, so as to prepare defences there in case they were needed. The Rabarrans followed up the Basquecs in the west, as they slowly retired towards Tovduith. The Rabarran command had originally wanted to throw their main forces straight on Quachach in the east, but this route was extremely strongly defended. As the Basquecs in the east were obviously retiring towards Tovduith and perhaps beyond, it was agreed to concentrate 110000 men to follow up this army, leaving just 70000 to face an equal number of Basquecs south of Quachach.

Gossclat retreated back towards Bavcuat, but as he did so, Lingon moved the 30000 Atlanteans that had been in the woods defending the direct road north, to strike the east flank of the retreating Basquecs. This they did on April 26th, and with help from the main army, forced the Basquecs to the east, away from Bavcuat and the main eastern road leading to Quachach. Gossclat tried to counter-attack in order to regain his route to Bavcuat, but failed in this attempt on April 27th and his army began to show signs of panic. At this point he made a fateful - and fatal - decision not to try again to force his way to Bavcuat and the eastern route, but to continue his retreat south-westwards towards Tovduith. He hoped to join up with the army down there, and throw the joint force against Lingon's army. He assumed this would have split up, part making directly for Quachach, and part following him.

THE BASQUECS' RETREAT AND THE SURRENDER OF THE BASQUECS AT TOVDUITTH, APRIL 29th - MAY 4th

Gossclat continued to retreat to Tovduith, where the route narrowed between hills to east and west. By the last week in April the southern Basquec army had already reached this position, facing south towards the Rabarrans. Gossclat hoped to pick up some of this force, and throw himself against his pursuers. But now everything went wrong. Firstly Lingon followed Gossclat's army with nearly all his armies, leaving only a small force of Atlanteans at Bavcuat to watch the road south-east to Quachach. Then he managed to edge his troops up on to the hills to the east of Gossclat's army. Equally the southern Rabarran army had forced the Basquecs off the westernmost hills at the Tovduith gap. The result was that Gossclat's Basquecs became increasingly hemmed in the valley, with the allied army to the north and east of them. To the south, the other Basquec army was being pushed north, although a part of it still held the eastern hills. The day of decision came on May 4th. The Basquecs were surrounded on all sides - Gossclat and a small force of some of his southern army managed to escape into the almost pathless wilds of the mountains to the east. (8 days later Gossclat and a few others finally reached Quachach.) But the majority of the Basquec armies surrendered to the Atlanteans and Rabarrans by the end of the day. This Battle of Tovduith involved the surrender of about 155000 Basquecs to a force of 280000 Atlanteans and Rabarrans.

THE ALLIED ADVANCE ON AND STORM OF QUACHACH, MAY 8th - MAY JUNE 23rd

It took a while for the allies to sort themselves out and deal with the huge number of prisoners they had garnered, but already on May 8th, 100000 men began the march back to Bavcuat and then on round to Quachach, the capital of Basquecieh. Gossclat's whereabouts were unknown to anybody at first and when news of the disastrous battle at Tovduith reached the Basquec authorities in Quachach, they soon began to consider seeking terms for ending the war. However Gossclat turned up on May 12th and immediately began arranging the defence of the capital. By May 16th, the allied army had reached Bavcuat and soon began moving on Quachach. The Basquecs had about 40000 men left to defend the capital, plus the army of 70000 facing the Basquecs to the south. Gossclat hastily pulled this army back to hold the hills surrounding the city, which was situated deep inside a sort of cleft in the mountains, easily defended from every direction except the east. However 110000 men could have little chance against the 300000 allied troops which would eventually be in a position to assault the city and its defences.

By the end of May, these allied forces had reached the city and were soon able to force the enemy off the hills surrounding it. The allies demanded that Gossclat should surrender himself and his forces but he refused. Indeed he called on his army on the Rualtacch, to the east, to come across and attack the allies in rear. But this army was only 50000 strong, and was being forced back all the time by 120000 Rabarrans. By the end of May it had reached Vothac, and rather than stand siege there or help Gossclat's forces, it retired north-east across the river, with its commander declaring himself the new ruler of the country. He soon started peace negotiations with the Rabarrans.

In the end there was no help for it but that the allies had to storm Quachach. This Second Battle of Quachach lasted ten days, from June 13th to the 23rd, and involved the most bitter street and house to house fighting in the Basquec capital. The Basquecs, inspired by Gossclat, resisted with incredible tenacity, using every device and booby trap they could to defend their city. At the same time allied guns bombarded the city ceaselessly from the hills all round. Much of the place was reduced to ruins, and by June 23rd, over 55000 soldiers were casualties as well as perhaps 20000 civilians. The allies, who had about 240000 men fighting (90000 Atlanteans and 150000 Rabarrans), lost 60000 men (24000 Atlanteans and 36000 Rabarrans). Gossclat was killed on June 22nd. On June 24th the remaining Basquec soldiers and members of the Government surrendered unconditionally.

The Rabarrans, and for a while, Lingon, on behalf of the Atlanteans, discussed terms with the Basquecs in the capital and in Vothac, the second city, while the rest of the country gradually broke up into squabbling warlords. Later in the year, the Rabarrans reached a peace-treaty with the Basquecs, whereby they annexed a lot of territory to the west of the river Basquec, and in the far south, and maintained a considerable military presence in the country. The Atlanteans, due to the civil unrest to be described shortly, did not reach a full settlement till 751, and had little influence on the internal settlement of the country. The end result was a Basquec nation divided up into four territories, and a very strong Rabarran influence on the centre and western edge of the country.

CIVIL TURMOIL IN ATLANTIS

At the same time as the war with Ughrieh was coming to its conclusion, Atlantis was becoming increasingly riven by political divisions at home. As described above, the Helvran nobleman Riuden had been installed as Emperor in 749 by a more liberal clique in the ruling class, backed by parts of the Army, which were acting on Internal Security duties. It soon became obvious that Riuden was just a pawn in the hands of the old die-hard Third Empire Squirearchy, and politics continued almost as before. Of special concern to the middle and lower classes was the Government's policy of running down the large industrial and factory establishments, which had grown up because of the war, and the laying off of more and more workers. This was in addition to the gradual reduction in the strength of the Army, and throughout, an obvious determination to keep the whole Third Empire structure in being. All power was obviously to remain in the hands of the upper classes.

As this failure of reform became clear during 750, there was a resurgence of the riots in the bigger towns. In many cases, these were also caused by a growing shortage of food. The Government's attempts to restore the Class 1 and 2 landowners to the property, of which they had been deprived by the war and by local tenants taking unilateral action, met strong, armed resistance. By May, the government was losing control of large parts of the Empire. It wavered between some slight measures of conciliation (the role of "Loyalists" was finally abolished in April), and military force – more Army units were brought back from the frontiers of the Empire to the centre, to act as police and internal security. These were to protect landed estates and patrol the increasingly rebellious large cities. At the same time, foreseeing the end of the war within a few weeks, it ordered the reduction of the Army from about 750000 to 580000, and many of the losses would be from the officer class.

BUENTEL'S REVOLT AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT, AND THE THREAT OF CIVIL WAR

This growing turmoil reached a climax, as the armies and generals of the Empire began to take sides, for or against the status quo, and threatened to bring civil war down on to the Empire. The most significant event was the decision of Buentel to march to Cennatlantis in support of the middle-class demands for a complete end to the Third Empire, and the setting up of a new, more democratic regime. Buentel, it will be recalled, had long had democratic beliefs, and he had fallen foul of Brancerix in 746, at a time when he had been commander of the main, central Atlantean army. He was moved to Manralia, and replaced by the ultra-loyal Lingon. He now seized the opportunity of getting his revenge. It was at the beginning of July, only a week or so after a truce had been signed with the Basquecs, that he marched 65000 out of the 100000 men in his army in Razira and Yall. Thiss. back towards Cennatlantis. He left his second-in-charge to stay at the front with the remnants of his army. Lingon, who was technically in strategic command of Buentel's army, was horrified, and accused him of desertion. Soon after, he realised more clearly that there was a political and military showdown approaching, and left the front to a subordinate, following Buentel with 80000 men of his own. This was at the end of July. This gradual disintegration of the Atlantean army from the frontiers, the paralysis for the next few months of any central political authority, and the political upheavals, which continued for at least another year, led to the complete collapse of Atlantean diplomacy. In other words, Atlantis was unable to take any real advantage of the collapse of her enemies at the end of the war, and left the way open for Rabarrieh, in particular, to secure great political advantages in the peace-treaty with Basquecieh.

THE RIVAL ARMIES GATHER AROUND CENNATLANTIS

Buentel realised he was facing strong opposition to his revolt. Apart from Lingon, with up to 180000 men in Basquecieh, there were several other armies, which were either hostile or at best neutral – none had come out in support of Buentel in July. In Yeldatlantis and Cennatlantis, there were at least 60000 men acting as police and Internal Security. On the river Gestes, and on the Ughan border, there were another 60000, the army, which had recently defeated the Ughans. Finally there was General Elthul's army, 180000 strong, in the north-west, which had just defeated Skallandieh. Buentel was least concerned about the central forces, as these were split up into penny packets, guarding towns and property, and fighting a nascent guerrilla army, which wanted to overthrow the Third Empire on its own. Some, too, were at best lukewarm about fighting their fellow-countrymen. Uneasily supporting these rebels was the group of middle-class democrats, mostly in Atlantis, Cennatlantis, Gentes and Helvris, who had appealed to Buentel to support them. As he marched back, Buentel gathered up and recruited additional men, but also left up to 40000 behind to delay Lingon, when he had heard that he was following behind.

Riuden and his government, within the city of Cennatlantis, now ordered the "Ughan" army to intercept Buentel, before he reached Cennatlantis. Buentel had crossed the Gentes at Vulcanipand, which made no attempt to resist him. He left a garrison of his men there to hold up Lingon, and moved north, intending to approach Cennatlantis from the east. He then came up against the "Ughan" force near Yellis on August 10th. After a short battle, there was a halt and a truce, and 30000 of the "Ughan" army came over to Buentel. The rest, he sent back to the frontier.

Riuden now ordered the immediate suppression of all urban revolts, beginning with Cennatlantis, where some rebels had barricaded themselves into buildings. Loyal forces forced these to surrender or retreat to the south, where they were joined by up to 15000 other rebels, a mixed bag of disaffected, regular soldiers, and armed workers and middle-class citizens. Their mood was becoming increasingly bitter, because of a number of atrocities and massacres committed by the loyalist troops, when clearing the rebels out of Cennatlantis. Both sides were trying to win over Elthul's forces in the north. Elthul had remained resolutely neutral hitherto, but had moved 70000 of his men southwards towards Cennatlantis in August, though without making it plain whom he was intending to support. Finally in September, he came out in favour of Buentel and the rebels. Buentel, by this time, was manoeuvring to the north of Cennatlantis, near Gilliso, and seized Gasiroto at the same time. He had 80000 men present, and was faced by about 50000 loyalists at Cennatlantis. There were also 15000 rebels facing them nearby. Also by this stage, Lingon had fought his way north to the Gestes, with some 70000 men.

DECISION AT CENNATLANTIS – THE VICTORY OF THE REBELS

Negotiations between the two sides went on throughout August and early September, but it was soon clear that Riuden was refusing to make any serious concessions at all. The rebels agreed on Sualofo Thildoyon as their candidate for a new Emperor, not without some misgivings from the more extreme democrats. They also agreed that the whole Third Empire structure should be dismantled by force. Buentel was now getting nervous about the approach of Lingon, and decided to bring matters to a quick conclusion. He crossed the Dodolla at Rundes, and approached Cennatlantis from the north. The loyalists came out to meet him, and in a hard-fought battle on September 25th, they were defeated, and forced back into, or through Cennatlantis. Buentel and the other rebel forces now completely surrounded Cennatlantis, which was occupied by Riuden and his government, and about 8000 soldiers. Negotiations resumed, but they still refused to submit to the rebels, fearing for their lives.

Meanwhile, Lingon, unable to cross the Gestes at Vulcanipand, moved up its east bank, and crossed at Borepande, still holding a garrison loyal to him. By the end of September, he had reached the Burastoura. To counter him, Elthul now properly committed himself for the first time, and moved with 45000 men into Gasiroto and Sirottis. Riuden managed to smuggle a message out to Lingon, ordering him to come to their help at once. But the rebels intercepted it, and Lingon turned instead to deal with Elthul. Buentel continued to hesitate, and seemed to be trying to give the Squires as long as he could to surrender peacefully. He did not want to see Cennatlantis and its inhabitants consumed in a bloodbath. But matters were taken out of his hands. Egged on by Thildoyon, the rebel forces now attacked the enemy in the capital from the south and the west, daring Buentel to support them. They could not succeed on their own, and reluctantly Buentel committed a small part of his force to join them. The original document here describes vividly the dreadful end of the leaders of the Third Empire in Cennatlantis.

Conclusion

THE RESULTS OF THE WAR

The Great Continental War had been by far the biggest and most destructive war ever fought on the Continent. It involved every nation surrounding Atlantis, and Atlantis itself, of course, for up to seven years of fighting. The one nation not involved was "Quendelieh", the Western Empire, whose territories now abutted those of Atlantis in Phonaria. Armies far larger than ever before were raised by conscription in all these countries. Atlantis had 1,400,000 men under arms at the maximum in early 747, out of a population of 35,000,000 (excluding areas occupied by the enemy – it was 76,000,000 in 743). Basquecieh armed 1,100,000 out of a population in the Basquec Empire of 38,000,000 at any one time; Ughrieh 750,000 out of 30,000,000; Rabarrieh 680,000 out of 18,000,000 (excluding enemy occupied areas); Skallandieh 600,000 out of 13,000,000; and Gestskallandieh 550,000 out of 11,000,000. Thus there were over five million men in arms at the high point of the Continental War, which, it should be remembered, involved essentially pre-industrial societies.

Casualties were equally massive, and dwarfed anything hitherto, and every war that followed up until the Final Wars after 870. Atlantis lost over 550,000 fighting men killed, either by war or disease. Figures for the other countries are much less certain, but probably Basquecieh lost 500,000, Ughrieh 250,000, Rabarrieh 400,000, Gestskallandieh 230,000, and Skallandieh 350,000. Rabarrieh and Basquecieh had of course also been at war from 732 till 737, when they had lost another 100,000 between them (mostly Rabarrans). In addition to the major campaigns and battles, described in the account above, there were many other areas of "minor" fighting and skirmishes, which produced their own crop of casualties. Full-scale guerilla fighting took place against the Basquecs in the south and west of Manralia, and the Basquec occupied regions to the south. Similarly, there were incursions by nomadic and other small tribes into the extreme east of Ughrieh and Gestskallandieh from about 746 onwards and revolts by the North Kelts against the Skallands after 747. Furthermore there was considerable loss of civilian life in certain areas, especially those involved in guerilla warfare, and incursions by "uncivilised" tribes, but also between certain of the major combatants, whose feelings towards each other were particularly bitter. This bitterness led to frequent massacres and ill-treatment of civilians, and was particularly prevalent between Rabarrieh and Basquecieh in the areas of Basquecieh and Rabarrieh invaded by the other side. It also occurred in the parts of Dravidieh and Vulcanieh occupied by the Basquecs. Nearly as serious was the destruction to property in these areas and other regions fought over, such as Anauren and the edges of Ughrieh. Incidentally, Anauren, which disappeared as an independent country after the Skalland invasion of 744, was particularly badly hit by the war. Soldiers and civilians of Anauren suffered around 150,000 deaths during the wars, and terrible damage to property.

With this as the background, it is hardly surprising that at the end of the war, all the combatants were prostrated, and most suffered, then or later, serious internal and political upheavals. Ughrien disintegrated as a united kingdom, and fell prey to civil war on and off after the 770s. Basquecieh collapsed into civil turmoil in the 760s. Skallandieh was swallowed up by Gestskallandieh, and Atlantis saw the collapse of its Third Empire, and narrowly avoided civil war thereafter. Only Rabarrieh and Gestskallandieh came out of the struggle more or less unscathed, but even in the case of Rabarrieh, trouble occurred some years later, when its whole social system was revoultionised by a religious revival.

THE EFFECTS OF INDUSTRIALISATION

The Continental War began virtually as a pre-industrial war, but throughout its course, the fruits of industrialisation and innovations profoundly affected the weapons used in the fighting. The fighting-men of all the combatants began in 743 with a small number of firearms, rifled or not, and a mixture of artillery types. By the end of the war, nearly everyone was fully equipped with rifles and rifled artillery. This greatly altered the way battles were fought, for the increased firepower and range of the new weapons, made the close-order tactics and infantry and cavalry charges of earlier warfare far too costly. So soldiers dug trenches, and both sides often faced each other in stalemate, as at Cennatlantis in 745, and Atlaniphis later on, as well as in south Anauren and on the borders of Gestskallandieh and Skallandieh. Only the ability to engage in wide turning movements enabled a war of movement to be resumed by Atlantis, Rabarrieh and Gestskallandieh after 747. Attempts were made, especially by Atlantis and Basquecieh, to break the deadlock by providing additional protection for the infantry from armoured transports with steam propulsion, but although this would be the way of the future, it had little success, at least on land.

At sea, however, the new industrial processes which produced armoured protection and steam-power were much more successful. Before 743, parts of all navies were still wooden and powered by sail. Larger breech-loading and rifled guns had, however, appeared on many ships in almost all navies. The Basquecs had led on this, and in the 730s also adapted a number of mostly smaller ships with iron armour plating, and, in some cases, with steam-engines, as well as large rifled guns. These ships had some success in the 732 war against Rabarrieh, and again after 743. Atlantis, as well as Skallandieh, quickly copied these Basquec initiatives in the years running up to the War, thereby finally rendering the ban on new technology a completely dead letter. The fighting in the south led to initial Basquec victories, largely due to their superiority in ironclads, steam-power and the size and power of their gunnery. However, the allies caught up later.

In the north, Skallandieh had deliberately built a small but very advanced navy before 744, with iron armour and steam-power. This helped it to its initial overwhelming victories against the less well-prepared Atlantean ships in the area. Anauren, too, had some armoured ships, which were captured by the Rabarrans in 744. Again, later, Atlantis caught up with its rivals in this region, and by 750, all its major ships were armoured and powered by steam.

International entanglements: Luron Iustacin, 762 – 768

A medallion of Luron Iustacin

GROWING ASSERTION OF THE COUNCIL AND MINISTERS

Iustacin proved himself to be an able administrator, as his uncle had hoped, but he had increasingly to assert himself against his Ministers and the Council. His Ministers were chosen, according to the constitution, by the Emperor and the other Ministers, but increasingly these Ministers, and especially the Chief Minister, took over both the appointment of new members of the Government, and its administration. Iustacin maintained his authority during his short reign, but he had to listen to more and more arguments on all subjects. This was especially the case with foreign policy, where both Ministers and the Council were split between pacifists or non-interventionists on the one hand, and imperialists or interventionists on the other. The latter gained the upper hand in this period, and as the Council appointed the Provincial Governors, they too usually reflected the views of the dominant party in the Council. Over the next couple of decades, foreign and internal policy fluctuated depending on the balance of power in the government. By the 780s, a real "party" style of government had developed, and the Emperor seemed to be becoming first a sort of President, and later a mere figurehead.

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCES AND ADVENTURES

Iustacin was initially keen to continue an idea of his uncle, which was to set up International Conferences ("Intisainduyix Buohuatsix" in Atlantean) of the "Great Powers", which would settle amicably any international crises or quarrels which arose. However, he was not an imperialist, and the military interventions of the later part of his reign were imposed on him by his Ministers and the Council. In 763, the first International Conference was instituted, involving all the major Powers. Its main aims were to try to settle the problem of the Basquec Civil War, which had begun in 761, and censor or prevent such unilateral action as the recent invasion of Anauren by Skallandieh. In fact, such action in Basquec was undermined by some of the participants intervening themselves in the Civil War, to protect or increase their own interests, although they claimed at the internationally that they were protecting the Basquecs. The Conference agreed finally to intervene jointly against any nation invading another, or to halt a civil war. As a result, nations near Basquec gradually sent more and more forces into that country to fight on behalf of whichever clique their government favoured.

In 764, Atlantean forces entered semi-independent Razira, and in 765, they crossed into Basquec territory, supporting the previous civilian government. Rabarran armies had been fighting since 763, and various small states to the east of Basquec were also embroiled. In all cases, distances and terrain made co-ordinated operations difficult. The intervening armies were quite small, and operations there tended to be most effective with fast-moving cavalry forces. By and large, the interventionists supported different sides in the war, and managed not to come to blows with each other – or at least, any such fights were not publicised. It is interesting to note the increasing use of steam-power by the Atlanteans and Rabarrans for supply, mostly using ships on the waterways.

SOCIETY AND THE ARTS – THE REVOLT AGAINST THIRD EMPIRE STANDARDS

The Fourth Empire was gradually exhibiting a growing difference from all previous epochs. One material reason was simply because of the growth of industrialisation. From the 760s onwards, all the roads in the Empire were changed and improved to allow the running of steam transport. Later railways also appeared. A plethora of manufactured goods also dramatically changed the lifestyle of all the inhabitants of the Empire.

But social and moral changes were equally important. During the 760s, society in general finally threw off the constraints of Third Empire standards and codes of behaviour. Originally, reaction against the conservatism, authoritarianism and religious orthodoxy of the early Third Empire had begun in secret and quietly before the start of the Great Continental War. It was in any case limited at this stage to some of the Squires, and a small number of artists and thinkers. The War shook up the whole of society, and gradually in the 750s, standards of behaviour and morals became looser and freer. By the 760s, this was spreading to all corners of society, and personal morals were much laxer. This was noticeable, above all, in the way sexual behaviour became freer – divorces were much more common, extra-marital affairs more open, and disapproval of any of this was increasingly muted. This was reflected by Iustacin himself, who married three times, and was very promiscuous in his private life, though this was kept fairly well hidden till after his death.

As the grip of the Squires and State Theism was loosened after 750, agnosticism and interest in other religions, especially Naturism, became much more prevalent. The overall ethos of society became materialistic, particularly as far as the arts, science and philosophy were concerned. Industrialization, and the discoveries of science and technology, encouraged a rejection of idealistic views of the world and of humankind, and an interest in psychological explanations for human behaviour. This was reflected in art, as much as anywhere else. Drama and the novel were increasingly driven by psychological and sexual themes, and the novel in particular, became the pre-eminent artform of the period. Novelists were more and more daring in the topics they dealt with, and concentrated on realism and psychological truth. The archetypal novelist of the time was Fembeye, between about 735 and 775. He led the way in making novels realistic and comprehensive of all levels of society. The next generation is represented by Cettien, from the 760s till his death in 795. He was a taboo-breaker, and moved from the realism of the 760s and 770s, to the "shocking" sensationalism which became popular after the 780s. Throughout this time, too, the visual arts followed suit, and became above all realistic.

THE END OF THE REIGN

Iustacin's many personal liaisons resulted in a plethora of children, from whom his successor could be chosen. The Succession Committee was stymied for some time, and Iustacin himself favoured one of his older sons, who was imperialist-minded, and wanted to reassert the role of the Emperor. The Committee, led by the Chief Minister, preferred, in the end, more of a nonentity, who could be moulded to the will of others. They overruled Iustacin and settled on another nephew of Thildoyon, who was a retiring, religious-minded country squire, Creholos Tuolden. This description alone shows how out of touch he was likely to be with the new mood of the Empire. Some of the Council – the more conservative ones –, hoped his piety and conservative morals would help to counteract what they saw as the increasing immorality of the age. They had to be careful how they put this, of course, without seeming to criticise Iustacin too directly. The more liberal or forward-looking members of the Committee assumed Tuolden would just be a figurehead, whose beliefs and attitudes they could ignore. Iustacin would not give in, but by 767 he was suddenly incapacitated by illness, and in 768, at the age of only 38, died of a sexual disease. The illness had been present for some years, but after 767 it suddenly got worse. As a result, Tuolden was unable to stand out any longer against the Committee's decision, and agreed to their nomination late in 767, when he was so ill, that he was probably unaware of what he was doing.

"A figurehead Emperor?": Creholos Tuolden, 768 – 781

THE CHIEF MINISTER AND THE "PARTY SYSTEM" TAKE OVER

It was during the reign of Tuolden that the position of the Emperor sank almost to that of a figurehead, largely due to Tuolden's own retiring and self-obsessed character. The Council and particularly the Chief Minister really did come to run the Empire. Tuolden did not so much lose the imperial prerogatives – they were still there in the constitution –, as cause them to atrophy through lack of use. So new Imperial Ministers were now chosen by the Chief Minister and his colleagues, who then simply informed the Emperor. The Chief Minister himself was chosen now by convention from the Council, rather than by the choice of the Emperor. The Emperor's Imperial Advisers were increasingly absent from Ministerial discussions, and became the personal coterie of the Emperor, who were involved in his personal interests, but hardly in the running of the country.

At the same time, the Council was becoming permanently split on "party" lines. That is to say, a number of semi-permanent groupings of Councilmen grew up, separated by their differing opinions on internal and foreign affairs. This development reflected the fact that candidates for Council elections came from District level, that is, the most local level, where they were more strongly – and democratically- influenced by local concerns. This After the 780s, other "party" issues also intruded – ethnic feeling, the demands of the (trades) Guilds, and by the 790s, military and nationalist interests, and the Brotherhood Party.

CHANGING ATTITUDES TOWARDS FOREIGN POLICY

After 768, a more pacifist policy dominated foreign affairs, partly due to Tuolden's personal inclinations (which still meant something at this stage), and partly due to party changes within the Council. Atlantean military involvement in the Basquec Civil War ended in 768, conceding victory to a faction supported by Rabarrieh. This faction shared many of the Rabarrans' beliefs, and over the next few years, the Rabarran religion and style of government spread throughout Basquecieh. After 776, the country renamed itself "Uaruiltecchoth" or "Country of Great Rivers", transliterated into Atlantean as "Uarilteccoht". An International Conference held in 769 produced agreement by all parties to permanently quit Basquecieh. After 772, however, there is another reversal of policy within Atlantis, and, overriding or ignoring Tuolden's pacifism, the Ministers and a majority of the Council agree to intervene in the recent Ughan Civil War. It will be recalled that after the end of the Continental War, Ughrieh was split into three separate kingdoms, one under Atlantean hegemony, one under Skalland influence, and the third one relatively independent. After 770, these three countries began fighting amongst themselves, and also to throw off the control of Atlantis and Skallandieh. At the 773 4th International Conference, the participants agreed to "settle" the Ughan fighting by intervention, both to prevent one country defeating the other two and taking over Ughrieh, and to preserve some influence themselves. Skallandieh sent in an army early in 773, Atlantis followed in 774, and the Basquecs joined in 775. Forces from the east also crossed the borders at the same time. As a result, the war became a complete quagmire after 775, and, as with the Basquec War in the 760s, all the armies were too small, and the country too large, for any one party to come out on top. The terrain, though, was much more mountainous, and the roads much poorer than in Basquecieh, and all the forces found quick movement very difficult. Cavalry had little effect, and infantry forces, many now armed with the new magazine rifle, soon became bogged down in static positions and sieges, as manoeuvres and frontal attacks were extremely expensive.

By 780, the financial and military losses had mounted so high as to cause the government yet again to change its policy. Already in 779, the Basquecs had pulled out. In 781, the Atlanteans also withdrew, and the Skallands finally followed in 785. They left behind an exhausted and wasted country, full of homeless civilians and refugees, many of whom had been fleeing across the river Gestes into Atlantean territory for years. Ughrieh itself collapsed into a multitude of little territories, ruled by local warlords, which generally fiercely resisted any outside influence. Localised fighting between these warlords became endemic for the next twenty years, sending more floods of refugees across the Gestes, or north or southwards. Some form of peaceful coexistence between about seven or eight larger Ughan states finally settled over this unhappy country after 805.

THE GREAT ABDICATION CRISIS

Tuolden was by nature an introspective and retiring man, tall, dark and stooping. He never married, and in fact seemed uninterested in sexual liaisons of any sort. His greatest passions were religious and moral, and initially he tried to project his beliefs in pacifism and harmonious living on to the life of the Empire at large. But he was easily cowed by argument, and soon reverted to personal and introspective studies, sometimes joined by just a small group of close friends. His increasing interest in religion led directly to the Great Abdication Crisis of 780-1.

Tuolden, though initially an orthodox believer in Theism, gradually developed an interest in and attraction to Naturism, with its optimistic belief in the teachings and saintly life of its founder, in reincarnation, and its creed of oneness of man and the natural world. Now by this time, the "official" religion of Theism, the "depoliticised" version of Third Empire State Theism, was seen as old-fashioned and irrelevant to many people. Many had turned to more exotic religions, including Naturism, or to astrology, or more philosophical beliefs. Many others had given up on religion altogether, professing agnosticism or outright atheism, which seemed more suited to the technological and materialistic ethos of the age. Tuolden thought that Naturism represented a positive statement for life, which would counter the meaningless formalism of Theism, the pointlessness of agnosticism, the pessimism of most contemporary philosophy and the facile banality of superstition and astrology. He expressed such opinions at length in his voluminous memoirs, and his sometimes moving poetry, which came to light after his death. Finally, in 778, he officially "converted" to Naturism.

Now in the agnostic and undogmatic climate of the times, this might not have been expected to cause a crisis. But according to the constitution, while all religions were tolerated, including atheism, the State Religion, as professed by the Emperor and high officials, and used in state ceremonies, had to be Theism. Partly for party political reasons, and partly as a rearguard action by the old-guard dogmatic conservatives, who had supported Tuolden for Emperor in the first place, a crisis was cooked up. This was then fanned by the now influential newspaper press, different parts of which were supported by differing political factions. Many people, including some Ministers and many Councilmen were personally quite tolerant or agnostic, and bore all necessary state Theist ceremonials with cynicism or disinterest, but were dragged unwillingly into supporting obstinately one side or the other in this manufactured crisis. So after much argument, Tuolden was told that he would have to either abandon his new faith, or forfeit the throne. Sensible voices arguing for changing the constitution to allow tolerance of Imperial religious belief were quashed at this time. (However, only four years later, under a new Empress, it would be agreed that the Emperor could adopt Naturism, if he wished, as long as he also took part in the relevant state theist ceremonies as a formality. The whole crisis seemed pointless to contemporaries, as if it had come from another, earlier epoch, when religion was more a matter of life and death. We can compare it in modern times to the British Abdication crisis of 1936, which also depended on beliefs about marriage and divorce, which were already old-fashioned). Tuolden hung on through 780, and then, in 781, hating argument and personal recriminations, abdicated in early 781. He retired to Helvrieh, and led a life of contemplation and writing until his death at the age of 76 in 802.

A FEMALE SUCCESSOR

As the price of agreeing to abdicate, Tuolden forced Lirinne Sifone on the Succession Committee as his successor. Lirinne was in fact personally agnostic, liberal and artistically minded, and so was also popular with liberal politicians, who in any case thought that she would be another "figurehead" head of state, content to mind her own business. Tuolden saw her as someone who held cultured, pacifist and internationalist views, and he appreciated her non-political nature, and indeed, that she would be only the third Empress in Atlantean history, for he held strongly that both sexes should have equal opportunities to rise to the top. He seems to have tacitly ignored her liberal and agnostic views, so different to his own. The only opposition came from those conservatives, who had supported Tuolden, and then engineered his abdication. However, there was something of a national reaction against them after the Abdication Crisis, and in any case, their power was rapidly waning – the next two regimes were notable for their "liberal" feel. They were ultimately outmanoeuvred by Lirinne, who diplomatically announced her "official" adherence to Theism before her accession, though with the proviso that she would work to rescind the "Theism or abdicate" law of the constitution.

2. The perversion of power: Borbar Measel, 812-819

THE TYRANT AND HIS CHARACTER: TWO VIEWS

Borbar Measel can be seen in two ways. Firstly, he has traditionally been considered as an Atlantean nationalist, a xenophobe, and an adherent of the most extreme wing of the Brotherhood Party. As such, he rejected all the changes wrought within the Empire since 750, and wanted only to return it to its original Atlantean core, purged of all other races. It would be run for and by the Juralic peoples, especially the Atlanteans, while all other peoples would be suppressed, expelled or exterminated. This doctrine was not part of Yrutiens' original brotherhood philosophy, which sought no more than the return of ethnic minorities within the Empire to their "original" subordination to Juralic leaders, or to encourage them to leave the Empire. Later this was developed by some Brothers to suggest that the bounds of the Empire should be contracted to exclude these peoples altogether. Borbar's beliefs were developed in the 800s by a small Brotherhood clique, and had indeed been condemned by Yrutiens just before he died. He and some others wrote a book in 803 setting out these views, and it is interesting that Borbar's contribution laid particular stress on the need for absolute power and authority to be vested in the Brotherhood leaders, and the necessity of complete ruthlessness in suppressing all dissent. Others of the writers added that while violence and terror would help to secure this power, the public should also be given "carrots" in the form of entertainment to keep them favourable disposed towards the regime.

This is one view about Borbar. But the other angle is that Borbar was really just an amoral adventurer. Power-mad and out for what he could get, he used the extreme views of the Brotherhood Party simply as a cloak for his own ambitions. Recently this has been taken as the most accurate view of his disturbed character. In fact, though, we have to consider that both these elements contributed towards his character and policies. There is no doubt that he genuinely believed in the extreme Brotherhood beliefs in Atlanteanism, and the ruthless methods necessary to maintain them in power. Moreover, his amorality was moulded by the atmosphere of the previous decades, in particular by the philosopher Pouton. This meant that he felt no inhibitions whatever about using violence, torture and murder to maintain absolute power for himself, and carry out his policy of remaking the Empire as a pure Juralic state.

BORBAR THE MAN

Borbar was generally known by his first name, unlike his predecessor, and was supposedly an Emperor, although he hated being called that, preferring the term "Leader" of the Empire. None of the Tyrants (as they were to be termed after 828) called their period of power the Fifth Empire, as might have been expected, but simply the Atlantean Empire; in 821, Brindor would change this to the "Brotherhood-Federation", with himself as "Great Leader".

Borbar was a giant of a man, over 6 foot 4 inches tall, weighing 17 stone, with thick black hair, and the bushy moustache which became "de rigueur" as a fashion mark of the era. He was harsh and strict, showing little affection to anybody. To anyone who crossed him, he was invariably unforgiving, and such people were usually executed or imprisoned for many years. He was married, and had 4 children by 819 (when he was 48 years old). It emerged later, however, that he also led a secret life of liaisons with other women, some of whom were revealed to be non-Juralic. Such revelations, and other more extreme ones, were assiduously put out after the fall of the Tyrants in 828. This was another example of his deviousness, as publicly, at least at the start of his reign, he continued to promulgate the morality of good family values.

BORBAR AND THE ARMY

ATLANTEAN SECURITY ARMY, c 815

Borbar was determined to castrate the Frontier Army, so that he would never suffer the fate of his predecessor at his own hands. He carried out another purge in 813, replacing all non-Juralic officers with Atlanteans, where possible. He also reduced its size considerably, and in both these ways, impaired its efficiency quite a lot. He was forced to introduce conscription for the Frontier Army after 815, and in fact deliberately encouraged the use of certain non-Juralics, such as the supposedly warlike Dravedeans. But at the same time he sought to eliminate the signs of the Dravedeans within the Empire, and rechristened the Province of Dravidieh II as Gestchalcrieh. The Frontier Army was kept busy with relatively minor operations across the Gestes and in the south, keeping it employed and out of mischief. This kept the Ughan Army out of the way while Borbar persecuted the Ughan population west of the Gestes. There was also a revolt against Brindor in Penedrin (The South Island) in 813, which was put down with difficulty only by 817. Guerilla activity continued, however, and Brindor finally abandoned the Island in 821, withdrawing the garrison. (It never reverted to Atlantean control thereafter).

TREACHERY AND MASSACRE AT THE DOHGASH PEACE CONFERENCE

In the south, the cease-fire negotiated by Celeuos with the Rabarrans broke down, and small-scale fighting resumed. Gradually the effective area under Atlantean control shrank, notably in the former Yall. Thiss. Province. Terrorism and assassination of Atlantean officials also resumed, and infuriated Borbar. He decided to teach the Rabarrans a terrible lesson, and the result, though admittedly effective, makes clear the moral depths to which the Atlantean regime, and many of its subjects, had sunk. In 815, he proposed a general armistice and a conference which should lead to permanent peace conditions. He offered to agree to a new border between the two states roughly corresponding to the position in 810. This would make formal all the Rabarran gains up till then, under the strict understanding that Rabarrieh should never again attempt to undermine Atlantean control of her side of the border. It was suggested that Uarilteccoath, as a neutral country, at present, should attend and act as "honest broker". However, in secret, Borbar intended to strike a double blow against the Rabarrans under the cover of this Peace Conference, which would outdo in treachery anything else ever committed in Atlantean history. He managed to keep his plans secret, and employed only his Security Army for the military part at Dohgash.

After much internal argument, and amidst deep mistrust of Borbar, Rabarrieh finally agreed to the conference, and Uarilteccoath willingly took its part, with the promise from Atlantis of the cession of territory north of the river Vulcan. In June 816, the peace officials collected in Dohgash, chosen because both sides claimed the battle there in 807 as a victory for them. Discussions went on for weeks, and in September, Borbar proposed that the heads of Government and their Ministers should now meet, in a grand ceremony, and then thrash out the remaining details. This was agreed, and the great event began on October 6th. Having hitherto shown a great deal of moderation and willingness for peace, Borbar had by now lulled the Rabarrans into a false sense of security and hope for a final peace settlement. (Though they had their own plans about taking over the rest of Atlantis' territory south of the Helvengio in years to come).

But now Borbar unleashed his treacherous surprise. A large force of specially trained commandos and Security forces suddenly descended on the sleeping quarters of the Rabarran politicians at 3am on October 9th, and ruthlessly shot down most of them taking certain picked ones hostage. The Rabarran security forces reacted slowly and inefficiently, and by next day, all the Atlantean politicians with about 50 prisoners had moved out behind the barrier of a strong military force. They left behind 300 people dead and 250 wounded, including most of the Rabarran heads of state and army. The Uariltecoth diplomats and heads of state were scrupulously left alone. Next day, as all the Atlantean civilians and their prisoners were hastily evacuated, Borbar announced that this action had been taken as revenge for years of Rabarran terrorism. He now warned Rabarrieh to instantly agree to peace, and threatened to kill his captives, one by one, if the Rabarrans so much as shot one more Atlantean soldier.

The Rabarrans were outraged, of course, and as Borbar had expected, immediately declared war again. Borbar now began to publicly execute some of his more important prisoners, and then to torture them first, leaving the broken bodies for the Rabarrans to find later. But as he had assumed, another harsh blow, already prepared, seemed needed to finally crush the spirit of the Rabarrans.

The Creator of the New Atlantis: Thildo Gailonex.

The early years, 831 – 844

THE RISE OF THE NEW EMPEROR

Thildo Gailonex (Gailonex being the throne-name he was given later in his reign) was born in 798 in Dravidieh, and was of Atlantean immigrant stock. His father was on the provincial Governor's staff in a fairly high capacity. After the Brothers' coup of 805, Gailonex's father managed to retain his post for a while, but in 814, in Measel's regime, he was under threat of arrest for refusing to co-operate keenly enough in the transportation of indigenous Ughans. The family fled into Ughrieh itself, where Gailonex's father had connections and friends. While in Ughrieh, the young Gailonex met the philosopher Slels Fusten, also a refugee from the Brothers, and was much impressed by Fusten's religious and political opinions. Gailonex's father died in 819, whereupon, on the death of Measel, Gailonex and his mother returned to Meistayieh. He joined the Regular Army and managed to work his way up the hierarchy while keeping his head down and avoiding controversy. The Regular Army was very much looked on at this time, in contrast to the Internal Security Army, but somehow the fact that Gailonex was not a Brother did not tell against him in his career. This is possibly because his political opinions, on the rare occasions that he expressed them, were evidently very conservative. He did not reveal his private views about religion and politics, except to his closest and most trusted friends. To them, however, he showed himself to be an amazingly mature and forceful young man, with ideas on every subject under the sun, and a burning ambition to restore Atlantis to its traditional dignity and greatness.

After 824, Meistayieh, like other Provinces, was put under the direct control of Internal Security bosses. This greatly upset Gailonex, and after 826, he became involved in a number of plots to reassert the authority of the regular Army. Beyond this, these plots aimed to change the Government by overturning the Brotherhood regime. By 827, Gailonex was in charge of all the Regular forces in his Province, and later that year, as the regime began to move towards anarchy, he fought a vicious little war against the local Security forces, scattering them, or forcing them to surrender and submit to him. He declared himself Governor of Meistayieh, but immediately had to defend himself and his Province against an invasion by the Governor of Gestchalcrieh. This little war rumbled on, and in February 828, Gailonex was quick to join Pareon's revolt. He now declared Meistayieh a Province of the old Atlantean Empire, and issued a proclamation promoting traditional values, moral behaviour, the re-establishment of an Emperor and Council, ethnic equality, freedom of religion and political opinion, a reassertion of Atlantean military tradition. Generally, therefore, a return to the values of the Second Empire, with necessary "modernisations". On the death of the dictator, Gailonex soon made himself the power behind the throne, becoming Commander-in-Chief of the new Army. He advised Pareon over the next few years, and tried to make him sign up to and enforce his own increasingly well-thought-out views on the future government of the Empire. It became clear, though, that Pareon had neither the will nor the ability to force through such a "New" Empire, and when he resigned in 831, Gailonex took over the throne.

THE RE-ESTABLISHMENT OF STABILITY AND GOVERNMENT

Once he had the power, Gailonex threw himself into re-establishing and reorganising the Empire with incredible energy, virtually reinventing every aspect of national life over the next ten years. His first task, he knew, was to restore the security and strength of the Empire by defeating his enemies once and for all. Making use of the armies already reorganised by his predecessor, in 832 Gailonex defeated the Skallands in a final battle, and forced Golumen to make peace, removing his troops from the Empire completely, and agreeing a common border. Peace was also made with Rabarrieh by 834, and in a clever coup, Gailonex obtained the return of Helvremon island in exchange for an Atlantean promise not to make any alliance with the new invaders of Yciel Tuaince Mandagge (the Far south Continent). (These invaders were threatening the current regime of the Continent, with which Rabarrieh was friendly. In fact, though, by 837, the invaders had taken over, and all Rabarran troops supporting the previous regime there had been withdrawn.) Finally, Gailonex made further agreements with Quendelieh that both sides should keep to the status quo. Phonaria was ceded permanently to the Western Empire, and it was allowed to maintain various bases on local islands. Some troops were also left in Marossan, allied to the Atlantean ones there.

At the same time, Gailonex tried to settle various internal problems relating to the various peoples of the Empire, so many of which had been persecuted by the Brothers. Gailonex declared the Empire to be a Federation. Thus the Jutes became a semi-independent federated state in the Empire. Other peoples had similar status with lessening degrees of independence – Naokeltanieh and the two Dravidean Provinces. This semi-independence was gradually whittled away in the growing centralisation of the next 10–15 years, and feelings for local independence also declined naturally.

Gailonex's greatest task was the reorganisation of the constitution and government of the Empire. Basing his actions on the ideas of various political and philosophical writers, whose ideas he had absorbed in the 820s, particularly Srels Fusten, Gailonex aimed to set up a pseudo-Second Empire government, hierarchical in style and authoritarian in its desire to inculcate moral and legal values to the population. Real democracy was deprecated by Gailonex's regime, as being responsible for the fall of the Fourth Empire and the rise of the Tyrants. Gailonex's watchwords, initially, were "responsible government", "federation", "local accountability" (i.e. up to provincial level), and "firm central executive control from the Emperor downwards". The local government structure now was modelled on that of the Second Empire (but without the more direct elections of the Fourth Empire). Various federated areas had local councils with considerable powers, at first, over local issues, but these were later whittled away.) Gailonex established and appointed an Advisory Council in 834, which gradually took over the administration of the Empire, under the leadership of the Emperor himself: the Council became a purely advisory body. Ministers, called Administrators, functioned like the Controllers of the Second Empire, and were appointed by the Emperor and the Advisory Council. Their powers gradually declined and were taken over by the Advisory Council.

As the years passed, this structure, set up initially with many concessions or nods to local rule and limited democracy, became formalised and more centralised. Ceremonial increased, and the Emperor and the highest officials appeared to become further and further removed from the everyday world. In 835, Gailonex declared freedom of religion, and personal belief ceased to have any relevance to status, even the Emperor's. But no Church was granted any role in government. Similarly the Legal System and the Army were kept completely separated and run by their own hierarchies (under the ultimate authority of the Emperor). By the 840s, government had become quite a rigid and hierarchical structure, run in an authoritarian and distant way by the Emperor and his closest advisers. Yet, somehow, by insisting on his desire for fair government, local autonomy, the potential horrors of extreme democracy, and the separation of Church, Law and the Army from government, Gailonex persuaded his subjects to accept and agree to the viability of the new Fifth Empire. The Emperor was helped here by the current mood of quietism, political indifference and a retreat by many people into personal worlds and local issues, after the political turmoil of the period of the Tyrants. He was also aided by his secret agents – an Internal Security force, under a different name, was re-established in 836, ostensibly for external spying, but actually also to watch dissidents at home. Despite claims that all the actions of the new regime would be transparent and open, this secret force was empowered to kidnap or murder anyone whom the Emperor considered to be an enemy. Obviously most cases of this sort would be brought to public trial, as the law required, but Gailonex had no hesitation in dealing ruthlessly with anyone whom he did not wish to bring into court.

THE NEW MORAL CODE

Gailonex was very interested in the new philosophy and moral codes of the time, and sincerely believed that society needed a full regeneration of its moral code in order to escape from the degradation of the Tyrants' era. He did not think that it was feasible to force a moral or religious way of life on the Empire, indeed he pronounced complete tolerance of religion and belief. But at the same time, he felt that the new generation must grow up with a firm and innate belief in right and wrong. These personal feelings chimed in with those of the philosopher Fusten, whom Gailonex had got to know during their exiles in the 810s, and Gailonex subsequently took Fusten as his moral advisor. Fusten had spent his life working on the production of a non- or supra-religious moral code, which he thought was inherent as a basis of the different religions in the world. He had studied as many of these systems of belief as he could, and had drawn out a moral code which lay at the bottom of all of them. He also taught that it was necessary to instil this code into the heart and mind of all children through their education. Gailonex heartily concurred, and made sure this moral code was on the syllabus for all schools. Later in his reign, Gailonex also oversaw a similar sort of religious code, culled from the main religious beliefs of the time. This system of beliefs, called "Natural Theism", was finally agreed at the end of the 840s, and also put on school syllabuses – the two being called "Natural Theistic Morality".

THE EMPEROR'S PERSONAL LIFE; AN EXAMPLE OF INSTITUTIONALISED HYPOCRISY

The publicised decrees of the regime in favour of apparent independent and fair trials, of plurality of political activity via Council and elections, and of tolerance of belief and morals, were hypocritically offset by the reality of the Secret Police, the authoritarian State and the attempt to enforce "Natural Morality and Religion" on the rising generation. This hypocrisy was most in evidence in the frequent clash between public pronouncements and private behaviour in the realm of morality – nowhere more clearly than in the private life of the Emperor himself. Gailonex was publicly portrayed as an upright and highly moral man, an example to his subjects. He had married in 825, and by 840 had five children, including two sons, the subsequent Emperors Gaistuyex (born 838) and Gaiduiccon (born 836). It was revealed after his death in 865, and corroborated by Gaiduiccon, though not by Gaistuyex, that the Emperor had long led a secret double life. He had had many mistresses, some forcibly and secretly abducted, and some possibly later murdered by secret agents to prevent their revealing anything. Other rumours (not supported by either son) suggested still darker secrets, involving orgies, homosexuality and torture sessions. Any allusion to such matters before 860 led to imprisonment for lese-majeste or even "disappearance". The rumours became more widespread after 860, as Gailonex's authoritarian rule faltered, and in the temporarily more liberal period from 856 to 871, they were widely published (despite Gaistuyex's disapproval). This was part of a general "debunking" of the moral ethos of the Gailonex era by the new liberals. With the War and the conservative clamp-down, such stories dwindled or were suppressed.

THE APPROACH OF WAR WITH SKALLANDIEH

In foreign affairs, tension grew between Atlantis and Skallandieh as the 840s dawned. (Note that Skallandieh was actually only part of the original Northern Empire: there had been a civil war within the Empire in the early 830s, and Gestskallandieh had broken free, as in the previous century, after 833). A new, young and warlike leader, Sherehez Sashan Redi, became Emperor in 837, and immediately began building up the army, which had been seriously embarrassed in the earlier civil war. More worryingly for Atlantis, he also started to increase the size and strength of the navy. Gailonex took the opportunity of increasing his own armed forces, and it is now clear that he actively sought a war in order to seal his authority over his Empire, and to distract the populace from a growing economic crisis, caused partly by a failure to reindustrialise old industries. Both Empire sought alliances with Quendelieh, which of course had bases in Yciel Atlantis. Ultimately it remained neutral in the war, but its ownership of Phonaria, and its bases in Yciel Atlantis, led it to try to influence the course of the naval war in the surrounding seas. In particular, after the first couple of months of war, it forbade either combatant to pass ships through the narrow strait separating Phonaria and Yciel Atlantis, on pain of being declared an enemy. This exclusion zone hit Skallandieh chiefly, as it was unable easily to reinforce its navy in the Marossa Liranca. Nevertheless its ships could move right round the island of Phonaria to the west, and eventually arrive in the Liranca. Atlantis offered Rabarrieh a free hand in the south in return for her neutrality during Atlantis' forthcoming war. But Atlantis was then unable to react when Rabarrieh invaded and quickly took over Uarilteccoath after 844 – an extension of her territory, which would have fateful consequences in the Final Wars with Atlantis after 871.

After 840, Sashan demanded the return of territory taken by Atlantis in the early 830s in the Keltish areas, as well as some islands in the Marossa Liranca. He also tried to agree an alliance with the Quendis – but despite all this, he was sensible enough not to want to push Atlantis to outright war, for he knew that he could never win such a conflict, at least without Quendi help. Gailonex did seek war, however, and also made impossible territorial demands on his neighbour. He wanted to take over Keltish areas which had gone to Skallandieh since 800, and demanded back Alossa, the island in the Suinnomiori group nearest to Skalland territory. (This had been part of the independent state of Anauren after 750, but had fallen to Skallandieh, when that Empire took over Anauren, without serious objections by the Atlanteans, in 760.) Such aggressiveness on the part of the Atlantis lost her any chance of a friendly alliance with Quendelieh, which declared complete neutrality. In June 844, Atlantis declared war at the same time as undertaking an amphibious invasion of Alossa. The Great Northern War had begun.

THE BATTLES OF ATLANIPHIS AND CERIULTIS, AND THE CAMPAIGN FOR THE HELVENGIO, 875 - 876

The Atlantean armies sped south-eastwards towards the Raziris mountains, and by the beginning of November they had halted in the higher ground north-west of these mountains, on a front stretching for a hundred miles between the rivers Gairase and Vulcan. They had largely ignored their flanks hitherto, but in fact there were a number of Rabarran forces west of the Gairase, which could become threatening. As a result, at this point, the Atlanteans decided they needed to seize bridgeheads over the river Gairase, to protect their flank here, and as a preparation to crossing that river and invading Manralia.

Moreover, there were dangerous events taking place around the Helvengio. Following the Atlantean invasion across the Gestes, the Rabarrans began their planned strategy, under the leadership of the commander for this front, Iferire Alauqo. They attacked the Atlantean bridgehead near Miolrel, and wiped it out within three weeks. Then, at the end of September, their western navy slipped back into the Helvengio. It combined with the fleets already there, made for the Atlanteans off Helvremon, and defeated them. They then proceeded to blockade Giezuat in October, and again defeated an attempt at relief by the Atlanteans from Helvris. There then followed an amphibious invasion of the island by the Rabarrans, which was entirely successful by December. A second sortie by the Atlantean fleet after this was more successful, but was too late to save the island of Helvremon.

These events confirmed the Atlanteans in their plans for the new year, namely to move west and occupy the south shore of the Helvengio, thereby cutting off the invaders of the Helvremon. However, there was no intention of starting this until at least April, and in the meantime, some two armies were directed to seize the towns of Atlaniphis and Ceriultis on the Gairase. Both of these were easily defended by the Rabarrans, who already had 200000 men in Manralia: these were now increased to 300000. Fighting raged in terrible winter conditions for two months, but the Atlanteans made very little progress. Meanwhile, they kept most of their forces – up to four armies - facing the Raziris Mountains. To the north of the Vulcan, they had just one army, set way back to the west. The Rabarrans now decided to seize the chance offered by the risky disposition of the Atlantean armies, and attack them on both flanks, across the Gairase at between Atlaniphis and Ceriultis, and across the Vulcan, on either side of the Yalldairu. To this end, they secretly and successfully amass armies of 300000 men in both these positions, leaving just 200000 to man the Raziris Mountains.

THE RABARRAN COUNTER-ATTACK ROUND THE FLANKS OF THE ATLANTEANS: THE SECOND BATTLE OF THE YALLODAIRU, MARCH – MAY 876.

SECOND BATTLE OF THE YALLODAIRU, MARCH - MAY 876

The Rabarran attacks in March came as complete surprises to the Atlanteans. They forced their way across the Gairase between Atlaniphis and Ceriultis, the Atlanteans being concentrated against these two cities. One army attacked the Atlanteans in front of Atlaniphis in rear, another hit the flank of the attackers of Ceriultis, while the third made straight for Duccouth and the Lillerayix, spearheaded by tanks. In the north, while some 60000 men protected the Rabarran flank against the enemy forces north of the Vulcan, two armies moved via Faiddir to the western bank of the Yalldairu, and another army, with many tanks, hit the rear of the Atlanteans facing the Raziris Mountains. Something approaching panic hit the Atlantean troops near the mountains, and as they turned to fight or flee to their rear, they were also pursued by the Rabarran armies to the south-east. By April, small Atlantean forces were desperately trying to defend Yemdir and Groloairo, as well as positions to the east, behind the Yalldairu, against advancing Rabarran forces. Somehow a good number of the furthest Atlantean troops managed to escape northwards across the Yalldairu through these friendly lines, but probably 80000 Atlanteans were captured and 50000 made casualties between Yalldairu and Raziris mountains in this Second Battle of the Yalldairu. A few of the Atlaniphis attackers also slipped through the Gairaseducco (marshes), but about half were killed or captured by the Rabarrans. By mid-April, about four and a half Atlantean armies were holding out behind the Yalldairu against about six Rabarran armies. The Atlanteans had managed to hold on to the Lillerayix and Yemdir in the west, but to the east, near Groloairo, the Rabarrans were well over the river. East of them, two Atlantean armies west of Faiddir were threatened on both flanks.

BATTLE OF GROLODAIRO AND AFTER, APRIL-MAY 876

The Rabarrans now shifted their centre, and leaving three armies in the west, they pushed two against the enemy hanging back some way to the north of Grolodairo. To the east of these, their remaining forces also turned west behind the Atlantean force near Grolodairo, while the rest moved straight towards Vulcanipand, the main line of supply and crossing-point for the whole Atlantean Army in this area. The latter move, as well as the central punch near Grolodairo brought the Rabarrans a second victory in the Battle of Grolodairo. The Atlanteans west of Grolodairo retreated again to the Avlotans hills near Iutieh. In the north-east, the small Atlantean force north of the Vulcan, attacked in front, and threatened in its rear as the Rabarrans moved on Vulcanipand, was just able to retire across the Gairase and into the fortress in time. By May, the Atlanteans on the avlotans and about Ophinoutho were forced yet again to retreat across the Gayvot to the kavotans mountains. Elsewhere the rest of the Atlanteans who had escaped the debacle had collected behind the Gestes, with Vulcanipand as their centre. To the north, Rabarran troops from the Vulcan had moved north and joined hands with the Borepande garrison. Part of the Atlantean force which had been blockading this from the west had had to move south to help with the defence of the Gestes, but two new armies of reinforcements were rushed to the front during May.

THE RABARRANS CROSS THE GESTES VIA BOREPANDE, AUGUST – SEPTEMBER, 876

Ittozamma, the Rabarran commander, now decided to seize the opportunity of crossing the Gestes into Atlantean territory via her bridgehead of Borepande. Both armies glared at each other across the wide Gestes between the influx of the river Vulcan in the west and the Huainarayix, the hills on which the great fortress of Borepande was situated. But the Rabarrans secretly moved two Armies into Borepande itself, over the Gestes, ready to burst out from here against the thin line of Atlantean defenders in Meistayieh.

THE FIRST RABARRAN ADVANCE ON ATLANDRAVIZZI. MARCH-JUNE 877

After

After a period of preparation, the Rabarrans attacked in August. They attacked south-westwards from the fortress, breaking through the Atlanteans. Soon all the Atlantean armies defending the Gestes were threatened in flank and rear, and were forced to retire, allowing other Rabarran forces to follow them across the river. There was no rout on the Atlantean side, and by the end of September, a new line was being successfully defended by the Atlanteans extending south-westwards from Borepande and the Huainarayix, east of Lovriun to the Gestes near Vailat. Both sides were now incapable of making any further moves, and there was no more serious fighting that year. However, a considerable diplomatic triumph for Rabarrieh occurred in October, when Skallandieh was persuaded to declare war on Quendelieh, in order to try to recover the territory she had lost to the Atlanteans in the Great Northern War, thirty years previously. This whole area was now defended by the Quendeliens on behalf of Atlantis, and in accordance with the agreement both parties had made, they fought against the Skalland invaders as though the land was their own. Nevertheless, the fighting was of long-term benefit to Rabarrieh, as the Atlanteans were now forced to keep a wary eye on what was happening on this front, and had to keep a whole Army in reserve here, in case they needed to support their allies.

THE FIRST RABARRAN ADVANCE ON ATLANDRAVIZZI – THE BATTLES OF LOVRIUN AND PUSTABUATAYA, APRIL – JUNE 877.

The initiative in the new year was again to be with the Rabarrans. Their plan was to continue the offensive in Meistayieh, in the hope too, that the Ughans would join in on their side as the fighting moved along the Gestes. Earlier plans to invade Helvrieh, thus gaining complete control of the Helvengio were shelved for a year. Atlantis was unable to do other than defend, but she was able to line up seven armies to protect Meistayieh. The Rabarran commander, Iltoxamma, planned to attract the bulk of the Atlantean defenders to the west of the line, by attacking westwards towards Vailat and Lovriun, and then burst out northwards across the weakened Atlantean front before Borepande with his tanks and cavalry, followed by the infantry, towards Atlandravizzi. On April 2nd, fighting began in the west, as planned, and Atlantean armies moved to Lovriun to attack the flank of three Rabarran armies attacking to the south of that town. A fierce battle took place, (the First Battle of Lovriun), lasting two weeks, at the end of which the Rabarran advance seemed to have been halted. However, at this point, the four Rabarran armies on the Huainarayix now threw themselves north and north-westwards against just over two Atlantean armies remaining there, and soon forced them into a headlong retreat. Over the next three weeks, in the First Battle of Pustabuataya, the Rabarrans chased the Atlanteans north, as far as the foothills of the strongly defended hills of Atlandravizzi. To the east they crossed the river Thyggis and cleared the Atlanteans from the border with Ughrieh, as far north as the Chalcraita road from Bratatinnu to Pueggathis (now in Ughan territory), while to the west, they protected their flank, as they hoped, by the river Burastoura.

Whilst the Atlanteans were retreating here, Zaippo naturally tried to help them by calling on his excess forces at Lovriun. But as soon as some of these were transferred to the north, in a totally unsuccessful attempt to hit the Rabarrans at Pustabuatya in flank, the Rabarran armies in the west again attacked north of Vailat. This time, they were wholly successful, and during May forced the enemy back to the rivers Helvenslepp and Burtounna, and the hills between. They paused for a while here, and then, at the end of June, building up the strength of their left, attacked vigorously across the Helvenslepp towards the river Cresslepp. Some forces reached this river, but it was very strongly defended, and later, the Atlanteans pushed them back some way towards the south-east. Even in Iutieh, the Rabarrans were attacking successfully, and by the end of the year, they had completely conquered that peninsula.

THE ATLANTEAN COUNTER-ATTACK – THE BATTLES OF THE RIVERS BURASTOURA AND THYGGIS, SEPTEMBER – OCTOBER 877

The Rabarrans had now come up against strong Atlantean defences, as well as outrunning their supplies, and were forced to settle in. They hoped that the Ughans would join in the war at this seemingly propitious point, and attack the Atlanteans west of the upper Gestes. However, Ughrieh still wavered. Secretly, they did not want to have to play junior party to an over-strong Rabarrieh, and while they were increasingly eager to seize some territory at the expense of weakened Atlantis, they preferred to wait for the ideal moment. Their excuse to the Rabarrans was that the Atlanteans had not yet invaded Ughan territory or occupied Borepande, which was Ughrieh's original condition with the Rabarrans for entering a war with her. It looked in September, however, as though the Ughans had missed their chance, as the Atlanteans now undertook a huge pincer counter-attack, which sent the Rabarrans reeling back more or less to where they had started.

Zaippo prepared this counter-attack during July and August, moving two armies west of the Burastoura, south of Giestisso, and one army east of the Thyggis, and south of Bratatinnu. Two armies remained on the hills between the two rivers, to defend Atlandravizzi. The Rabarrans had most of their four armies concentrated in the centre, opposite Atlandravizzi, heinously neglecting their flanks – exactly the same mistake as the Atlanteans had made between the rivers Vulcan and Gairase, the previous year. In October, the Atlanteans attacked, crushing the Rabarran flank-guards, in the Battle of the Rivers Burastoura and Thyggis.

They had rebuilt the many tanks they had lost in the routs of the previous year, and these pursued the enemy helter-skelter back south, sweeping into Borepande en route. They were finally halted on a more or less east-west line from the Gestes south of Borepande to the river Burtounna. Here too, in the west, the Atlanteans had attacked, collapsing the bulge of territory held by the Rabarrans west of the Helvenslepp, and forcing them back behind that river. The whole front was stabilised by November, with the help of additional Rabarran reserves rushed to the front line.

THE ATLANTEAN COUNTER-ATTACK, SEP - OCT 877

THE FIGHT FOR CONTROL OF THE HELVENGIO, 876-877

Throughout 876 and 877, control of the Helvengio itself depended largely on which side controlled the entrance to it from outside. Within it, the Rabarran fleet was based chiefly at Giezuat, with some ships also at Raihco. Correspondingly, the Atlantean navy was at Helvris, and since the battles at the end of 875, it had been rather loosely blockaded there by the larger Helvran fleet. Now the Atlanteans wanted to force the Rabarran ships back to port, in Giezuat or Raihco, in order to regain control of the seas, and the only way they could do that was to bring in more ships from outside the Helvengio. This was difficult for both navies. Outside the sea, the Rabarran navy was quartered in the Zueltix Mandengix, while the Atlanteans were based at the time in Pustler, some 100 miles to the north. Their home base was of course Atlantis itself, and they had the advantage of being able to concentrate almost all their fleets against Rabarrieh, as the only other potentially hostile neighbour, Skallandieh, was kept fully occupied after 876 by the large navy of the Quendeliens. The Rabarrans had to keep some of their ships in the south in case of hostile actions from Yciel Tuaince Mandagge, and were thus distinctly inferior in numbers to the Atlanteans outside the Helvengio.

As a result, the Atlanteans were able from time to time to slip a ship or two into the Helvengio, protecting it sometimes by moving forwards aggressively to the edge of the Rabarran base in the islands. This base was, however, strongly protected by mines and artillery emplacements, and the Atlanteans dared not attack it. On other occasions they escorted the ships moving into the Helvengio down the coast of Numidis to the mouth of the sea. The entrance to the Helvengio was of course also guarded by Rabarran gums on the southern shores, and Atlantean artillery on the northern, or Numidis, coast, some 10 miles apart. Usually ships from either side could pass through here without much damage, as long as they did not have to face hostile ships as well. On two occasions in 876 and 877, the Rabarran fleet in the Zueltix Mandengix tried to attack Atlantean ships moving into the Helvengio with their escorts. In August 876, they attacked outside Nosinge, which was used as a small naval base by the Atlanteans. In this First Battle of Nosinge the Rabarrans successfully sank a number of ships, before the arrival of the main Atlantean fleet sent them scuttling back to their base. In June the next year, they tried again, but this time mistimed it. There was already a blockading force outside the Rabarran base, and although the Rabarrans defeated this during the sortie, it gave the game away to the main Atlantean fleet. This descended on the Rabarrans, and in the Second Battle of Nosinge, the Rabarrans were badly defeated, losing a number of ships.

Thus it was that during 876 and 877, enough Atlantean ships inserted themselves into the Helvengio that they were able to base themselves at Cennetis, supplemented by a few ships which escaped from Helvris itself. By 877, the two navies within the Helvengio were almost equal in number, and the Rabarrans were no longer able to blockade Helvris at all, although they did attempt to blockade Cennetis from time to time.

878 – THE UGHANS ENTER THE WAR, AND THE RABARRANS PLAN THEIR COUNTER-ATTACK

The Atlanteans really thought now that they might be able to push the Rabarrans back across the Gestes once and for all. They reorganised their forces during December and January, and weighed up the strategical options. At first they considered making use of their seizure of Borepande to strike down the eastern side of the Gestes towards the Rabarran crossing-point and centre of communications at Vulcanipand. But they were very nervous of the reaction of the Ughans, who they rightly suspected were on the point of joining in the war on Rabarrieh's side. An offensive so close to Ughrieh's southern borders would not only annoy that country, but also leave the forces east of the Gestes open to a rear attack by the Ughans. So Zaippo decided to try to break through the centre of the Rabarran lines, around Lovriun, and split them in two by striking out towards Vailat. Attacks to the east of Lovriun began in January and February, in order to distract the enemy from the main offensive, which began on February 27th at Lovriun – the Second Battle of Lovriun. ("I" on the map). By this stage in the war, both sides instantly entrenched their fronts, whenever they became at all static, and the Atlanteans found they had a fierce battle on their hands.

Meanwhile, the Rabarrans too were preparing for a counter-attack on this front, and they thought now that they had a real chance of permanently forcing the Atlanteans back out of Meistayieh. This was because the Ughans had finally decided to commit themselves to the war. By December 877, they saw the Rabarrans forced right back southwards, and most of the Atlantean armies in the east had pursued them, leaving the whole Gestes front north of Pueggathis temptingly devoid of troops – as they believed. Furthermore, they thought that by attacking now, they could gain much ground in Dravidieh while the Rabarrans were still a way off in the south, and unable to argue with them over which parts of the territory conquered belonged to which party. It was for these reasons that they had refused to enter the war, even when Rabarrieh had seemed to be doing so well, earlier in 877. They were easily able to manufacture an excuse for joining the war at this stage. They claimed that according to their old treaty with Rabarrieh, they would support them against Atlantis, if the latter ever reconquered Borepande. Well, now they had.

The Ughans only gradually began to attack the Atlanteans across the northern part of the Gestes after February, and by their typical tardiness and caution, they lost any real chance they had ever had of defeating the weaker Atlanteans and gaining Dravidos, which was their initial target. Nevertheless, the Rabarrans realised that soon the Atlanteans were likely to have to draw off troops from in front of them, to face the growing threat to the north. So they planned to counter-attack in March. They decided firstly to attack north and west from the rivers Helvenslepp and Burtounna, in order to dissipate Atlantean forces and distract their attention from the front further east. Then they would attack northwards from the front-line east of Lovriun, avoiding the concentration of Atlantean forces at and to the west of that town, and also around Borepande. At the same time, they would gain final naval control of the Helvengio by advancing with their Huainarayix forces on Helvris, the main Atlantean port. This should force the remaining ships of the Atlantean navy out into the Helvengio, where they could be decisively defeated by the larger Rabarran navy. Then, an amphibious force would land on the coast of Helvrieh itself, east and west of the river Numeras, in the west.

THE BATTLES OF NOCCSAT AND SECOND PUSTABUATAYA, MARCH – MAY 878

On March 18th, three Rabarran armies concentrated to attack the hills between the sources of the rivers Helvenslepp and Burtounna. One army additionally held the line of these rivers. The attack ( "I" [Rabarran] on the map) in this Battle of Nocsat was fiercely resisted at first, but the Atlanteans were outnumbered, and eventually forced to retreat. The Rabarrans followed them up as far as the Cresslepp, but as usual, were quite unable to force their way over that heavily defended river. In fact, they did not intend to, hoping only to further distract Atlantean attention from the front to the east. To the south, one army, soon joined by reinforcements from the north, raced for Helvris, which was reached by April 5th, but again was much too strongly defended to be taken by a "coup de main".

As the Rabarrans had hoped, Atlantean forces east of Lovriun were now being thinned out as a result of the Ughan attacks: one Army was sent north in March, leaving four of the front, two of which were still trying to force their way south, to the west of Lovriun. They had some success in the end, but thereby only pushed their heads still further in the net. For on April 10th, after one army had rushed back from the Cresslepp, giving the Rabarrans a superiority of five armies against four, two of which were exhausted, the Rabarrans attacked hard east of Lovriun. With tanks ready to exploit success, they quickly broke through the weak front, ("II" on the map) and while two armies sped north towards Pustabuataya, two more wheeled north-west towards Lake Trannolla. At the same time, another Rabarran army attacked eastwards across the Burtounna from the Cresslepp front. As a result, both the Atlantean armies which had been engaged in the fighting about Lovriun were forced back to the Lake, with their retreat to the north cut off. With superhuman effort, 50000 men were rescued by ship across the Lake, and some 20000 did escape north. Of the rest, about 40000 were killed, and the remaining 60000, many of whom were wounded, were taken prisoner. This Second Battle of Pustabuataya continued as the Rabarrans again chased the Atlanteans right back to the Atlandravizzi hills and to the Burastoura. To the east, the garrison in Borepande was cut off, though most of the forces here had escaped across the Thyggis to Atlanipand in time. Borepande fell some two months later after a fairly feeble resistance to its besiegers.

THE UGHANS' ATTACK ACROSS THE GESTES, AND THE RABARRANS MAINTAIN THEIR POSITIONS, MARCH – NOVEMBER 878

THE SECOND ADVANCE ON ATLANDRAVIZZI, 878

The Ughans attacked on a wide front across the Gestes, with three, later five armies. The Atlanteans initially had only two armies in defence, later increased to three. Their first area of attack was between Hottisso in the north and Tuellplas to the south, aiming at Dravidos. However, the hills were strongly fortified, and it took the Ughans until July just to work their way through the woods at the base. While two armies were engaged here, two more attacked directly west from Tuellplas and from Puggathis. The Tuellplas attack gained some ground, until it was stuck in the woods at the bottom of the rising ground near the river Thyggis. The Ughans to the south were repeatedly counter-attacked by Atlantean forces from the south of them, despite the pressure of the Rabarrans on the western side of the Thyggis. (red dotted arrows on the map). At first the Atlanteans used Atlanipand as a base for attacks on Burtinnu, the fort which protected the left flank of the Ughan attacks. Then the Atlanteans moved north, leaving a small garrison in Atlanipand, and based an army around middle reaches of the Thyggis, on the eastern bank. For a while, in May and June, these harassed the Ughans to their north, as well as raiding west across the river against the Rabarrans. By July, Atlantean forces to the east of the Thyggis had been cleared out as far as the garrison in Bratatinnu, which protected the left of their position at Atlandravizzi.

The rest of the year saw a number of hard fights in the area south of the Croiden Hills, between the Gestes and the Burastoura, as the Rabarrans sought to maintain their position and defend themselves against attacks into their left flank across the Burastoura. By keeping an Army in reserve east of Giestisso, the Rabarrans were able to ward off these attacks, and even make a few of their own northwards towards Atlandravizzi – all in vain. The fronts had completely stabilised by the end of the year.

THE INVASION OF HELVRIEH, AND THE WITHDRAWAL OF QUENDELIEH FROM THE WAR

By the beginning of 878, a force of two armies, under the command of Iferiri Alauqo, had been collected near Aggorpend to be transferred to Helvremon, and then to amphibiously invade Helvrieh east and west of Cennetis. Firstly, though, the Rabarrans had to regain complete control of the Helvengio, and also await the attack on Helvris by land, which was planned to distract the Atlantean defenders away from the west of the Province. In March of 878, the Rabarran Helvengio fleet emerged from Giezuat, and while part of it moved on Helvris to blockade or distract the enemy there, a considerable force moved on Cennetis. This bombarded the port, and, not for the first time, laid mines outside it. At the same time, the transfer of the Rabarran army from Manralia to Helvremon commenced. A similar sequence of events took place at weekly intervals, allowing the whole of the Rabarran army to reach Helvremon in safety. As they expected, on the third expedition, the Atlantean fleet at Helvris sortied, having become belatedly aware of the movement of the troops from Aggorpend. The Atlanteans believed the naval manoeuvres and bombardments of the Rabarrans were a cover for this troop movement, which is what the Rabarrans intended them to think: their plan was to thereby draw the Atlanteans out of their port and defeat them once and for all on the open seas. And this indeed was what happened, in a hard-fought battle off the mouth of the river Gesten (Battle of the River Gesten). The main Atlantean fleet was forced back into Helvris and blockaded there.

The Rabarran amphibious invasion took place on May 1st-4th, and one army was landed in two separate bridgeheads. The transfer of the second army was beginning, when disaster struck. A considerable number of Atlantean ships succeeded in entering the Helvengio from outside on May 6th, and, in co-ordination with the Helvris navy, threw itself on the supply ships of the Rabarrans. Even the Atlantean ships in Cennetis sortied, although two of these fell victim to mines. In the Battle of Cennetis, the Rabarrans lost many of its supply ships and transports, though fortunately for them, not many troops. Furious recriminations flew back and forth between Iferire Aklauqo and Akariri Alitheeri, the fleet commander, for allowing the Atlanteans to thus reinforce their Helvengio navy. Relations between the two services, Army and Navy, Ilnebu and Kultebu, took a long time to recover from this. The result was that the Rabarran troops in Helvrieh were virtually cut off for the next twelve months from any reinforcements. Nevertheless, the forces in Numidis did succeed in expanding westwards, and by July had overrun the peninsula of Numidis, and destroyed or seized the Atlantean guns overlooking the entrance to the Helvengio. As a result, small numbers of supplies were able to cross the seas from south to north at this point. Cennetis, too, fell to the Rabarrans, but the Atlantean ships formerly there had long since escaped. In any case, the Atlanteans were not long able to keep the advantage of their victory here, for by the autumn, the Quendeliens were beginning to withdraw their armies and fleets from the war against the Skallands, and the Atlanteans were having to take their place with their own forces. As a result, the strength of the Atlantean navies facing the Rabarrans began to fall, and by 879, the Rabarrans were able to seize control of the Helvengio once more, and finally reinforce their troops in Helvrieh.

THE CONQUEST OF HELVRIEH

The withdrawal of Atlantean ships from outside the Helvengio north to face the Skallands, meant that by May the Rabarrans were able to make another attempt to regain control of the Helvengio. This they did, and this time permanently. They greatly reinforced the navy in the Helvengio, and moving to relieve Giezuat, under blockade for months, beat the Atlantean navy at the Fourth Battle of Giezuat. The Atlanteans were chased back into Helvris, where they were blockaded. Now at last the Rabarrans were able to reinforce their bridgeheads in Helvrieh.

The situation in Helvrieh as a whole was dire, and even before the Rabarran invasion in 878, there had been considerable unrest amongst Helvran civilians and soldiers about the war. The Helvrans disliked the refugees from south of the Helvengio, particularly Miolrel, and after 876, the Rabarrans deliberately stirred up trouble between Helvrans and Atlanteans by propaganda and by secret agents landed from the sea. They also indulged in bombardments and raids, usually targeting Atlantean bases, but occasionally hitting Helvran civilian targets, as if to say that this was what the Helvrans could expect, if they continued to back the Atlanteans. It was of course difficult for them to avoid fighting the Atlanteans' battles, but they became increasingly liable to avoid conscription, once that was fully imposed after 877. Gaistuyex was persuaded by his brother, in a rare and successful intervention into the running of the war in 877, to place an ethnic Helvran, Ghreuken Mists, as Military Governor of Helvrieh, and allow Helvran units some independence under overall Atlantean military control. Both brothers hoped that this action would make the Helvran forces rally behind one of their own leaders, to defend their countryfolk. However, when the Rabarrans made their initially limited landings on Helvran soil in 878, the seepage of Helvrans into the Rabarran camp grew, either by desertion into the Rabarran forces, or, more commonly, into rebellious guerrilla groups in the Meilox Mountains. On the other hand, there were barely enough Atlantean forces to defend the whole Empire, without making use of non-Atlanteans like the Helvrans in the Army.

A total of three Armies moved north to the Daigorunix and east to the river Numeras in June. The passes through the Meilox Mountains were all held securely by Atlantean forces, usually buttressed by fortresses, but they were entirely unprepared to prevent the Rabarran forces sweeping eastwards along the Helvrod. They crossed the Numeras at the end of June, and reached the Gesten within two weeks. This was crossed near Borfierp against stronger opposition, and by the end of July, they had reached the Cresslepp.

Now there had been considerable Helvran desertions during this long retreat, but the Helvran Governor seemed to be doing his best to defend the state. By August of 879, the Rabarrans from the west had joined hands with those to the east, and the city of Helvris was surrounded. A force of Atlanteans, some 27000 strong, retired within the walls with most of the rest of the Helvran Army, and the great siege began. The rest of the Atlantean forces withdrew to the Meilox Mountains to the north. There they came up against the Helvran guerrillas, but these were quite unable to withstand the full weight of the Atlantean forces, and most of them were either killed, captured or forced to flee south to the Rabarrans.

2. The struggle for the Croiden Hills, the collapse of the Atlantean positions in Chalcrieh and Helvrieh, and the death of Gaistuyex, 879 – 880

879: A YEAR OF FIGHTING FOR THE CROLDEN HILLS

879 saw the complete withdrawal of all Quendelien forces from the north-west of the Continent. This withdrawal was unplanned and the result of catastrophic attacks and invasions within the home continent of the Quendeliens themselves. The result was to force Atlantis to replace Quendelien armies with her own south of the river Ereipha, where the pressure of the Skallands increased throughout the year, gradually forcing back the Atlanteans towards the river Ruphaio. At sea, too, the loss of the Quendelien navy meant she had to withdraw forces from opposite the Rabarrans to the northern seas.

Meanwhile, in the east, two major campaigns saw a great see-saw of movements between the three combatants, ending with the Rabarrans maintaining their position, and even expanding westwards somewhat across the Burastoura. The main campaign began in April, when the Ughans concentrated three armies against the Dravidos hills. These armies tried to turn the Atlantean defence on the summit of this position, about Dravidos, both to the south and the north. There erupted fierce fighting but gradually the Ughans gained ground, moving to the north through Giestes. However, the Atlantean position held for the time being, and the Atlanteans now began their own offensive. This was, as usual, east and south-east across the Burastoura south of Giestisso, but this time there was to be additional pressure created. Once the Rabarran reserve army had committed itself to defending and counter-attacking this Atlantean move, part of the Atlantean force defending the Croiden Hills south of Atlandravizzi would attack southwards. The two Atlantean forces, four armies in all, would, it was hoped, crush the Rabarrans and sweep them away southwards.

THE FIRST BATTLE OF THE CROLDEN HILLS, MAY 879

The First Battle of the Crolden Hills began with the attack from around Giestisso on May 12th, and while making little progress on its own, did attract the Rabarran forces over to it, as anticipated. The assault by the Atlantean forces from Atlandravizzi came as a complete surprise to the Rabarrans. Their armies were thus under pressure from north and west, and were soon forced to withdraw southwards for safety, having lost over 25000 men. Now Iltozamma had to think and act quickly, and his actions in this amazing campaign, full of thrusts and counter-thrusts, with disaster looming alternately for Rabarrans and Atlanteans, show up his true genius. He knew that the Ughans' attack on Dravidos had ground almost to a halt on the northern and central flanks, and had been informed that they were building up more armies to attack from the south, east of the Thyggis. He now asked the Emperor Ladrubith, in a personal request, to divert these forces south-west across the Thyggis, directly onto the Crolden Hills, which the Atlanteans had denuded of troops as a result of their attack southwards after the Rabarrans. It was to be aided on its right flank by a small Rabarran force at Bratatinnu. Ladrubith agreed to this, and a week or so later, at the beginning of June, the sparse Atlantean defences around Dravizzi were soon overwhelmed by the Ughans' attack.

THE CONCLUSION OF THE FIRST BATTLE OF THE CROLDEN HILLS, MAY 879

Zaiippo now had to act quickly himself. He had already chased the Rabarrans about 50 miles southwards from Atlandravizzi, over halfway to Pustbuataya. He was well aware that if the Ughans established themselves there, his own position would be dire. He would have lost the best defensive position in the east of the Empire, and would doubtless also soon lose the Dravidos Hills. His armies south of Atlandravizzi would have either to retake the heights from the south, a difficult task, or try to retreat west across the Burastoura – and then, no doubt, he would be chased westwards right back towards Cennatlantis. He immediately turned two of his armies around and moved back to save his position on the Croiden Hills, simultaneously ordering the Atlantean army at Dravizzi to attack the Ughans at Atlandravizzi from the north. Finally the Atlantean armies which had advanced over the Burastoura from the Giestisso area were ordered to retreat back, sending a force north to assault Atlandravizzi from the west. These measures worked, though it was a desperately close affair. The Ughans clung desperately on to their gains in the eastern Croiden Hills, and the Rabarrans followed up the Atlanteans as closely as they could. But the combined Atlantean forces overwhelmed the Ughans on the Hills before they could be interrupted by the pursuing Rabarrans, and by the beginning of July, the positions had been stabilised again as they were before the campaign began.

The second campaign of the year carried on directly from this one. The Rabarran pursuers were unable to storm the Croiden Hills from the south, but they were able to cross the Burastoura to the west, on the heels of the retreating enemy. They then moved north and north-west, creating a large salient, nearly 30 miles in depth. But beyond this they could not go, and both sides dug in defensively in and outside this bulge. Similarly, while the attention of the Atlanteans was fixed on the events in the Croiden Hills, the Ughans finally stormed the Dravidos position and pushed the Atlanteans back some way to the west (Second Battle of Dravidos, July 1st – 10th).

880: ATLANTEAN DISASTERS: THE OVERRUNNING OF THE EASTERN PROVINCES, AND THE FALL OF HELVRIS AND CENNATLANTIS

The Rabarrans planned a decisive attack in 880, in co-operation with the Ughans, which they hoped would finally lead to the capture of the Crolden Hills, and subsequently the overrunning of Chalcrieh at least as far as the Dodolla river. They then thought that the Atlanteans might settle for peace, allowing Rabarrieh to annex a large swathe of Meistayieh and the Crolden Hills. Alatheinuqo planned one of his typically complex diversionary offensives, whereby both the Rabarrans with three Armies and the Ughans also with three armies would strongly attack the Crolden Hills from the east, aiming at both Dravizzi and Atlandravizzi. The Ughan attack would be combined with an outflanking movement north of the Thyggis, in less hilly ground, which would be aimed at the highest peaks in the area north-west of Dravizzi, at the source of the rivers Thyggis and Burastoura. The aim was to attract Atlantean forces away from the Rabarran defensive salient west of Giestisso. It was from here that Alatheinuqo planned to make his main attack, with forces secretly withdrawn from the fighting for the Crolden Hills. These would strike the Atlanteans in their weakened positions west of Giestisso. Two Armies were to swing round north via Yellis against the rear of the Atlanteans defending the Crolden Hills, while two Armies would strike south-west towards Cennatlantis. These would be joined as soon as possible by at least one of the other Armies. Meanwhile the Ughans should help to surround the Atlanteans on the Hills, then move westwards towards the Lakes, protecting the Rabarrans' northern flank. Meanwhile in Helvrieh, the siege of Helvriss would continue.

The Atlanteans had different plans, which were to fail to come to fruition, because overtaken by the bolder enemy operations. Gaistuyex wanted to relieve Helvriss and planned to attack southwards across the Cresslepp down to the Helvengio, cutting the Rabarran forces in half, and then move on Helvriss from the east, along with a simultaneous attack from the mountain front north of the city. Two and a half Atlantean Armies would carry out this assault on a narrow front defended by about one Rabarran Army. Gaistuyex was particularly concerned to relieve Helvriss, because of the precarious situation there and elsewhere in the Province as regards Helvran troops, many of whom were faltering in their allegiance to Atlantis.

THE SECOND BATTLE OF THE CROLDEN HILLS AND THE BATTLE OF YELLIS: THE OUTMANOEUVERING OF THE ATLANTEANS

The Atlantean attempt to relieve was the first offensive of the new year, starting on 23rd March. It made quite considerable progress, forcing the Rabarrans back, and threatening to cut off all those to the east of Helvris. It also enabled an Atlantean commander to slip into Helvris, through the besieging forces, to try to rally the defence (see below). But Alatheinuqo kept his nerve, and decided to ignore these events, however serious for Rabarrieh, knowing that success at the Croiden Hills and subsequently in Chalcrieh, would in turn threaten the rear of these Atlantean advances. So, just a couple of days earlier than originally planned, the diversionary attacks on the Croiden Hills by Rabarrans and Ughans began on 28th March, 880. This second battle of the Croiden Hills was extremely bloody, as the Atlanteans had by now got massively strong defences in place, and the assaults were all purely frontal. However, the Atlanteans began to get worried after a week of continual attacks, and gradually, as the Rabarrans had hoped, withdrew a whole Army from the front opposite Giestisso. This was what Alatheinuqo was waiting for. He quietly moved two Armies back across the Burastoura into the Rabarran salient. This salient had been very strongly defended when it was formed the previous year, as Alatheinuqo knew that it would serve as a good jumping-off point for a future offensive into Chalcrieh. At the same time, Rabarran movements into and out of it were difficult to hide, especially from the Atlantean position on the Croiden Hills. This was particularly important, as the Rabarrans wanted to build up a huge army of tanks to exploit the intended attack westwards. But part of the Rabarran attacks on the Croiden Hills at the end of March involved attacking the Atlandravizzi position from the south, and when the Rabarrans seized the highest part of the hills, though not the main Atlantean position, the Atlanteans were unable to see what was going on on the plains the south and south-west. The reinforcing troops were moved into position at night, in any case, while the tanks were kept far back east of the Burastoura.

THE GREAT OFFENSIVE INTO CHALCRIEH, 880

The Battle of Yellis began on April 10th. Two armies broke their way through the salient northwards at the same time as the other two armies attacked south-westwards. The tanks now roared up to the front and began exploiting towards Rontisso and Snattarona. The Atlantean positions now fell apart in every direction. To the north, the Atlanteans forced their way, with some difficulty, into Yellis, while further north, the Ughans brilliantly attacked round Dravizzi to the west. With pressure still being maintained on them from the east, the Atlanteans on the Croiden Hills finally folded up and virtually fled to the east, trying to escape the jaws of the enemy attacks all round them. Many were captured and many were killed, but about two of the three armies managed to escape west towards the Babemme wood and the hills around Sirottis, where a new position was taken up. Meanwhile to the south, Rabarran tanks streamed round the southern flanks of the rear defensive positions of the Atlanteans at Rontisso and Snattarona. As flustered Atlantean forces tried to hold positions here, they were attacked in front and bypassed to the south. Already by the end of April, the Atlanteans had been chased back close to the Dodolla river. As Alatheinuqo had predicted, this catastrophe and the threat it posed to the capital, soon halted the Atlantean attempt to relieve Helvris, and the troops were pulled back to defend Cennatlantis, followed up closely by the Rabarrans.

THE FALL OF CENATLANTIS AND THE DEATH OF GAISTUYEX

The Atlanteans had very strong defensive lines and positions all around Cennatlantis, along the Dodolla, and stretching east-west between the Dodolla and the Gonril. It is one of the most surprising events of this war that they were turned out of all these positions and lost their capital city with hardly a serious fight at all. The reason is the complete panic which gripped the Atlantean forces in the aftermath of the Battle of Yellis, the tremendous success gained by the Rabarran tanks and cavalry in chasing and turning the flank of the Atlanteans, right back to the Dodolla, and the confusion which gripped the high command and Imperial headquarters in the capital. By May 1st, a third army had joined the two Rabarran armies moving directly on the Dodolla. The northernmost of these troops succeeded in crossing the Dodolla north of Cennatlantis and south of Rundes, outflanking several of the Cresslepp-Dodolla defence-lines in this area. To the south, the Atlantean armies which had been trying to relieve Helvrís had retired behind the Cresslepp, which was immediately crossed by advance forces of the enemy. These were finally brought to a halt by the defences stretching between Giezat on the Gonril and the Dodolla, to the south of Cennatlantis. But the events to their north meant that they were likely to be cut off soon, and some were moved off west over the Cresslepp and into the hills, in order to help man the last defensive line between Gresslepp and Rundes on the Failrunn hills. Others moved directly north, only to meet further troops coming out of Cennatlantis to help defend the flanks, or, in some cases, simply fleeing away in panic.

Cennatlantis was thus surrounded, still with part of the Atlantean government and the Emperor himself inside. Gaistuyex insisted on staying close to the fighting, although everyone still with him begged him to escape westwards while it was possible. He refused, and ordered the most important members his government to remain with him. Many in fact sidled away, but by the middle of May, Cennatlantis was being bombarded by the Rabarrans. The latter did not really want to see the capital destroyed by bombardment or fighting, and in the end, the city did indeed escape almost unscathed, despite Gaistuyex's determination to make his forces fight here to the bitter end. On May 18th a shell hit the house where Gaistuyex and several officials were working, killing them all instantly. There was considerable confusion thereafter, but it was clear what the next step had to be from a constitutional point of view. Gaiduiccon was contacted and told that he must take over the leadership. This caused considerable misgivings, both for Gaiduiccon and the military leaders, who thought that Gaiduiccon was too pacifist at heart to be a good war leader. However, Gaiduiccon agreed without delay, and despite his personal antipathy to the war, showed himself willing to defend the Empire, which was after all, at present in dire straits. The Rabarrans indeed seemed to be everywhere over the Dodolla, although in numbers they were, at this stage, considerably inferior to the Atlanteans. Following the death of Gaistuyex, Gaiduiccon soon approved the evacuation of the capital. Many prisoners were taken by the Rabarrans, many other Atlanteans escaped into the Meilox Hills, while some others managed to get away north into the last defensive line protecting Atlantidieh, at Failrunn. And indeed this was where the Rabarran advance was finally held.

THE UGHANS MOVE WEST BUT ARE STALLED BEFORE SIROTTIS

Once they had joined up with the Rabarrans and surrounded the whole Crolden Hills complex, the Ughans looked to advancing westwards. Two Armies had been involved in the Crolden operation, and there were four more to the north. The Chalcran Forests tended to split these into two groups of three Armies. The southernmost group moved on during April, with the Atlanteans slowly giving ground, but there was no rout, comparable to what was happening opposite the Rabarrans in the south. By mid May these Ughan forces had reached the edge of the hills of Sirottis. In the north, the Ughans moved even more slowly north-westwards, halting ultimately in the face of strong Atlantean defences in the mountainous areas they were now approaching. Much time was spent in the first part of June as the Ughans attempted to storm the hills before Sirottis, but the position was unassailable. The Rabarrans to the south were also trying to force their way through the Babemme woods, but these were held just as tenaciously, and the Rabarrans suffered heavy casualties, for the first time in this year's campaign.

In July the Ughans decided on a different tactic, and moved two Armies together to move round the high ground to the north, via Ronhusso, reach Lake Chalcris, and then attack the Atlanteans about Sirottis from the flank and rear, as well as renewing the frontal assaults. Initially all went well, and by July 14th, the Ughans' forces had taken Ronhusso, and were climbing up the hills to the south.

But the Atlanteans did not waver, and were even strengthened by reinforcements from Gasiroto. Then on July 20th, there occurred an Atlantean counter-attack across the Chalcratoura, south of Runnates. This Army forced aside the flimsy Ughan screen along the river, and hit the Ughans to the south in the rear. The Battle of Ronhusso became more complex after July 26th, as additional Ughan troops then struck these Atlanteans from the north-east. The battle spread northwards, as more and more forces came into direct conflict, instead of remaining in defensive entrenchments. North of this, of course, where the Atlanteans were installed on mountainous ground, no real Ughan attacks were feasible. In the end, the Atlanteans won, forcing the Ughans back from the Sirottis hills, and ultimately back eastwards to their north. This large battle finally fizzled out by August 20th.

Thereafter, for the rest of the year, neither side engaged in any major attacks, settling themselves into trench-lines opposite each other.

THE SIEGE AND FALL OF HELVRIS, 879-880

Helvris had been under siege since the previous year, and the attempt by the Atlanteans to relieve it earlier in 879 failed. For the rest of 879, the Atlanteans within Helvris are able to keep the enemy at a reasonable distance, and the siege progresses rather slowly for the Rabarrans. The army in the Meilox Mountains made several unsuccessful attempts to relieve the city, and by 880, its position was becoming desperate. Gaistuyex became worried again about the loyalty of Ghreuken Mists, and messages smuggled out of the besieged city by balloon in February of 880 seemed to suggest treachery and some sort of collusion with the Rabarrans. Gaistuyex decided to send a loyal Atlantean commander of his own, Fulgon Cennan, into the city, with a small bodyguard, ostensibly to advise Mists, but in reality to find out what was happening. He was to act decisively, if necessary, arresting or executing the Helvran, and rallying the Atlantean forces to take over the whole defence.

The problem was to how to insert the commander into the city through the siege. Gaistuyex decided to try to achieve this, and perhaps relieve the whole city, by moving armies south across the Cresslepp down to the coast, as described above. His action, which began on 23rd March, was aborted by the Rabarran attack across the Burastoura, but a small Atlantean force did in fact reach the Helvengio south of Noccsat. It could not force its way through the Rabarran lines investing Helvris, and had to retreat soon in any case, but as had been planned as a contingency, Cennan and a few men set sail in a boat which they had carried with them. Remarkable enough, they were able to creep surreptitiously along the coast and into Helvris by sea on April 8th, avoiding the Rabarran patrols. The Atlantean commander soon discovered that the Helvrans had been arranging surreptitious contacts with the Rabarran forces, and Ghreuken Mists was making little effort to defend the city. In a melodramatic scene, Cennan discovers the treachery in person, and the scene and its results are described for us now by the contemporary historian, Carel Nixalen, written in the rather formal style which came back into fashion in these last years. Click: The treachery in Helvris, April 880

The siege was now tightened, and the first serious bombardments of the town took place. All along, the Rabarrans had been hoping that disaffected Helvran elements in the town would force its surrender, but with the thwarting of Mists' plot, they realised there was no choice but to carry on with the siege to the bitter end. The Atlantean garrison now had the whole city under tight control. After May, a series of Rabarran assaults make slow progress up to the city. Over the next two months, the fight for the city becomes calamitous. The bombardment reduced great swathes of it to ruin. Many civilians were killed, the rest living underground in cellars. The Rabarrans suffered horrendous casualties in their attacks, but the defenders also lost badly. By the beginning of July, many Helvran forces in the town were in open revolt, and the Atlanteans had to withdraw most of them from the defences. The Atlanteans now carried out a series of horrible massacres against all Helvran soldiers, perhaps over 6000 being killed. These massacres extended to civilians, as these began to sabotage the Atlantean defence. Another Rabarran attack on July 20th broke through the defences where a remaining Helvran force defected. For the next week, fighting spread throughout the streets, more and more Helvran civilians joining the invaders. The last Atlantean defenders holed up in the old citadel, and were bombarded mercilessly. Their final offer to surrender was ignored, and they were killed to a man. Thus on July 31st, the Rabarrans took control of the smouldering ruins of the ancient city of Helvris. They had suffered at least 50000 casualties in the siege. The Alternations had lost all their 27000 defenders, over 20000 being killed, 6000 Helvrans massacred by the Atlanteans themselves. There were probably also about 18000 civilian casualties.

3. Stalemate and the tortuous path to a short-lived peace, 881 – 882

881: THE RABARRANS REACH THE GREAT LAKES

The Ughans and Rabarrans succeeded in progressing a little further to the west, and as a result of the battle of Sirottis, reached the banks of Lakes Chalcris and Oncia by May. The Ughans attacked on April 18th with four armies from the Chalcran Forests, where they had secretly been collected over the past weeks. Some forces moved directly westwards, but made relatively little progress.

However, the rest of the armies turned south, striking the main Atlantean position south-west of Micazzo. These troops were forced back, and were split up, some retreating west across the river Chalcratoura, the rest retiring on the strong position of the Sirottis hills, which had withstood the Ughan attacks in 880. At this point, the Rabarrans joined in with a frontal attack on these hills, also moving north-westwards from their positions around Gilliso. The First Battle of Sirottis which ensued lasted 10 days (April 25th – May 4th), and resulted in 30000 Atlanteans surrendering at Sirottis, when they were surrounded. Meanwhile, Rabarran troops reached the banks of Lake Oncia and drew close to the great fortified area of Gasirotto, while to the north, the Ughans reached Lake Chalcris and the river Chalcratoura. There was little further movement on this front for the rest of the year, apart from an advance some miles south by the Skallands west of Keltanipand.

Elsewhere, too, neither side could gain any ground. The Rabarrans made various small attacks in the Meilox Mountains, particularly against Nagguat and the great fortress of Ugholtis, all failures. The Atlanteans made a serious attack in July south from Rundes, but after weeks of bitter fighting, gained only a few miles of ground, as the Rabarrans' defences here now were as strong as their opponents'. Gaiduiccon, meanwhile, was already seeking for an opportunity to end the war, if only with a truce. He was encouraged in this by an increasing amount of war-weariness amongst his subjects, for the war so far had resulted in full-scale conscription, unprecedented casualties and destruction, and the loss of all Atlantis' eastern Provinces. Some of the population in these areas had indeed welcomed the enemy as deliverers, as we have already seen in Helvrieh. Rabarrieh was itself experiencing some opposition to the losses in the war, and even its leaders were beginning to decide that they should settle for what they had gained so far, which was more than they had ever really expected. Rabarrieh was also facing continual warfare against Yciel Tuince Mandagge and was beginning to worry about the ground gained by the Ughans to the north. This became still more of a concern in 882, when both Ughrieh and Skallandieh started to make large advances, while Rabarrieh herself could not gain any ground at all. King Athulco Alibixo would not be unwilling to walk away with Meistayieh and perhaps some parts of Dravidieh II, as well as footholds in Helvrieh, and complete control of the Helvengio.

THE FRONT LINE. 881 - 882

882: THE GREAT UGHAN ADVANCES IN THE NORTH: THE BATTLE OF BURESSO.

The Ughans were at this stage becoming extremely ambitious in their war-aims. After being so hesitant about joining the war at all a few years earlier, King Ladrubith and his generals were now convinced they had the Atlanteans on the run, and wanted to keep attacking westwards. They were also becoming just as anxious to rival their allies the Rabarrans, of whom they were quite jealous. After all, this nation had begun the war, seized Dravizzi and Atlandravizzi, taken both Helvris and Cennatlantis, and taken control of the Helvengio and most of Helvrieh. On the main battle-front, their troops awkwardly linked up with the Rabarrans to their south, sharing the Dravizzi-Atlandravizzi hills as well as the Sirottis heights between them. Even the Skallands were now moving southwards in the northern mountains, threatening to block them from further movement westwards. As suggestions for a truce wafted towards them from Atlanteans and Rabarrans, they were determined first to seize more ground in the north, as well as lay claim to as much of the Crolden Hills as they could. They wanted to annex Dravidieh I and as much of Chalcrieh as possible.

In March there took place the great Battle of Buresso. The Ughans began their new attack across the Chalcratoura, moving west and north-west to Encetes and the Taigeheill forest. This attack was successful, and was followed a few days later with a second, co-ordinated attack on Buresso from the east. These two pincers, closing in on Buresso from north and south trapped many Atlanteans, the rest escaping to the forest. However, the Ughans' attempt to capture Encetes itself, by a direct attack from the east, was beaten off. Further north still, Ughan armies moved westwards across great swathes of mountains, the Cresskor and the Gedandolix. In so doing, the Ughans outsmarted the Skallands, who hurriedly had to organise an attack from the Taigeheill to the Cressdun Pass. Even here they were almost beaten to it by the Ughans, who continued westwards over the Gedandolix in the First Battle of the Cresskor Mountains, and were only narrowly beaten to the Pass by their northern neighbours.

By June, the Ughans had run out of steam. An amphibious attempt to cross Lake Chalcris was a disastrous failure, and the Atlantean defences were hardening all along the Gedandolix mountains. To the south, the Rabarrans had gained no ground at all, indeed had had to ward off a furious Atlantean attack on Cennatlantis from the west, across the Gonril.

SEPTEMBER 882: THE PEACE OF GASIROTTO

Serious negotiations between Atlantis and Rabarrieh took place throughout the winter and spring. Atlantis concentrated on dealing with Rabarrieh, the more so as she realised how she was being outpaced by the Ughans to the north. Her initial conditions, requiring the Rabarrans to quit all conquered Atlantean territory were of course ludicrous, and even the militarist party admitted that any truce would have to involve some loss of ground, albeit until the war could be resumed. This indeed was the reason why the military reluctantly went along with these peace moves, despite the fact that they mistrusted the new Emperor. (They whispered that he only wanted to release his wife from Ughan captivity.) Gradually the Atlanteans relented on their demands and offered Rabarrieh Meistayieh and Helvremon, but refused to give away any Helvran territory. As the Ughans' advances continued in April and May, both sides became alarmed. The Ughans joined the negotiations in any case, but at the same time, Atlantis and Rabarrieh carried on secret talks, in which Gaiduiccon sought to set Rabarran and Ughan at each others' throats by offering to cede, to Rabarrieh only, the whole of the Dravizzi-Atlandravizzi position. Currently the Ughans had a foothold on the hills north of Dravizzi, and wanted to obtain control of Dravizzi, at the very least. If Ughrieh objected, Atlantis and Rabarrieh would threaten to ally against her. Hints of these plans were deliberately leaked to the Ughans, who were already facing growing friction with the Skallands around the territory each was occupying in the northern mountains. In July, Rabarrieh and Atlantis agreed to a truce, pending a more permanent peace. Pressure was now put on the Ughans, and the Atlanteans began moving forces away from the Rabarran front against the Ughans. The Ughans then agreed to a truce in August, and finally, by September, a provisional peace was agreed between the three states at a conference in Gasirotto, the impregnability of which was concurrently made manifest to Atlantis' enemies.

The Peace of Gasirotto was indeed really only a truce, during which both sides pledged to carry on talks towards a complete and full-scale treaty. In fact the only person who probably was serious about this was Gaiduiccon: all the others considered that the truce was just a breathing-space before a continuation of the war. Rabarrieh was granted Helvremon, Meistayieh and part of Dravidieh I, as well as in theory the Dravizzi-Atlandravizzi position and all the Crolden hills. Ughrieh took over Dravidieh II and eastern Chalcrieh. The Ughans and Rabarrans agreed to pull back their armies from their forward positions to a line one hundred miles west of the territory Atlantis had ceded to them. However, in all the areas of contention, troops remained on full guard. These included Helvrieh, which Rabarrieh refused to evacuate, the Crolden hills, where both sides' troops eyed each other suspiciously, and Cennatlantis, which the Rabarrans were determined to hold.

The Skallands deliberately refused to treat for peace, and carried on moving through the Cressdun Pass. Atlantis had already agreed with Ughrieh that she would counter-attack here, and force Skallandieh to the negotiating-table, and Ughrieh played along by threatening to join in these attacks. During September and October, the Atlanteans concentrated three armies, and threw the Skallands back into the Pass and the Taichtaill mountains. As a result, Skallandieh too agreed to peace by November. Atlantis was determined to make this a perpetual peace, and Skallandieh in the end decided she had gained all she wanted out of the war: namely, the land down to the river Ruphaio including Dortan, but excluding Marussolo and the Cressdun Pass, and some territory to the east south of Keltanipand.

886: THE ATLANTEANS OUTNUMBERED BY THEIR ENEMIES

During the winter of 885 to 886, the Rabarrans and Ughans tried to co-ordinate their strategy for the first time for several years. Both remained highly suspicious of each other, and the negotiations were made much more difficult because both sides wanted to end up controlling as much of the Crolden Hills, with Dravizzi and Atlandravizzi, as they could. They agreed to try to fix the Atlanteans' attention on the Crolden Hills, which they had attacked so desperately in 885, and then by an ambitious double manoeuvre from the Rabarran position east of the Dodolla and the Rabarran-Ughan positions north and south of the Crolden Hills, to strike east and west to cut off all the enemy south of roughly the Yellis-Gasirotto line. In the west, the Rabarrans collected three armies south of Cennatlantis as secretly as they were able. To the east, they dug in strongly on the Crolden Hills with one army, and concentrated three others behind the Burastoura. The Ughans also concentrated three armies south of Dravidos, facing south-westwards. It was intended that these two sets of armies would between them smash the Atlanteans on the Crolden Hills, then strike west to join up with the three Rabarran armies from Cennatlantis, which would simultaneously move north-east towards Gilliso and Yellis. The exact directions of the manoeuvres would depend on the Atlantean attack - the allies were sure that this would take place, as it was essential for the Atlanteans to break the allied front, if they were ever to avoid ultimate defeat.

In fact, the Atlanteans were already too late to win the war. In this area in March 886, they had just two armies facing Cennatlantis against three Rabarrans, and in the east, there were three Atlantean armies trying to storm the Crolden Hills, and one other army south along the Burastoura. These faced four Rabarran armies, with three Ughan armies to the north. In other words, six Atlantean armies, or about 540000 men, against ten Rabarran and Ughan armies, about 900000 in all. Despite their incredible victories the previous year against both allies, the latter, especially the Rabarrans, had concentrated their forces, weakened though they were. The outlook for Atlantis was indeed even bleaker in the future, as in March 886, Rabarrieh concluded peace with Yciel Tuaince Mandagge, and would be able to move troops and ships north later in the year to face the Atlanteans.

THE ALLIED COUNTER-ATTACK AND DEFEAT OF THE ATLANTEANS IN CHALCRIEH, 886

THE THIRD BATTLE OF DRAVIZZI AND THE END OF THE ATLANTEAN DREAM, MARCH-APRIL 886

Low-scale fighting on the Crolden Hills never really ceased during the winter, and picked up again after February. As their enemies had surmised, General Norindel intended to go all out to seize the Crolden Hills, whatever the casualties. His blunt, unsubtle plans were fully supported by the Emperor. Both were persuaded that once this position was taken, the Rabarrans and Ughans would be split in two, and would be forced to retreat in opposite directions: the Ughans east and north-east towards the upper Gestes, the Rabarrans south-east along their communications to the lower Gestes. This, after all, was what had happened in the Great Continental War to the Ughans and the Basquecs. The Rabarrans in the west, around Cennatlantis and in Helvrieh, would then also be forced to move back south. However, this plan assumed that the enemy had not moved his forces, or concentrated them around the Crolden Hills. The Third Battle of Dravizzi began on 20th March, and after three weeks, the Atlanteans had barely penetrated more than a few miles south of Dravizzi itself, already taken in the previous autumn, and had suffered tremendous casualties already. The Ughans put two armies in to defend the hills, and by April, they and the Ughans agreed that the time for the counter-attack was at hand.

On April 7th, three Rabarran armies attacked the southern Atlantean flank across the Burastoura from Giestisso, while to the north, three Ughan armies moved westwards between Dravidos and the Thyggis, against the Atlantean northern flank. The Atlanteans caved in in both areas, as so many of their forces had been committed to the fighting on the Crolden Hills. The Rabarrans closed in on Yellis, and counter-attacked on the hills themselves, while the Ughans moved on to Micazzo and the north-western tip of the hills, in rear of the main Atlantean position. It can be seen how closely this manoeuvre resembled that of the Second battle of the Crolden Hills and the Battle of Yellis in 880, and it was just as successful. On the previous occasion, the Atlanteans were fixed on the Hills by continual attacks there by the Rabarrans. This time, it was the Atlanteans themselves who blindly maintained their offensive there, but on both occasions, they were culpably negligent about their flanks. The result this time was that nearly a whole Atlantean army was surrounded on the Hills.

Part two of the allied plan now moved smoothly into sequence. Part of this again was similar to what took place in 880, namely exploitation by the Rabarrans westwards from Yellis towards the Dodolla. But this time it was much more devastating, because it was combined with an offensive eastwards, to meet it, by the three Rabarran armies which had been waiting patiently on the seemingly quiescent front between Snattarona and Gilliso. At the same time, the Ughans exploited westwards and north-westwards to regain the ground taken by the Atlanteans in 885. The Rabarran manoeuvre, the Battle of Rontisso, was faced by only two armies, and one of these was quickly cut off south of the Rontisso hills by 17th April. It was forced back south to Lake Trannolla, where, as all retreat was now impossible, it surrendered on April 22nd. The other army managed to retreat north and west to find salvation eventually in the fortress of Gasiroto, but only after the loss of half its forces.

During the rest of April and May, the Rabarrans gradually closed up on Gasiroto, while the Ughans advanced steadily through the Chalcran Forests and Micazzo westwards towards the Cresskor Mountains and the river Chakratoura. This movement was far more terrible to the population than had been the first advance in 880-1, and many massacres were deliberately committed by the Ughans, who had suffered such heavy casualties during their retreat here in 885. The result of this behaviour was, however, unfortunate for the Ughans. Discipline collapsed, and the advance slowed right down. The hordes of refugees who now tried to escape westwards ahead of the Ughans also made a fast pursuit of Atlantean forces impossible.

THE LAST CHANCE FOR ATLANTIS

The Ughans in fact spent most of 886 gradually moving westwards. Although very slow at first, they were given a rude shock in July, when Skallandieh suddenly decided to rejoin the war against Atlantis. This decision was just as much a surprise to the Atlanteans, and a very disagreeable one, as it meant she had yet another huge front to defend. The Skallands made this sudden decision when they saw the Ughans once again approaching the Cresskor Mountains, and the areas which the Skallands had recently evacuated under the terms of the peace with Atlantis. Frightened that the Ughans would seize this whole area, and emboldened by the obvious collapse of the Atlanteans, Skallandieh sent its troops southwards across the Taichtaill. A month or so later, she also crossed the Ruphaio in the west, the agreed border with Atlantis. As the year went by, the Skallands this time conquered the whole of the Gedandolix and most of the Cresskor Mountains, as well as seizing the Cressdun Pass. Here was the potential for conflict between Ughan and Skalland, and there was further friction between Ughans and Rabarrans around possession of the Croiden Hills, which remained largely in Rabarran hands, but which Rabarrieh had vaguely promised to share with Ughrieh before the recent battles. Atlantis might thus have a last chance of exploiting its enemies' mistrust, and making peace once again with one or more of them, now that the battle-lines were returning to the position they had occupied before Atlantis' great offensive of 884.

Crehonerex could not fail to see the doom now facing Atlantis. His armies had now lost huge casualties - two and a half complete armies had vanished between March and June this year, and it was becoming impossible to replace such losses. Morale was falling fast, and more and more non-Atlanteans were surrendering or fleeing. Indeed, Atlantis' enemies had by the end of 886, deprived her of nearly all her empire, other than the Atlanteans themselves and some Lio-Marossans and West Kelts, and thus her pool of potential replacements for the army was diminishing very rapidly. He began diplomatic moves again after June, as his armies retired in disarray back to where they had been in 884. He believed that he could rely, as before, on his strong defences along the line of the Lakes, in the Meilox Mountains, and in the northern mountains. His real worries were the open Marossan plains, now threatened by the Skallands, and the Rabarran salient west of Cennatlantis, which similarly might burst open to allow the Rabarrans to rampage across the flat lands of Atlantidieh. He went to work on the Ughans first, offering them all the land they had taken up to the Cresskor Mountains, and offering them the parts now in Skalland hands, if they would accept a truce, while he fought back the Skallands. The Ughans did not trust him, of course, but were in any case forced to slow down their advance to a virtual halt, as their armies outran their supplies, and came up face to face with the Skallands. Crehonerex was simultaneously negotiating with the Rabarrans, offering them a truce on the line they had reached, including all the Helvran territory this time, though not Chalcrieh. But he said that he would aid the Rabarrans against the Ughans, and they could both share out the spoils.

However, the Ughans learned in August of these secret negotiations with the Rabarrans from the Rabarrans themselves. At a high level conference in Vulcanipand attended by the Ughan Emperor, Ladrubith, and the King of Rabarrieh, Athulco Alibixo, in September, they reiterated their determination not to make separate peace. For the first time, now, they decided, in secret, that they would definitely aim to conquer and dismember the whole Atlantean Empire. They would share out the territories between them, but though they agreed to split it roughly north and south, on a general line from the Croiden Hills west via Gasiroto and Tilrase to Atlantis, they could not decide which of them would in the end hold the major cities on this line, most especially Atlantis city and Dravizzi. After further discussion, they invited the King of Skallandieh, Sherecin Jenilkin Majal, to join them, which he did in November. He demanded a free hand in the north-west, in the Marossan lands and Yciel Atlantis, and did come to an agreement with the Ughans about the boundary between them in the Cresskor Mountains.

Crehonerex was left out in the cold throughout this period, as his enemies broke off all negotiations. Fighting, admittedly, ceased, apart from occasional sparring, after September. Then in November, the three monarchs gave him a joint ultimatum, which they knew he would refuse. This was to hand over ownership of all the territories currently occupied by the monarchs' armies to them in perpetuity; to withdraw all his armies back behind the rivers Rollepp and Fellepp; and to leave the intervening lands (Atlantidieh, Nundatlantidieh, etc) neutral and unarmed, as "independent" nations under the overall protection of one or other of the Great Powers (excluding Atlantis). Crehonerex did of course reject this, and now the next few months were spent by both sides in final frenzied preparations for a fight to the finish.

The military geography of the Atlantean Empire

INTRODUCTION: THE HEARTLAND OF ATLANTIS

The geography of the vast region covered by the Atlantean Empire, as well as its periphery, which was occupied by neighbouring states and peoples often antagonistic to Atlantis, is of vital importance when studying military history. Again and again, throughout the 700 years of recorded Atlantean history, the position of mountains, hills, rivers, plains, lakes and cities determine the course and limitation of invasions, defence and civil wars. Despite changes in sizes and armaments of armies, and conflicts between differing nations or contenders for the government of Atlantis itself, the strategy of wars and the sites of battles are limited by geography and often repeat themselves over the centuries.

The original kingdom of Atlantis, its heartland, as it was before its expansion after the 200s, was a compact area highly defensible against invaders. It is bounded on the west by the sea, on the north and south by mountains and on the east by rivers, the Bore and the Rollepp. There are relatively narrow lower areas between the mountains and the sea to north and south - from Marossan in the north and Numidis in the south, but these too are not difficult to defend. In fact once the Helvran Wars were past, no invaders penetrated as far west as this until the Final Wars in the 880s.

Atlantis city itself is almost impregnable, with the sea and the Atlano Mandengio securing access by sea, as well as two rivers, the Puster and the Atlanos to east and south-east, and the Algrunix hills serving as a bulwark to the south. These strategic hills and rivers were the site of several battles in the early years - against Helvrans in 253 and in the Family Wars in 308 and 312. Then at roughly 120-140 miles away, the capital is protected and almost surrounded by two great rivers, the Fellepp in the south and the Rollepp to east and north. The source of these rivers, and bridging the gap between them, are the Lillerunix Hills. Possession of these hills was important to Atlantean defenders and to invaders, as the major road called the "Yeltrata" crossed the hills from east to west and could allow an attacker to bypass the river barriers. Furthermore the thick wood called the Dallase Fembe, west of the hills, provided a convenient area to move westwards unseen by defenders. The Lillerunix was fought over in the Helvran Wars, the Imperial Wars (with a major battle in 361), in Ruthopheax's campaigns against the Republicans and in the Final Wars.

Within the circuit of the rivers Fellepp and Bore, the landscape around Atlantis city was hilly in parts, but had no serious obstacles to armies other than the woods - the Dallase Fembe west of the Lillerunix and the Pusseal north-east of the capital. An invader crossing these rivers was usually forced to use a certain number of roads. In the north, the "Marossaraita" crossed the Bore at Ghestis (it was too wide to cross easily any further west) but then had to skirt the Pusseal and cross the Huainarun hills between Yrun and the later naval base of Sulosos. This area was often successfully defended by the Atlanteans, notably against the Skallands in the Continental War (746) and at the end of the Final Wars. Another road crossed the river to the east, south of Yfeale, which also avoided the woods. The Bore was crossed by two main roads, about 70 miles apart, because they went round the edges of the Borfembe and Failfembe woods to the east of the river. The area east of the Bore, as far as the river Rollepp, was also part of the Atlantean heartland, and was partly covered by these woods, as well as the river Ghesse to the north. The northern road, the "Cennrata" crossed the Rollepp at Ancahouth and the Ghesse at Duiccul, and then moved north of the Borfembe and over the Bore at Fourtis. From here it had to cross hills west of Failrun and then the river Puster before reaching the capital. There was another road south of the Failfembe from Tiltrase on the Rollepp to Uzuephe on the Bore, whence it moved indirectly on Atlantis via Yeldis and Ygohe. Many battles were fought along these roads: in 311 and 313 in the Family Wars, at Fourtis in 588, the first defeat of the Imperialists by the Republicans, and again in the revolt against the Tyrants in 828, and in the Borfembe against the Skallands in 746.

In the south there was no important road which crossed the river Fellepp, but this river was difficult to defend for long against an invader determined to cross it, as were the Helvrans and other armies in the Family Wars.

ATLANTIDIEH

The Atlantid City States were early on conquered by Atlantis and became almost an extension of the Atlantean heartland, and this was only encouraged by the geography of the region. As further west, the very flat Atlantis countryside between the Rollepp and the Great Lakes was protected by the Decanda Runix hills to the north and the Meilox Mountains to the south. Of course the Lakes Oncia and Chalcris formed an almost impenetrable barrier to the east and indeed really divided the whole Atlantean Empire between the seas in the west and the river Gestes in the east into two separate halves. There were two narrow areas of access around the hills and mountains to north and south, which I have just mentioned - a 25 mile gap down the western side of Lake Chalcris from the Taigeheill woods, but with the strong fortress of Encetes to block it; and the flatter area, intercut by the rivers Cresslepp, Gonril and Dodolla between the Meilox Mountains and the river Dodolla. This too was blocked in later history by Cennatlantis and the hilly area to its west about Failrunn.

The centre of the Atlantid area tended to be quickly crossed by armies during most wars, as there were few good defensive positions. Battles tended to congregate around rivers or towns nearby, e.g. Ancahouth in 361, which gave Atlaniphon I the throne, and again, with Tilrase, in 633 as Ruthopheax fought State "E". Similarly the approaches to and from Cennatlantis from the west were heavily fought over by Ruthopheax I, against the Tyrants and in the Final Wars, and the Encetes area saw fierce fighting in the Final Wars. There was a passage in and out of Atlantidieh between the two Great Lakes, but this was only a few miles wide and was completely blocked by the fortress of Gasiroto. This withstood sieges and assaults from the time of the Chalcran Wars onwards, and particularly during the Great Continental War and the Final Wars.

HELVRIEH

Helvrieh, the area of the old Helvran Empire north of the Helvengio, which was conquered by Atlantis in the wars ending in 267, was very well defended from attack from the north by the Daigorunix and the Meilox mountains. There were only a few passages through or past this barrier, which would allow an invader to penetrate south into Helvrieh or north from Helvrieh into Atlantis or Atlantidieh. In the west, by the sea, there was a reasonably wide and flat area with a road from the river Fellepp south via Nagguat into the area of Numidis and to Nosinge and then, if desired, eastwards on the north shore of the Helvengio. This was used particularly in the Helvran Wars. To the east, the two rivers Numeras and Gosten created narrow passes through the mountains. But these were blocked in all periods by fortresses - Ugholtis and Numercuat on the Numeras and Vailriun and Gieseucas on the Gesten. Further east still was the river Cresslepp, at the mouth of which lay the city of Helvris. This had a branch to the north, called the Gonril, which curled round the north of the eastern end of the Meilox mountains. The mountains here and the river restricted the approach to Cennatlantis and the main route into Chalcrieh across the Dodolla, as we have seen. Equally they made an approach to Helvris itself very difficult, except from the east. During the Helvran wars and in the revolt against the Tyrants, armies did try, with great difficulty, to attack up and down and across the Gonril. Thus it can be seen that Helvrieh was a particularly well-protected area: even an advance east or west along the edge of the Helvengio was difficult, owing to the many river-lines to be crossed. The Atlanteans found this during the Helvran Wars. Equally the Rabarrans found it almost impossible to force their way north through the mountains in the first half of the 880s.

THE EAST OF THE EMPIRE: THE CHALCRAN AREAS

The great city of Cennatlantis lay on the river Dodolla and along with Rundes protected the line against attacks from Chalcrieh to the east. There were officially two battles and two sieges of Cennatlantis, in the Great Civil War, the fighting between Imperialists and Republicans and the Great Continental War. Similarly there were three battles for Rundes at the same periods. The approach across the river Dodolla and into Chalcrieh, between Lakes Trannolla and Oncia was also difficult for armies. Hills formed the first barrier to the east, either side of Snattarona. This could act as a defence against an invader from the east, as in the Great Continental War against the Basquecs, or in the rebellion of 524-6, or as a defence against an invader, usually Atlantis, from the west. Examples are the early attempts by the Atlanteans to conquer the Chalcrans in the First Empire and the defence by the Imperialists against the Republicans after the 590s. There were more hills further east around Rontisso, the Babemme woods to the north, and finally, another 60 or 70 miles eastward, the line of the river Burastoura. This often proved a good defence for the Atlanteans, especially at the crossing-point towns of Yellis and Giestisso. To the north, the terrain got hillier and hillier, and large barriers appeared from east and west, the river Chakratoura to the west, and the Chalcran Forests to the east.

The chief defensive positions to the east were of course the Dravidos hills, and to the south, the Crolden Hills, crowned by the fortresses of Dravizzi and Atlandravizzi. From the earliest times, these were the final redoubts of the Chalcrans, and later Atlantis used them as its great defensive position against attack from the east (Ughans) or south-east (Basquecs, Rabarrans), once the first line of defence, formed by the rivers Gestes and Thyggis had been breached. There were three battles and sieges of Dravidos, four battles of Dravizzi, a siege and a battle of Atlandravizzi and two battles of the Croiden Hills, all taking place on these hills. These mostly took place in the Great Continental and Final wars, but also include the decisive battle at Dravizzi between Ruthoyon II and the Chalcrans in 335 and a major siege in the Third Ughan War in 537.

Very different was the area to the south of these hills and east of Lake Trannolla. This was Meistayieh, a very flat area, which was largely indefensible. The exception was to the west. There the river Cresslepp and the rivers Burtounna and Helvenslepp, surrounded by marshes and a hilly central position, protected the Cennatlantis area very well from attack from Meistayieh, or Helvris. This was seen frequently in the Great Continental War, where the Basquecs were unable to force their way through.

THE LINE OF THE RIVER GESTES

The Gestes represented the most enduring line of defence for the Atlantean Empire against its enemies - if this were crossed, then the Croiden Hills was usually the position to which their armies fell back. Some fifty miles and more to the east of the river lay a long range of hills and forests, and if the Atlanteans tried to lay claim to land east of the river, these hills usually represented the farthest point that they could penetrate to the east, as the Ughans usually used them as their main defence. There were passes in them up the tributary rivers and there was sometimes fighting here, for example the siege of Bradghus in 721-2. The River Gestes was protected by a series of Atlantean fortresses along its length, at intervals of about 50-70 miles, and there were many occasions when these were besieged by enemies, usually Ughans. The river Merros, a tributary of the Gestes in the north, was another defence for the Atlanteans against barbarian invaders. Equally in the south of Meistayieh, the lower Gestes and the Vulcan were vital as representing the first place that armies could pass north or south on land round the end of the Helvengio.

THE NORTHERN FRONTIERS

Mountains and forests stretched along the Empire's northern frontier from the Gestes and Merros in the east almost to the sea in the west. North Chalcrieh was filled with forests on hilly lands, but there was then a small gap to the west between there and Lake Chalcris and the river Chakratoura. Access to the far north was defended by the fortress of Keltanipand and to the west by Runnates and Buresso on the Chakratoura. North of Keltanipand lay the great mountains of Doradil, Dorkor and Dachdol. Access east and west round the north of Lake Chalcris had therefore to involve crossing the Chakratoura. Some miles the west of this lay the Taigeheill forests and the Gedandolix hills to the north-west. The fort of Encetes protected the route south down to the west of the Lake. These were vital important routes in the Great Continental and Final Wars.

Somewhat to the south-west were the Decanda Runix hills, which along with the river Noilafa tended to cut off the Marossan lands to the north from Atlantis to the south. However, the sea-coast in the extreme west was flat, and only a series of river-lines - Noilafa, Sulophaio, Ereipha and Sulapha - would slow down the advance of an army from the south or north, as well as large towns on the coast. Mountains lay some 50-60 miles inland, the Netaka mountains, but east of these there lay another bowl of lower land between the Decanda Runix in the south, the Gedandolix in the east and the river Ruphaio in the north. North of the Ruphaio, the Phonerian peninsula jutted out to the south-west, but it was almost impregnable by land. The Opheril Mountains stretched across it at its junction with the mainland, only some 20 miles at the narrowest, and there are very few examples of any armies forcing their way across these mountains in the face of any reasonable defence. The island of Phonaria was equally impregnable unless attacked from the sea.

SOUTH OF THE HELVENGIO

The southern part of the Atlantean Empire was on the whole only accessible from the northern part across the Helvengio; the exception was the extreme eastern part leading to Lutieh, Yall. Thiss., Razira, etc. , and even here the rivers Gestes and Vulcan very definitely separated the two areas. Amphibious invasions were thus the only way to cross from north to south and vice versa in the west. The island of Helvremon could act as a sort of half-way stage for such invasions.

Amphibious invasions were not uncommon in history, but of course required that the invading army had full control of the seas. There was much tussling for naval supremacy in the Atlantis-Helvris wars, the Great Continental Wars and the Final Wars. During the former Atlantis succeeded in invading the south, but Helvremon island was very fiercely contended for, by land and sea. Contrariwise she prevented Basquec landings in the 740s. In the Final Wars, Rabarrieh gained control of the sea and invaded Helvrieh. There were many other crossings by rebels and pretenders to the throne in the fourth century and the time of the Imperialist Pretenders in the 600s. To the east crossings via the Gestes and Vulcan were much more common, though landings from and to Lutieh were very difficult and unusual, due to the mountainous terrain - the attempt by Ruthopheax in his was against State "A" was very nearly a failure. But crossings of the rivers to the east were undertaken in this war, the Great Continental War and the Final Wars. On the other hand the river line acted as a barrier against Basquecs during the chaos of the wars with the Republic and the rule of the Tyrants.

The westernmost part of the southern area became the Province of Th. Thiss. It was a hilly country, cleft by ravines and with fortified towns on hilltops. It could never be conquered quickly or easily by invaders, and both Atlantis in the third century and Rabarrieh in the eighth and ninth took many years to do so. East of this Province and south of Manralia lay the deserts of Aolduathu and Akunudda, hemmed in by the rivers Akulta and Gosal to west and east and the sea in the far south. There was little communication across this, though continual raids into Atlantean territory by the desert nomads. Only the Rabarrans succeeded in using it as a springboard for a successful conquest of Manralia and Th.Thiss in the 700s and 800s. These deserts and those further east (the Gesdraudho and the Kharaduathu) were divided by the north-south flowing river Gosal, which, between mountains on either side, formed the easiest way of moving from Siphia in the far south right up to the south of Manralia, or, eastwards via the ltheerdi, to Razira. Atlantis had some colonies on the extreme southern flank of this area, in Siphia and Ibix, which were normally only supportable by sea.

Manralia was a flatter area but with a number of hill-ranges, chiefly Olgrunix to the north and Ephorill to the south-west. Easy conquest was usually hindered by the presence of fortified cities and ports on the coast, such as Noutens and Raihco, which could be supplied from the Helvengio. So in the Continental War, Basquec conquest of the Province by land from the south-east was limited by the defensive capabilities of these cities. Such access to Manralia was only feasible by sea in the north, and by land from the west and south-east. As far as access from the east is concerned, this involved crossing the Gairase river, and here this was only practical in a narrow area of about thirty miles south of the Helvengio and the Gairaseducco swamps and north of the desert area of Gesdraudho south of the river. Here Atlantis had the great fort of Atlaniphis and the attempts to besiege and capture this were of vital importance. There were three battles and a siege of the fortress all in the period of the Continental War.

East of Lutieh and south of the Gestes lay Yall. Thiss. Province. This was mostly flat but quite urbanised. The main lines of defence against attacks from north or south were the river Gayvot, which, with the sea on all other flanks, effectively made Lutieh an island; the hills of Avlotans to the east of this river; and the rivers Yalldairu and Gairase to the south. The east of the area was also bounded by the river Vulcan. South of the Yalldairu the region stretched on to the great mountain range of the Raziris, which for many years acted as a defence for Atlantis against invasion from the south. To the east of the Vulcan was the Province, and formerly independent state, of Vulcanieh. This was open to invasion from the south-east and east by nomadic tribes, but protected from Ughan attacks by the mountains.

South of the Raziris mountains lay another flat area as far as the Och Therult mountains, the northern border of Basquecieh. To the north rivers such as the Baccuel and the Gvondhat offered protection. To the south were the rivers Banta and Gedvox. To the west was the Gairase, which turned into the Gedvox. West of these was again the desert, though the river ltheerdi ran into the Gairase from the west and represented a communication link towards the river Gosal. These areas represented the furthest defences of Atlantis to the south and east.

Architecture and Imperial monuments from 200 to 600

Editor's note: the first part of this section is a straightforward historical account of Atlantean architecture till 600 evidently written by my source. To this I have appended a contemporary account of the city of Atlantis.

1. THE BUILDING TRADITIONS OF ATLANTIS BEFORE 380

The area of the future Atlantean Empire had been the scene of a number of great earlier empires, and all of these had left behind relics and ruins of their buildings. The Marossan Empire was still visible during the First Atlantean Empire in the remains of awe-inspiring stone structures, often of enigmatic, geometrical forms. In particular, tall towers were scattered about the Marossan and western Keltish areas, the remnants of religious monuments. The Dravedean and Numedean Empires were represented by the relics of more obviously functional buildings – State institutions, theatres and temples. In addition, Empires and states still in existence after 200, such as the Eliossiens, Marossans, Chalcrans and Helvrans, also had impressive buildings to their credit, superior to anything Atlantean, at least until after about 310.

Before 360, Atlantean building styles and materials were variable throughout the Empire. There were essentially three main building materials, which indigenous peoples, the old Empires, and Atlantis herself used for centuries to come, depending on geographical area. South of the Helvengio, in Manralia, the City States, Razira and the deserts, brick and mud were the usual tools of construction. In the central parts, in Atlantis, Helvris and the Lio-Marossan states, as well as the former Dravedean and North Numedean Empires, stone was more common. Finally, in the north and east, in the lands of the Kelts, and in Dravedean and some Chalcran and Ughan areas, wood was generally used. Clearly, the different cultures made use of whatever were the local resources, but sometimes Empires imported different types of materials from abroad. Stone, and sometimes marble, were always regarded as the finest materials, suitable for the grandest buildings, and examples could be seen in the monuments of the ancient empires, as well as the practice of the modern-day Helvrans and Marossans.

The earliest Atlantean architecture, of which we have any record, dates from the pre-Imperial period from about 120 to 200. This was called "Heroic" Art by later Atlantean critics (or "Fulgonyua Enscolpha" in Atlantean), and witnesses the use of stone in grandiose and monolithic styles for religious and state buildings. After 200, there was little important change in style, but the types and numbers of large stone buildings increase, to include national and local government, and the first market-places and communal centres. The architecture remained massive, but with more decoration. There was little to distinguish Atlantean from Helvran or Chalcran architecture at this stage. This architecture, like contemporary art, was named "Communal Art" ("Saindeya Enscolpha").

Between 300 and 360, Atlantean architecture developed rapidly, in the style called First Empire Romantic. Most important are two main influences from outside. Firstly there was Romantic fancy from some Chalcran areas; this was followed by the cool classicism of Eliossie and Marossan. The Romantic epoch was one of eclecticism, which included wild decoration in stone and wood, and grand vistas with many pillars and arches. Of course, the houses of ordinary people were little affected, except perhaps for the addition of a flight of steps at the front, or pillars round the door.

There was a turn to classicism after 350 in all the arts, and this formed the basis of Second Empire Classicism from about 380 onwards.

THE CLASSICAL ARCHITECTURE OF ATLANTIS

Classical Atlantean style was influenced strongly by the architecture of Eliossie, and its slightly debased image in Marossan. The features of this architecture were the use of undecorated stone, tall walls and porticos, and many pointed pillars and arches. In Marossan the stone was often painted pink or blue. Atlantis borrowed the simplicity and geometrical regularity of this style, but amalgamated it with her own ideas, which can be traced to the Romantic and fanciful features of the building she put up after 270. Thus pillars remained, but were mixed with rounded arches. Similarly, the geometrical flatness of the northern styles were softened by the use of curves and rounded features to buildings. After 380, the typical grand Atlantean building, a palace, State institution, monument or church, was symmetrically constructed in stone, with an imposing entrance up a flight of steps. It usually had two wings, with a curved entrance-way, made of pillars or arches with rounded tops. It often had a dome over the centre, or towers over the wings, and was usually white, with some pastel shades and patterned decoration in places. Increasing interest in landscaping led to such buildings being placed in a cultivated garden or landscape, and often several buildings would be linked together as a group.

One other feature, particularly typical of Atlantean architecture, remains to be mentioned. This was the common use of a high column at one end of a building. This was the result of religious tradition, as all Atlantean churches were originally in the open air, and when they turned to actual structures, were tall, tapering towers, open to the sky. This was to allow worshippers to commune more closely with the gods. Later, the churches were fully roofed, except for a narrow opening at the top. The feature of a tall tower was adapted and added to secular buildings, initially as a religious feature, for all the inhabitants there would collect at the foot of the tower for prayers at certain times. After about 350, towers were increasingly added to large private mansions as well as public buildings, and architects began to use them as an aesthetic feature, as much as for their religious connotations. In the typical Classical building, this tower, long and tall, as in present-day mosques, was attached to the side of the building. Usually it was entered from the roof of the main building, and a sort of small room joined on to the tower, allowing access into it for a few people, at the level of the main building's roof. The tower had a small opening at the top, but after 450 or so, it was only actually used for worship by very religious families.

ROMANTIC AND LATER SECOND EMPIRE STYLES

After about 480, that same Romantic movement, which swept through all the arts, also affected architecture. The result was buildings with more decoration and colour, and more flowing lines. Whereas in Classical buildings, everything was symmetrical, with two wings, and a circular, pillared, central entrance, now the wings were often curving, with domes above them. Pillars, which might appear anywhere around the building, were given pointed, rather than round arches after about 510. As Romanticism became more extreme later in the sixth century. Large buildings became increasingly fantastical and "baroque", in the sense of European architecture of our seventeenth century. Domes multiplied and were given pointed tops, and the size of palaces or large mansions grew all the time, surrounded by fantastic landscaped gardens. Similar buildings were also constructed for the performance of Total Works of Art, those Romantic amalgamations of music, drama, dance, architecture and landscape, which became so popular in this period. To our eyes, such buildings would appear like imaginary fantasies of Eastern or Indian palaces.

At the same time as these developments for the large buildings of the aristocracy and well-off landowners, the housing of ordinary, Class 3 and 4 people became more utilitarian, with the increasing use of brick, covered with plaster or stucco. Exterior patterning and decoration were also applied liberally over the surfaces of these houses. The first blocks of flats appeared for lower-class citizens, two or three stories high. This style became universal in Republican areas after 590, and the grand architecture of the wealthy was either demolished or abandoned. In Imperialist areas, fantastical Romanticism also disappeared, and was replaced by square, defensive-looking, militarised buildings, forbidding and austere, and made of stone. After the establishment of the Third Empire, the two strands, Republican and Imperialist, coalesced, and produced smaller, softer buildings, made of brick, but with stone or plaster cladding.

ATLANTEAN ARCHITECTURE REFLECTED IN THE IMPERIAL PALACES

We can illustrate the foregoing styles of architecture by looking briefly at the four Imperial Palaces, built between the mid 200s and the mid 500s.

1. The first Palace built for the Emperors was begun by Carel I about 240. It was built on cliffs above the coastline, a couple of miles to the north of the centre of old Atlantis. It was added to and extended by Cao-Melion in the 270s, and this Emperor also laid out some pleasure-grounds behind it. None of these buildings have survived now, even as foundations, and even in Atlantean times, they had been demolished or altered beyond recognition within 3-400 years. The Palace would appear to have included a number of partly separated, relatively modest buildings, built of a mixture of wood, plaster and stone, in a monumental, bulky style, all with low-pitched roofs. By the time of the Emperors Cao-Thildo I and II (343-352), the Palace must have seemed small and old-fashioned, and it was "made over" in a grander style, which anticipated the Classical architecture of a few decades later. The only other major change to this Palace was made by Atlaniphon II after 420, when he remodelled the gardens in the fashion of the latest landscaping style. It was used to imprison Crehenerex III for a while, after his capture by the Republicans in 588, and later taken over by them as a weapons storehouse. It was used as a last-ditch defence by the Republicans in 630, and was bombarded by the Imperialists, when they recaptured the city at that time. The remains of it were demolished by order of Ruthopheax I soon after.
2. But by this time, Atlantis city had grown so far that it now completely surrounded the Palace and its grounds, and Atlaniphon III, an Emperor fascinated by all the arts, who always preferred to live in the countryside, away from urban life, decided to build a completely new Palace about 8 miles NE of the centre of Atlantis. This - called the "New Palace" - was built by some of the greatest architects of the time in the pure Classical style. We have many reproductions and descriptions of it, and therefore know in some detail what it looked like. It centered on a huge and grand edifice, with the Classical curved centre with dome, and two wings, slanting gentle backwards, with the traditional tower at the end of one of them. There were also many smaller buildings, all set within pseudo-natural landscapes, and surrounding the whole, a large area of countryside, tamed, but with a few early Romantic touches, such as manmade waterfalls. This Palace became the residence of all Emperors when at Atlantis, and the old Palace tended to be given over to Imperial Controllers as offices. The second Palace was changed and improved by Thildo I and Finfon after 478, when further romantic touches were added, such as the extension of the two wings of the main building, so that they curved back round in a sort of bow, and the erection of a second tower at the end of the other wing.

After the fall of the Second Empire, it was used for a while to imprison Crehonerex III, then taken over for Government use, having been stripped of its "friperies". During the Third Empire, it was renovated, and used again as a local government centre, and army base to keep an eye on the now closed city of Atlantis. By the time of the Fourth Empire, after 751, it was again refurbished, and eventually made into a tourist attraction as a museum of Atlantean history.

3. The Imperial Palace in Cennatlantis was constructed at the same time as many other government buildings were put up in the city, which was soon destined to become the capital city of the Empire. Atlanicerex oversaw the building, which was placed right in the centre of the new city – this Emperor was much more taken with urban life than some of his predecessors and successors. In style, it was restrainedly Romantic, its outstanding feature being its swaying, curved design. The central part of the building still had two arms or wings, but these now stretched out in this curved way, surmounted by domes, and between them nestled smaller, curved, single-storey buildings, completely separate. The main central section was raised high, and consisted of three stories, while the main wings had two. The whole edifice was surrounded by natural woodland and parkland. The building was not liked by later Emperors, who preferred to live away from city centres, and frequently preferred to reside in large country houses, rather than in Atlanicerex's Palace. Thildo II, as we shall see, built a new Palace in the country, and Ruthopheax I and II did the same in Third Empire times. Atlanicerex's Palace was in any case damaged by the Republicans after 590, and during the Third Empire, was patched up, and used as a "town-house" by members of the Imperial family. It was much more seriously damaged, along with many other government buildings, during the siege of Cennatlantis in 745-6, and the uprising of 750. Much of it was thereafter demolished.
4. Thildo II built a fourth great Palace in the country near Gentis after 557. As befitted this megalomaniac man, it was a wildly extravagant affair, in the most extreme Romantic style. It dominated the local countryside, and its main feature was the plethora of pointed domes, of all colours and finishes, which seemed to float above the intricately decorated main buildings. Its interior was intended to be filled with furniture of the most modern designs, but Thildo was overthrown before much of this could be finished. The outside was still incomplete, too, as were the intended landscaped grounds, but the next Emperor, Meison I, refused to live in this Palace, or do anything much more to it. It was left to his successor, Crehonerex III, to lavish more money on the palace, and bring it nearer to its originally envisaged completion. In this turbulent period of the Empire's history, Crehonerex's disbursement of large funds of public money on this extravagant building upset and angered many of those opposed to his style of government. It is not, therefore, surprising, that as soon as the Empire was overthrown, and this palace fell into republican hands, it was eagerly looted and completely demolished.

2. A CONTEMPORARY'S VIEW OF THE CITY OF ATLANTIS IN 542

[There follows a description of Atlantis, as included in a longer letter sent by one Fulgon Puainos to his wife and family in 542. Fulgon had travelled to Atlantis for the first time in 542 from his home town of Yemdir, in the Province of Yallandix Thissaindix, in order to attend the annual interviews and examination of candidates from Regional Councils for entry as a Councilman in the Great Council. Fulgon apparently spent several weeks in Atlantis, as after he was successfully nominated as a Councilman, he had to find somewhere in the city for his family to live. As was often the case in the romantic period, the first person was used as here translated, rather than the classical usage of the third person throughout. Occasional editorial comments have been added in brackets.]

I shall now give you my first impressions of this city, which has overwhelmed me with its size and grandeur. Where shall I begin? I'll start at the seafront, by the harbour. If I look out to sea here, with my back to the city, I have in front of me the great harbour, teeming with all sizes of boats and cargoes – people as well. Some way out to sea is Atlano Mandegio (Atlantis island), which I believe is occupied by religious communities. To the south, the shore curves outwards, but is full of buildings of all sorts, almost as far the eye can see. The main one there, about 2 miles from where I am supposed to be standing now, is the University of Atlantis, which was founded by the Great Atlaniphon himself. (The Great Atlaniphon always refers to Atlaniphon I).

I'll turn to my right now, facing northwards up the coast, and again I see a mile or more of old houses, all looking as though they were built in the First Empire. (These were the original houses owned by the earliest nobility of the First Empire, now long since taken over and divided up by lower class people). In the distance I see a green and wooded hill looming over the breakers of the water, and inland a little way, out of sight here, but previously visited by myself and other colleagues, is the old Palace, with its large pleasure-grounds stretching inland.

Now I'll turn right round, and pretend to walk eastwards into the town. I first walk through the oldest part of the town, with small stone or wood built houses, a market, and some ancient temples, and a small, half-ruined castle on a hill. After half a mile, the city opens out, and becomes much grander and wider. I now see monuments, statues, temples, and large houses, all of stone or marble, but still somehow antique in appearance. In fact I know that all this area is still the old city, as it was in the First Empire, although quite a few of the oldest buildings have since been knocked down, and rebuilt more recently. Particularly impressive is the massive statue of the Great Atlaniphon, erected by Atlaniphon II in 420. The main road now splits into two, and first I shall take the Marossaraita, which eventually leads all the way north to Marossan. I see the Great Library of Siphirix ahead, which has been recently refurbished, and looks from the outside like the most modern building. Then to the left, also thanks to Siphirix, is the Great Council edifice itself, where I hope I shall soon be sitting – if only I have passed the tests I took yesterday! This is a strange building to look at – though very impressive, of course -, because the oldest part, now the Council of Nobles, looks small and quaint beside the huge block of the Great Council itself. The part that is now the Council of Nobles was in fact the Great Council in Siphirix's time, but more recently, it became too cramped, and the magnificent new building was put up by the Great Atlaniphon.

I must stopping going on like this about the Council – anyone would think I was already a member of it, and showing off my knowledge of its history to some new candidate or tourist! Further on up the Marossaraita I reach the huge houses of the nobility, with their great gardens. I think that these are not generally lived in by the real old nobility, who have moved out to estates in the east of the Empire, and of course we are seeing a number of them appearing even in our own Province of Yall Thiss now. These older houses are actually now in the hands of Class 3s like ourselves, though much better off than we are at present, of course! (Some were also occupied by the "nouveaux riches and parvenus" Class 1 and 2s, though most of these preferred country estates further east in Atlantis and Atlantidieh Provinces). Here also is the statue of Atlaniphon III, put up by the Emperor. Thildo I.

I'll now retrace my steps, and take the road which leads out of Atlantis to the east, the Cennraita. Again I approach a quarter of noble old houses, which were formerly lived in by the well-off, but are now occupied by ordinary people like ourselves. I think this might be a good area for me to find a house for us – oh, if I pass my exams, I mean! This area is overlooked to the south by a large fort, and to the north by Cao-Melion's Memorial to the casualties of the Great Helvran War – it is a massive stone oblong, with a frieze of simply-carved Atlantean soldiers of that period defeating their Helvran enemies. It is quite worn away in parts, unfortunately. Further up the road, which climbs gradually up a hill, the road is dominated by the statue to Atlaniphon II, which, according to what I read on it, was put up only recently, by the Emperor Atlanicerex. It is the biggest of all the statues I have seen, showing the Emperor on military uniform and pointing eastwards, no doubt symbolising his war against the Ughans. I notice that there are garlands around this statue, and an old man there told me that they were placed there by the citizens of Atlantis at the end of our recent war with the Ughans. I think our present Emperor has certainly matched the achievements of Atlaniphon in the wars, and also feel it would have been more appropriate if he had put up such a statue, not Atlanicerex. (Here Fulgon is referring to the Third Ughan War of 536-9; he also is expressing some antipathy to Atlanicerex, who was of course defeated in the Civil War by the Emperor Crehonerex I, still on the throne in 542). On I walk, passing ancient temples and more houses, until I arrive at the massive defensive wall recently put up round Atlantis, as so many other towns. If I pass through the gate, I see the open countryside beyond, though to my left, houses are already in evidence outside the wall. At this rate, a new wall will have to be built soon, to enclose these new buildings. (As indeed happened in the 560s).

I must return to the city now, and end my imaginary wanderings. I hope my words have given you all some idea of what Atlantis looks like. It is the of course the biggest town in the whole Empire, although I suppose Cennatlantis may eventually overtake it, as that is where the Emperor and the government spend more and more of their time. Even the Council has its autumn sittings there, of course...

"THE EXECUTION OF CREHONEREX"

[ This is part of a history of the Republic/Empire period, written in secret between 588 and 625. It includes a number of eye-witness accounts by the writer, including this one of the death of Crehonerex. The writer was a mild reformer, but was shocked by the emperor's execution. Note that the original was written, as usual in prose of this period, in the third person throughout. Editorial comments are in square brackets].

The imprisoned Crehonerex remained a bone of contention during these years [588-589]. The Republicans used him as a hostage in their occasional negotiations with Lingon and the Imperialists. But in January 590, an attempt was made by his family and other Imperialists to free him with a powerful raid on the palace where he was being held near Atlantis, combined with a rising by Imperialist sympathisers. It very nearly succeeded, and created panic in Atlantis. I myself vividly remember people running through the streets that evening crying " The soldiers are here! Lingon is in Atlantis. Fly! Fly!"

As a result, Crehonerex was placed in more secure and much less comfortable confinement within the old Imperial Palace inside Atlantis itself. Pranonni and the more extreme Republicans now began to insist that Crehonerex, along with those leading Imperialists captured in the raid, and other great nobles [Class 1s] caught behind Republican lines over the last year should be tried and executed, unless they publicly renounced their Imperialist opinions and their Class privileges.. If they did so, they would be made humble workers, or infantrymen in the army. So during 590 a stream of captured aristocrats were forced to publicly admit their guilt, recant all their earlier beliefs, lose nearly all their possessions, and become humble working or fighting men or women. ( Both men and women went through this procedure). They were made to stand on a dais in the great Hall of Justice of Atlantis, which was filled to capacity with onlookers. They were told to call out their answers in a loud voice so that all the spectators could hear. I remember how some of them, cringing away from their questioners, muttered their confessions almost inaudibly. The watching crowd roared out that it could not hear, and the nobleman had to repeat his words, shouting them out so that all could hear. Some proudly refused to say anything, or even called out "No", or "I am not guilty of anything! These men or women were then given an almost instant trial, lasting about two minutes and always declared guilty. Later they were executed by decapitation in public.

Pranonni insisted that Crehonerex and the few courtiers captured with him should be treated the same way. Crehonerex and the others were put on public display in November, arraigned and harangued for their crimes, and asked if they regretted them and wished to live as humble citizens in future. Crehonerex tried to bargain, and also demanded to see his family under safe conduct. The moderate Republicans were still unwilling to see Crehonerex executed and asked that he should be sent far away into exile. But Pranonni insisted the Emperor was no different to any other citizen before the law. Finally, asked for a straight "Yes" or "No", Crehonerex replied "No, but..."... At this he was cut off, and sentenced to death. Told to leave court, he and some courtiers struggled and tried to escape. Republican guards laid about them and killed two prisoners, wounding Crehonerex in the arm. Crehonerex was now sent to the ordinary prison in Atlantis, to await his execution on January 1st 591. During December, several riots by moderate Republicans and secret Imperialists took place in Atlantis and other towns. These were put down within deliberate severity, and those arrested were badly beaten. Others were sent for execution. In Cennatlantis, Lingon was asked to warn the Republicans that if the Emperor were executed, he would refuse quarter to any Republicans captured in battle. But Lingon never announced this, and let Crehonerex go to his death with scarcely a word of complaint. It was said at the time, probably truly, that this was because he, Lingon, wanted to become Emperor, as indeed he did after the execution.

Thus it was that in the cold, damp morning of January 1st 591, I saw the last Emperor of the Second Empire taken from prison, and amid taunts and jeers, forced to walk, in shabby and thin clothes, and with his arm in a sling, through the centre of Atlantis to the place of execution. He tried to speak before he was killed, but was gagged immediately. After his death, his body was cut up and buried secretly in six different places outside Atlantis. A final attempt to rescue him, by a seaborne raid on the coast, arrived a day too late, due to contrary winds. The raiders were all captured or killed within two hours of landing from their ship.

A Description of the Atlantean Empire

LASSO NAHUSSE, THAISSON BOURBRONNA AND FELLA THULPAS

The purpose of this Interlude is to give a brief description of the main areas of the Atlantean Empire, as much from the social point of view as from a description of the natural features of the landscape. Throughout the epochs, men and women travelled throughout the Empire, and sometimes beyond its borders, purely out of personal interest, though often also in order to write of their experiences. A record of these travellers' reports begins for us in the Second Empire, in 456, but the most renowned account was produced by Lasso Nahusse in 552.

Nahusse, who worked for the Provincial Government of Atlantis, was well-known for his love of travel and interest in Atlantean antiquities. He was dispatched by the Emperor Crehonorex I in 542 in order to produce a comprehensive and up-to-date account of the "state of the Empire for the edification of men who governed". He was also to write about more sensitive, political matters for the eyes of the Emperor only – this section was never published. He travelled for five years along the major roads from Atlantis, north to Eliossie, east to the borders of Ughrieh, and south to Helvrieh and Manralia. By the time he returned to Atlantis, Crehonorex II was in power. Nahusse produced his account in 552, and when printing was permitted in the Empire some decades later, it became a best-seller, and the most famous of all Second Empire travellers' reports, though written in the third person, as was traditional in this period.

So far as this Interlude is concerned, however, the bulk of the story will belong to a writer of the Third Empire, Thaisson Bourbronna. Bourbronna was a prosperous and independent Squire from Chalcrieh (as his name suggests), who was fascinated by history, and looked upon Nahusse as his model. By this period it was common for Squires and their families, as well as younger sons with their tutors, to travel round the Empire as part of their education (rather like the eighteenth century "Grand Tour" in Europe). Bourbronna frequently compared his experiences with the earlier writer, and in the extracts to follow, we shall from time to time use Nahusse's account to cover areas or matters missed by Bourbronna. The latter travelled between 708 and 713 on four expeditions, all starting in Cennatlantis. Like his predecessor, he moved along main roads for most of the time, but was more willing to take diversions into the countryside to visit places of interest. He went to Atlantis and north to Eliossie; east and south-east through the Keltish lands; up the east of the Chalcran Lakes to Runnates and on to the river Gestes, and south down it. He also travelled south-east to Razira, and from Atlantis south across the Helvengio and down the Coastal City States. He wrote up and published his account as a personal travelogue after 716, and it became one of the most popular travel books of the period.

During the Fourth Empire, travelling through the Empire became much more common for everyone, and a real tourist trade began. Travel writers moved deliberately off the beaten track – the main roads and well-known cities and landmarks-, and also travelled more frequently to foreign countries and across the seas. Traditional travel-writing about places within the Empire saw something of a resurgence after the 830s, as writers concentrated on the history of certain areas throughout the Empire and earlier. But the great growth in urbanisation and industrialisation, as well as the spread of railways, had in fact altered the landscape for ever, and many places were, by the 800s, very different to what they had appeared when earlier travellers had seen them. Furthermore, great wars (such as the Continental War), and upheavals (as the time of the Tyrants), had left their own new legacy of battlefields to visit, and monuments to admire, as well as the destruction of buildings and earlier sites of interest. Fella Thulpas, who travelled across the Empire between 852 and 855, aimed to cover both the historical importance of and changes to a series of sites, as well as to describe the great changes wrought elsewhere by industry over the past century.

Fella Thulpas was of course a woman, and had been married to a businessman until his early death at the age of 45. She had already written a few books, both fiction and history, but now decided to seize her opportunity, travel the Empire, and write it all up afterwards. Her great book, finally published in 861, was both an accurate historically slanted description of a specific number of places throughout the Empire, and an impressionistic account of her experiences throughout her travels. She travelled in a great circle from Atlantis, first to Numidis and east along the Helvran coast to Vailat. Then, a bit later, back to Cennatlantis and up the west of the Lakes to Buresso. Finally she moved north into Kelt lands, now part of Skallandieh, which had only recently been at war with Atlantis. She moved west into Marossan, went down the length of Yciel Atlantis and finally returned to Atlantis by sea.

We shall make use of Thulpas' writings as additions to the central core of Bourbronna's, to describe developments which took place after the time of the Third Empire. After Thulpas herself, there is little more to tell. Travel of any sort virtually ceased after 870, when the Final Wars began, and fighting thereafter preoccupied all Atlanteans until the end of the Empire twenty years later.

There now follow the words of the travellers themselves. The passages below are mere extracts from their writings, which have been joined together by the editor, without indicating passages omitted, to make a short description of as much of the Empire as possible. All the words are original, unless otherwise noted.

THE ROAD WEST: THE YELTRATA AND CENNRATA

"The Yeltrata ("Old Road") extends all the way from Cennatlantis to Atlantis, via Gentes, the Lillerunix and Yeldis; I, however, moved off this road at Gentes, travelled north on the road alongside the river Rollepp, and joined the Cennrata to Atlantis at Ancahouth. This was partly because my great predecessor, Nahusse, has already told his tale of the Yeltrata, but did not mention the Cennrata. The road travels westwards, initially within a very constricted landscape, with rivers to north and south, and the foothills of the Meilox Mountains frowning to the south-west. The whole area up to the river Rollepp was of course originally divided up into the little city-states of the Atlantids, and even now it strikes the traveller as having a different character to the original Atlantean lands. It is, though, thoroughly "Atlanticised" now, and all trace of the old Atlantis dialect seems to have disappeared – though Nahusse states that in his time, it was still to be heard in country areas. It is a largely pastoral landscape around Failbloua and Yalgor, full of gently rolling downs, sheep and cattle, and villages which were once, 500 years ago, proud and independent towns.

"The biggest towns now are all on the Rollepp – Gentes, Tilrase and Ancahouth: the first two being "closed cities". [Ruthopheax I's decree walling in cities which had been Republican supporters].... Much of the open land both east and west of Tilrase was landscaped by the great men of the Second Empire for entertainments – theatrical performances in the countryside. Such plays and musical festivals are frequently mentioned by Nahusse, and it is a pity that they ceased after the Revolution and have never been taken up again. Nowadays we have the Squires' hunting courses, which require different sorts of landscapes. These cover vast distances, and are designed for ease of chasing and hunting, rather than for artistic effect. There has to be plenty of areas which are suitable for the animals which are being chased; this included human criminals, as well, up till very recently.

"As I move north from Tilrase, around which much industry seems to be clustering, the land grows becomes more hemmed in, hillier and more afforested. At Ancahouth, I join the "Cennrata" to Atlantis via Fourtis: this is the oldest road which connect Atlantis and Atlantidieh with the Chalcran states. The part of the Province of Atlantis between the rivers Rollepp and Bore was formerly thickly wooded, and even now the large woods of the Borfembe ("Large wood") in the north, and the "Failfembe" ("Green wood") to the south survive.

( Nahusse: These woods, stretching for miles from the east bank of the Bore, were once seen as dark and sinister places, and many religious stories and children's fairy-tales, have these forests as their background. In fact, some of the stories are completely pagan, and in the early years of the last Empire, the priests of the Official Religion saw it as their duty to counteract the influence of these tales. They did this by felling great circles in the woods, and in these clearings, built open-air or constructed churches. In other places, they set up statues of the great heroes of the Religion to cast their beneficent aura over the dark woods all around. Many of these figures remain as interesting examples of the faith and credulity of our forefathers). (Thulpas: Fourtis and the "Borfembe" is the site of two of the most significant battles of Atlantean history. The Battle of Fourtis, in 588, witnessed the rout of the Imperialist forces under General Lingon by the rebels (later the Republicans), while in 746, the Atlantean Army held off and decisively beat the Skalland invasion of Atlantis at the Battle of the Borfembe. The magnificent monument to this battle stands on the strategic hill overlooking the town of Duiccul on the river Ghesse.)

"Crossing the Bore at Fourtis, the "Cennrata" runs straight south-westwards to Atlantis, through Failrun and across the little river Puster. All this area is the heartland of Atlantis, indeed of that region traditionally called North Atlantis, and which is contrasted with the rest of The Province. It is claimed that before the days of the Empire, the "southern" Atlanteans conquered the city of Atlantis and this whole northern area, and forced on them their rule and their speech, which is essentially our present-day language. As I have already mentioned with regard to the dialect of the Atlantids, some 300 years, a distinctive North Atlantean dialect was still spoken in these parts, at least in country areas, but this has now completely died out.

"We now approach the city of Atlantis, and without actually entering it, I shall move on to the "Atlanrata", which goes north from the city.

THE ROAD NORTH: THE ATLANRATA AND MAROSSARAITA

"This great road, the "Atlanrata", first constructed and extended in the third century goes northwards via Sulosis to Ghestis, and southwards via Ygohe as far as Celingé. It is called a "rata", like the Cennrata going eastwards, but this in the older language meant "road", rather than just "way", as now. In more recent roads, we find the word "raita", as in the Raziraraita and the Marossaraita. Leaving the city, I passed the former estates of the great noblemen of the First and early Second Empires. These were broken up by the Republicans after the Revolution, and many were divided up amongst the lower Classes. Some mansions survive, but no noblemen of this Empire would wish to live so close to Atlantis out of choice. However, the great Palace built by Atlaniphon III, which lies a little way east of our road, some eight miles out of the city, is now occupied by the Provincial Government of Yeldatlantis. (Thulpas adds: (Here) there stands the great monument to the victory of the Atlanteans over the invading army of the Skallands at the Battle of Atlantis on June 5th, 746. This was the nearest any foreign army had ever come to the city of Atlantis, not excepting the Helvran War.)

"Our road skirts the seaward flank of the Huainarun, the "heavenly hills", and arrives at the great port of Sulosis. This has been the main base of our navy in this area since the Emperor Ruthopheax I. It is very different now to the small fishing and passenger terminus described by Nahusse 170 years ago. The road now turns east to cross the river Bore. This is a wide and fast-flowing waterway where it enters the sea, and the first main bridge over it is at Ghestis, 35 miles inland. As I approached this town, I could see to my right the hills and woods of the Pusseal ("Little wood"). In olden days, this was thick and impenetrable, and the subject of many ghostly folktales, but some of it has now been felled for shipbuilding. (Thulpas: Both the Pusseal and the Borfembe (woods) are now but sad skeletons of their former glory. The wood needed for industry and shipbuilding has been ruthlessly stripped from these forests. I have not seen the Pusseal myself, but I know that what Bourbronna described as already beginning in his time, has now gone so far as to reduce it to two or three small plantations.) Ghestis is relatively small town, but famous for having the oldest university in the Empire. It existed as a place of learning for noblemen before the foundation of the First Empire, and Emperor Carel I named it the Imperial University. Since the fall of the second Empire, it has lost the noble "cachet" it once had, and is now a centre for scholars from all over the Empire.

"Across the river Bore, the road changes to the "Marossaraita", which was built in the fourth century to link up with the newly acquired Marossan Provinces. Between the rivers Bore and Noilafa (also called the Rollepp further south in Atlantean parts), the landscape is open and hilly. The road keeps well away from the coast, which here is mostly precipitously steep, with great cliffs towering over the ocean. The traditional border with our Province of Marossan crossed these hills midway between the two rivers, but since the victories of the great Ruthopheax, the border has been pushed back north to the Noilafa, on the other side of which is the state of Anauren. At present this country is on reasonably friendly terms with Atlantis, and I shall pass through this area, which recently and for so long was one of our Provinces, in order to reach Yciel Atlantis.

"Just south of the border, another road branches off to the right, the "Marossayaita", which takes you to Anetako ("yaita" is of course the Marossan word for "road", our "raita"). Over the Noilafa, the Marossaraita goes back to the coast, the Marossa Liranca, and hugs it northwards over the river Sulophaio to Leiyola, the old Provincial capital, and also the capital city of Anauren. To my right, throughout this part of the journey, I can see the tall peaks of the Netaka Mountains and the Noilafamona, which completely cut off the inner part of the Province (as was). Though not exceptionally high, some parts are often covered in snow; the only way through them is via one or two passes – the Netaka and Noilafa Buoumix. As may be imagined, these were of great strategic importance to armies in the distant past, and were held against the nomadic invaders as recently as the early part of the last century. (Thulpas: Bourbronna speaks naively of the mountains and passes of Anauren/Marossan being strategic points in the distant past; how could he have known of the bitter fighting which was to take place against the Skallands in this area within a few years of his death in 741, and again just a few years ago in the Great Northern War.)

"This whole area around Leiyola is rich in antiquities and remains of the great Marossan Empire, which flourished here many centuries ago. The road to Leiyola is fringed with broken stone ruins, and outside the present city of Leiyola, are the vast remnants of the old Marossan capital, surrounded by a city-wall still over 20 feet high in parts. Ruinous though it is, it still instills a feeling of awe, with its massive block-like structures, of every geometrical style imaginable. This contrasts vividly with the typical building-style of the more recent Lio-Marossans and Phonerians, who have always constructed in cool, rectangular, neat shapes, using stone columns and pillars. Modern Leiyola has long been a city of scholarship, as well as a port. The port seems to be being greatly enlarged at present, although I was not allowed to visit parts of it. (Thulpas: The port of Leiyola became the base for the great Anauren navy of the Continental War. The whole lower reaches of the river Sulophaio were to be dedicated to shipbuilding in this period, and of course more recently the whole area has become a tremendous industrial basin, for ironworking, shipbuilding and textile-making.)

"The Marossaraita continues right up to the border with our Province of Yciel Atlantis, and thanks to my documents from the government at Cennatlantis, and the friendship between our two countries, in the face of the threats by the Skallands, I was able to cross directly into Yciel Atlantis. I marvelled at the Upheril Mountains, and our forts along it, which have ever provided such a wonderful natural defence of this peninsula from any would-be invader. The road crawls along the north coast here, round the edge of the foothills. It then wanders to and fro across this rocky land, and I pass in turn through Uphorolo, Nerilo, Atalaso, Nundler and Phonero. These little towns, all built on original Phonerian foundations, are in some ways hardly "Atlanticised" at all. Most of them are on the coast, and gain their livelihood from the sea – the Phonerians continue their long tradition of fishing and trading on the ocean. At the western end of this strangely shaped piece of land, the land becomes much flatter and more liable to flooding, and great lakes lie scattered across its interior. The great bay across which Yciel Atlantis stretches like an arm and a hand with fingers flexed, the Marossa Liranca, is full of islands, and nowhere do they cluster so closely to the land than south and east of Phonero, and the port and naval base of Achosil, on its own island. I was able to stand on the land opposite Achosil, just a few miles to the north, and watch the great sailing-ships of our navy manoeuvring in and around these "Achosil Mandengix".

"To the west, there is another, slightly less narrow channel, the "Phonerianix Lirilix", across which I had to sail to reach the huge island of Phonaria. It really feels like the end of the world, when you arrive here. It has what seems like just a thin veneer of Atlantean civilisation – a few towns and villages, connected by rather primitive roads. I travelled west across the river Snazuephue to Netherpand. Beyond that our dominion peters out, with a final series of lookouts and forts on the massive mountain of Suchamoundo. This whole part of the island lives from pastoral pursuits, cattle and sheep, and fish from the seas. Wood is also gathered from the great forests of the interior, and silver and precious metals can also be mined here. The language and names of the geographical features in this further part of Phonaria are strange, though also pleasing, to our ears, but with no connection to our own tongues. I was told of the towns of Nanosto and Anarost to the north and south, and the mountain of Aihoroto to the north-west. I had come to the end of my northern journey, on the extremity of empire. It was now time for me to return to Anauren, and continue my journey back to Cennatlantis via a long diversion through the Keltish lands. (Thulpas: This western part of Phonaria was earlier under the influence of Quendelie, and the language here was Quendelien. Quendelie later directly took over this area, and eventually the whole of Phonaria, with the consent of Atlantis).

THE ROAD NORTH-EAST: THE LANDS OF THE KELTS

I begin this new part of my travels by returning to the junction of the Marossaraita and the Marossayaita, south of the river Noilafa. I set off north-eastwards on this road, built largely on the basis of a Lio-Marossan road. In fact it was originally laid down centuries ago by that mysterious Marossan Empire which stretched across the territories of present-day Anauren, the Kelts and much of the centre of the Atlantean Empire. As I move further eastwards I shall also see many impressive ruins from this distant past. After recrossing the river Noilafa, the land grows much hillier, and the Netaka Mountains come into view ahead. The Marossayaita goes through the Noilafa Pass, at the centre of which is the town of Latala. Beyond this pass, the land becomes flatter again, and I enter what is really a vast plain, which is almost completely surrounded by geographical obstacles. To the north and east is the river Ruphaio, as well as the Cresskor and Gedandolix mountains; to the south is the Decanda Runix, separating us here from Atlantis and Atlantidieh; and to the west are the Netaka Mountains, which I have just crossed. However, this plain is by no means flat, and contains many areas of low hills and downs.

The river Ruphaio in the Cresskor Mountains

After about sixty miles, I reach Runcairn, which is at the junction of the Marossayaita and another road which passes southwards through the Decanda Runix to Ancahouth, and northwards to Marossulo on the Ruphaio. Another sixty miles or so takes me to Cairtan, the capital of the Province of "Naokeltanieh", and the edges of the great Cresskor Mountains. As the names of the towns and geographical features from here onwards indicate, I am now entering lands long inhabited by the Kelts, specifically here the West Kelts. We may note the frequent occurrence of the word "tan", meaning "town", of "cairn" meaning "hill", or "dun", which is a "mountain pass". It is only really as I travel through the Cressdun pass in the Cresskor Mountains, that the landscape and towns and villages appear fully Keltish, and I hear this ancient language being spoken all around me. The Kelts themselves traditionally built using wood, and in the more remote towns and the villages, these wooden buildings are everywhere to be seen, all ornamented with fanciful shapes and designs. Elsewhere, too, the landscape is dotted with their strange, tribal and religious symbols. Many of these are of stone, and consist of great pillars or "menhirs", and sometimes of huge altars of stone, where they sometimes still congregate to practice their mysterious religion, each village led by its priest, or "Taigor". The Kelts are also great miners, and many a pintur (or mine) was visible during my travels hereabouts. But intermingled with these relatively modern remains are those of the ancient Marossans, with their vast geometrical stone ruins, and also their paved roads, now usually overgrown and broken up, and seeming to run from nowhere to nowhere. My "Marossayaita" strictly ended at Cairtan, but the road I am now following through the mountains to Keltanipand, though rebuilt by our own Emperors, is in parts on a Marossan basis, and is usually also called the "Marossayaita".

When I have passed through the Cresskor Ugholix, I reach the town of Mountan, set in the middle of the lower land between the Cresskor to the west, and the great mountain ranges of the North Kelts to the north-east, the Dorkor and the Dachdol. Keltanipand is the military garrison town of this whole region, and is completely new, by which I mean it was built only about 300 years ago during the Second Empire. This area is populated by North Kelts, but the main region for this people is to the north, in the even more mountainous area of the Nundor, and the towns of Caddis, Keltanis and Tar-ar-Dun. This was promised to the Kelts as an independent and self-governing area by Ruthopheax I, with which neither the Atlanteans nor any other nation would interfere, although it was once part of our Empire. However, over the past few years, reports have reached us that army units of both Skallandieh and Gestskallandieh have entered this area. I have been able to partially verify this myself, as my request to visit at least Keltanis was rejected by the military authorities here in Keltanipand. They have told me that their intelligence has proved that the Skallands now occupy this area, and it would be much too dangerous for me to cross the border. (Nahusse: Bourbonna was right in his suspicions: the Northern Empires did quietly take over the North Kelts after 708, and their so-called "independent" kingdom was snuffed out. Never again did Atlantis hold any sway over this northernmost area, though of course all the West Kelts and many of the more southerly North Kelts continued to live within the boundaries of the Fourth Empire Province of Naokeltan, and with considerable autonomy. After the ravages of the Tyrants, and the attacks across our borders by the Northern Empires at that time, our Empire lost control over nearly all of the North Kelts – such as had survived the slaughter of the Tyrants.)

So I turn south and pass through a number of towns, whose names continue to betray their Keltish origins: Caddan, Gedancairn. After that, the land becomes flatter as I make my way to Buresso, famous for its university and library. I now move southwards towards the western side of the Great Lakes, with the great Taigeheill Forest on my right. (There is a great argument amongst scholars as to the meaning of this strange word, which means nothing in any known language. Some say it is ancient Marossan, but we do not know its meaning. [Nahusse: We know now that Bourbronna was correct in his guess that Taigeheill was originally Marossan. It is formed from two words "Toigh" ("great") and "eill" ("wood"); these were Atlanticised as "Taigeheill"]). The road leaves Runnates to the east, but I cannot forbear a brief diversion to see this famous town. Runnates was, of course, the capital of the old Province of Chalcrieh II, but before that it was the capital of one of the major Chalcran states, before they were all conquered by the Atlanteans. It always had a university, as it still has, and is full of interesting and exuberant Chalcran architecture. Most notably, it contains the great Military Academy, set up by Atlaniphon II in 428, the training-ground of our officers ever since and the pride of the Empire. (Nahusse: Runnates was also the scene of the climactic battle against the Ughans in 746, at which their invasion of the Atlantean Empire was finally halted. Like others of my contemporaries, I find it almost impossible to visit Runnates during my travels. It was so tarnished by being made the headquarters of the genocidal campaigns against the Kelts and others by the Tyrants, that any pride we Atlanteans can feel in its history cannot survive.)

I pass on to Encetes, at the north-west corner of Lake Chalcris. This town was originally a Chalcran fort, which was contested and frequently changed hands between Chalcrans and Atlantids, until its final capture by the Atlanteans. It became well-known in the 500s as the centre of the wargames area, which extended to the south-west of the town. These wargames were particularly useful for training the young army officers based at Runnates. From here a road goes down Lake Chalcris through Meisange to Gasirotto. This great fortress has guarded the passage between Lakes Chalcris and Oncia since time immemorial. My way passes between the Lakes here, and on the far side I make my way back, at long last, to Cennatlantis.

THE ROAD EAST: THE CHALCRAITA

My journey east from Cennatlantis started with the road from the capital city up to Yellis; at this point I joined the "Chalcraita", which actually starts at Gasirotto, where the "Cennrata" ends, and runs due east via Yellis to Dravizzi to Pueggathis on the river Gestes. I first crossed the river Dodolla, the banks of which are studded by forts to protect the capital city from attack from the east. The land just here is very flat, but there are a couple of isolated hills nearby; climbing one of these, I could see, away to the south-east, 30 or 40 miles, the blue waters of Lake Trannolla. Where the river Dodolla joins the end of this lake, close to the junction of two other rivers, the Cresslepp and the Burtounna, there is a mass of swaps and stagnant pools, the "Trannolla Thounca". Just a few years ago, a major effort was begun to drain these, and I know that this is now well underway, with the construction of a canal down the Burtounna. (Thulpas: The road from Vailat to Cennatlantis, which crosses the rivers Cresslepp, was not built till after 760. Before 700, the "Trannolla Thounca", a great stretch of marshes and swamps, almost blocked off access to Cennatlantis from the south. The swamps were largely drained after 700, and a canal built, but during the Great Continental War, the Basquecs threatened to attack Cennatlantis from this direction. The whole area was again flooded as a protection.)

After forty miles or so, I reach some more hills on both sides of the road, and further on, the small town of Snattarona. There are old forts on these hills, and this area is of course well-known as the battlefield of the (First) Battle of Snattarona, in the Civil War of 524-526, when the Emperor Atlanicerex defeated a rebel army under Cencos. I climb the hills to the east to see the route taken by the enveloping detachment of Atlanicerex's army, and there, on top of the highest point of the hill, is the great memorial to the losses of the Civil War as a whole, built by Crehonerex II in 529. It is in the form of two great columns, joined by a lower wall with a frieze depicting fighting men of the Civil War period. All around here, and on the hills to the north as well, are the remains of trenches and forts from the 590s and later, as this was the front-line between the Imperialists and Republicans for many years. (During the Great Continental War, the battle of 525 was overshadowed in 745 and 747 by two more much bigger clashes in the same area between the Atlanteans and Basquecs.)

As I move north and join the minor road from Gilliso to Yellis, I have to admire the remains of Chalcran architecture in many small towns or even villages along the way. The Chalcrans, before they were all finally conquered in the reign of Ruthoyon II, were great builders, and their buildings, of stone or sometimes stone and wood, are everywhere to be seen, grand and elaborate, and covered in decoration and friezes. Everywhere to be seen, too, are fortresses from this period, many abandoned and ruined in the middle of the countryside, but others taken over and improved by ourselves when they are in useful strategic positions. To my left stretches the great Balbemme wood, formerly much larger, and the scene of many conflicts between Chalcran states in the early 300s.

Just before Yellis, I joined the wide Chalcraita, originally a Chalcran road. This crosses the river Burastoura, and then ascends the high range of hills called the Croiden Mountains. These are not really mountains, though some peaks are virtually inaccessible. They have been used as defensive positions by the Chalcrans, and subsequently the Atlanteans, for hundreds of years. The tops of them are dotted with fortifications and entrenchments of every period. The fortress town of Dravizzi, on the Chalcraita, used to guard the Chalcran frontier against the Dravideans in olden times, and was also often at loggerheads with the Chalcran town on the site of what is now Atlandravizzi, further south. Dravizzi withstood an Ughan siege during the Third Ughan War, and its fortifications have now been brought up to date to defend against attacks with artillery. Its neighbour to the south, Atlandravizzi, was rechristened and rebuilt by the Atlanteans in the 350s, and has been rebuilt and improved in parallel with Dravizzi. Unlike Dravizzi, it is also a thriving civilian town, and the administrative centre for Chalcrieh.

The Chalcraita crosses the river Thyggis at Bratatinnu, scene of another battle of the Ughan War, and runs east to Pueggathis. This, of course, is one of the many strong forts on the river Gestes, defending our Empire against attack from the Ughans. On the approach to the town, there still survives one of Atlaniphon I's great "edge of Empire" monuments, which he and some of his successors put up all round the frontiers of our Empire. Atlaniphon I erected several of these along the river Gestes, as well as within the north-west of Ughrieh, and in the Raziran Mountains. Others were put up in later times on the borders of Eliossie, in the Keltish lands and in Th. Thiss. Over the years, enemy invasions and civil wars saw some of these damaged or destroyed, but this one outside Pueggathis remains almost intact. Like most of the earliest monuments, it is in the form of a gigantic, narrow stone triangle, which was of course the ancient symbol for the Official Religion during the First Empire – "Tuathule" ("South Wind"). It was quite plain, except for some religious symbolism, and inscriptions lauding the feats of our Army at that time, and the glory of the Emperor. Later monuments, erected by Atlaniphon III and Crehonerex III, in particular, became more elaborate, and were often designed in the shape of great geometrical figures – oblongs, squares, obelisks - , and covered with carvings and inscriptions.

One of the later, more elaborate edge of Empire monuments in the form of three triangles, set up by Crehonerex III in Razira.

(Thulpas: The invasions of the Ughans and Basquecs during the Continental War, and the more recent advances of the Rabarrans south of the Helvengio, not to mention the mindless vandalism of the Nihilists and the Tyrants, have since deliberately overturned or ruined many of these monuments. The early one outside Pueggathis, for example, was not much harmed by the invading Ughans in the 740s, but was badly smashed up by the Tyrants in the 810s. This, like many of the others, has been restored by the present Emperor to its former grandeur.)

THE ROAD SOUTH-EAST: THE RAZIRARAITA

My next journey takes me south-east out of Cennatlantis, on the road to Vulcanipand. The road skirts the marshes of the "Grolldaung", which, as I mentioned earlier, are being drained, and leads me round the south of Lake Trannolla. I pass along the edges of the low hills, which are the source of the rivers Burtounna and Helvenslepp, which run respectively north into the Lake and south into the Helvengio at Broding. I enter here into the ancient homelands of the "Pastoral Folk", the Province which during the Second Empire used to be called "Meistayieh". It is still quite a pastoral area, full of low rolling hills, and full of cattle and sheep. The north of this area, along the shores of Lake Trannolla, was the favoured area for the country homes of the nobility of the Second Empire. Many of these have been taken over by the Squires of the present epoch. Meistayieh was, with Vulcanieih and Yall. Thiss. (to use the old Provincial names) the origin of our present governing classes, and the source of the Third Empire. The great offensive of General Treckol, accompanied by the young Louron Ruthopheax, against Republican Atlantis, began here in 624.

I pass through Vailat, and after another hundred miles or so, arrive at the great fortress of Vulcanipand. (Thulpas: These two towns were the scene of several important battles in the Great Continental War). Vulcanipand is the lowest permanent crossing-point over the river Gestes, and is hence of immense strategic importance. This road to the south is now called the "Raziraraita", and it soon crosses both the Gestes and the river Vulcan. I now enter Yalland areas, with the Vulcans only a few miles to my east. Though fully part of the Atlantean Empire now, of course, in the time of the later First Empire, these were very much frontier lands. I travel on south, across flat and fairly arid lands, until I reach the river Yalldairu. At this point I leave the Raziraraita, and take a road south-westwards along the north bank of the river. This leads me to an increasingly urban area, the origin of the "Yalland City States" ("Yallandix Thissaidix"). Here I pass through town after town near the river, most notably Groldairo and Yemdir. Crossing the river at Groldairo, I soon reach the banks of the mighty river Gairase and the city of Ceriultis. This city is almost on the edge of civilization. Our border is only a little way south of the river, and beyond that stretch hundreds of miles of desert, the "Gesdraudho". Some miles of this form part of our Military Border, all the more necessary at the moment as the small tribes which have hitherto led an independent life throughout this region seem to be falling more and more under the sway of the Basquecs.

THE ROAD SOUTH: ACROSS THE HELVENGIO

I start my new journey from Atlantis, travelling southwards along the road to Ygohe. After a few miles the road squeezes through the "Loubuomu" pass, between the sea and the Algrunx hills. The Algrunx are a vital strategic position, which must be held by an Atlantean army defending Atlantis against rebels or invaders. Here was fought the First Battle of the Algrunx in 352, which saved the capital from the invading Helvrans. A great monument to the battle crowns the highest part of the hills, erected by Ruthoyon II. My road carries on to Ygohe. This was once the seaside centre of the great villas and estates of the aristocracy of the First and early Second Empire. Their villas covered the whole area between Ygohe, Cennis and Yeldis. However, it became less important when the capital moved to Cennatlantis after 500, followed by the nobility and their estates. Later the Republicans confiscated all the land of the nobles, and Ygohe has more recently become the haunt of lower class people. (Thulpas: After the fall of the Third Empire, all this area, as well as the town of Ygohe, were opened up to the whole population in a democratic way. As a result, Ygohe and its hinterland became very popular holiday areas for all classes of people. This is now again the case, but in between, in the time of the Tyrants, here and to the north were accursed places, full of "hunting and torture grounds".)

At this stage, I take the road eastwards, the "Yeltrata". The whole region here has a melancholy aspect, as of somewhere which time has passed by. I can see the remains of great villas and landscaped gardens, interspersed with modern little houses. Many of the old country houses and estates are now in ruins, but some have been reoccupied by Scale 3 magnates, who also run businesses in local towns. Who would have imagined ten or twenty years ago that landowners would also be able to be active businessmen in towns like Atlantis or Cennis?! I pass on my right the road that leads to Cennis ("New Town"). This is a new town in comparison to Yeldis, but it has been here since at least the year 100. I continue on to Yeldis itself, a fascinating place, full of history and ancient buildings. It was once an important religious centre, and still has the ruins of an early church in its centre. Round about, too, are even older places of worship, standing alone on low hills, surrounded by groves of trees, and open to the skies. There were battles near both Cennis and Yeldis during the Helvran Wars, and memorials were set up there by Atlaniphon II. (Thulpas: It was one of the earliest and most outrageous deeds of the Nihilists to desecrate the monument at Cennis in 787. They smeared it with paint, and chipped obscene figures out of the stonework.)

The monument to the Battle of Yeldis (Atlaniphon II)

My road goes on east past the great Dallase Fembe on my right. The road then turns south and ascends the great Lillerunx, the long and narrow range of hills which stretch as far as the town of Runnouth. It is a cold and cloudy winter's day as I climb up these hills, and at the top everything seems empty and eerily quiet, with just the wind whistling through the trees, but with no sign of life anywhere. Indeed the top of these hills have been kept devoid of settlements since time immemorial, for they have long been seen as perhaps the most important religious site in the Empire. Everywhere you look up here you come across groves of trees, and open-air churches, nearly all dilapidated or completely ruinous. If you go further east, the hills become completely bare of trees as well as villages. But all around you can see the remains of defensive works, for these hills were an important strategic position in the days of the First Empire. As I descend again to the town of Lillouth, there is evidence everywhere once again of the hand of man, as great clearings in the woods shows the growing importance here of woodcutting.

My road now follows south through the great pass in the Meilox Mountains that follows the river Numeras. I pass the old fortresses of Ugholtis and Numercuat, which saw such long sieges and stirring scenes during the Helvran Wars. They are on the border of Helvris and the old Helvran Empire, as is evidenced by the very name of Numercuat, which combines "Num", linked to "Numedean" from the ancient Empire, and "cuat", which is "kuat" in Helvran, and means "town". For all their history, both these places seem shrunken now within their ancient defences. I reach Cennetis, and take a boat across to the island of Helvremon. This island still reeks of Helvran history, even the town of Giezuat. For all that this has been the Atlantean naval base in the Helvengio for centuries now, it was formerly the most important Helvran port and base. Three great naval battles were fought off this port during the Helvran Wars; since then, the Helvengio has been almost completely free of warfare, thanks to the presence of our navy here.

I must now press on to the southern shores of the Helvengio, and in particular the town of Miolrel, which lies at the narrow opening of this inland sea. Miolrel itself is just a little inland, although there is a small village on the coast, and from here I can easily see, on a clear day like today, the north shore of Numidis, about 9 miles away. On the coastline, too, is the great lighthouse, built, or rather rebuilt, by Atlaniphon II, for there had been a lighthouse here since before 200. If I travel a few miles to the west, I can also see the Cressix Mandengix (the "Blue Isles"), just off the western coast. But almost more impressive than these natural sights is something made by man: the great array of gigantic statues of the Emperors, which gaze northwards from the coast to the north-east of Miolrel. These statues are of course well-known, but are none the less impressive for that. The first one, of Atlaniphon I, was erected by his successor, Atlaniphon II, and thereafter various other later Emperors of the Second Empire built other figures of Atlaniphon II and III. During the Republic, these statues were damaged, and the heads knocked off and replaced by those of Republicans. Three additional, but smaller and cruder, statues of other republicans were also set up next to the Imperial ones at this time. When order was restored under Emperor Ruthopheax I, these Republican statues were of course demolished, and the heads of the Atlaniphons replaced with copies of the originals, made by our best sculptors. Our present Emperor, Ruthopheax III, has also built another statue here, commemorating Ruthopheax I.

As I gaze at these statues, I can see how time as well as Republican depredations have worn away at the Second Empire statues, but all three are still magnificent figures, over 200 feet tall. They stand in line, with the stumps and bases of the Republican statues still visible on either side of them. The recent statue of Ruthopheax is the most impressive of all, standing perhaps 300 feet high, sharply carved, and shining with paint. The Emperor, who is riding a horse, appears pointing north-east towards Cennatlantis, unlike his predecessors, who merely stand gazing northwards, presumably towards the city of Atlantis. (Thulpas: Several more statues were added later, by Ruthopheax IV and Brancerix I and II, of their predecessors, or in the case of Ruthopheax IV, of himself (but this was destroyed by Brancerix I). These statues are standing still, within the small enclave surrounding Miolrel, which is still Atlantean territory within the territories stolen by the Rabarrans.) I should add that there were monuments here even before our Empire came into being. Sometime in the second century, the Yallands, under the orders of the Helvrans, whose Empire stretched all around the Helvengio, erected a statue symbolic of their Empire. After our war with them, we demolished this statue, but it was rebuilt by Atlaniphon II, as a gesture of reconciliation after the Helvran Revolt of 431-2. It is still visible a couple of miles to the west of the Atlantean statues, but part of it collapsed about 80 years ago, and it is impossible now to see what it originally looked like.

I now take the "Laivrado", as the road eastward is called. "Rado" is the Yalland word for our "Raita" ("road"), and "Laiv" is an Atlanicization of "loiv", which means "long" in Yalland, hence "long road". (Thulpas: I must interpolate here that more recent scholars have disputed this seemingly obvious explanation. It is true that "oi" in other languages often becomes "ai" in Atlantean, but it may be that "laiv" is in fact the Helvran word "laiv", meaning "hot" or "heat", related to Atlantean "Laipho", "heat". This whole area was of course once part of the Helvran Empire. Hence a meaning of "hot road" or "road of heat". Also the word "road", which was originally "rata" (with long "a" in the middle) in the ancestral language of Atlantean and Yalland should linguistically have become "raudo" in Yalland in any case. The form "rado", which is what we actually find, may have descended from a form of the word with a short "a" in the middle, which would have become "rado" in Yalland, as we indeed find.) This road runs eastwards some way inland from the coast, through scrubby countryside, till I reach the river Sheinteph. I cross this river and turn south for a while, the road rising into wooded hills, the "Ephorill". Later I turn east again, and travel some way south of the great range of mountains, the "Olgrunix", which overlook the coast to the north. I reach the river Trothyum, and am now well and truly in the territory of the ancient civilisation of the Manralians. Everywhere here are ancient villages, and the remains of great temples, built who knows how many centuries ago. My road travels on to the river Tephyens, and then south to the town of Nostohs. This town is right on the border of our Province: beyond it is the Military Border. Little more than a hundred miles to the south are the great deserts of the ## Aolduathu and the Gesdraudho.

I decide now to interrupt my journey to Atlaniphis, at the end of the "Laivrado", to have a look at the cities on the south shore of the Helvengio. These Manralian cities are full of ancient remains of the old Manralian civilisation, and have an especial fascination for me. I visit Raihco, Noutens and Dohgash, which is some way inland to the south. All of these are worth seeing, particularly Dohgash, which was the ancient capital of the Manralians, and a huge religious centre or "Epehe" in Manralian. It still has great stone- and brick-built enclosures, and rows and rows of monuments to the high priests of old. There are still a small number of adepts who keep up the old religion, and processions of priests can still be seen moving and chanting amongst these temples. The population at large, however, have nearly all forgotten everything about their old beliefs, which they retain, if at all, purely as muddled superstitions. Noutens was also a religious centre, as well as a centre of learning, in particular of medicine. This side of it has survived in the form of the great school of medicine there now, for which it is world famous. The town itself is surrounded by religious monuments, and the woods all about are full of clearings devoted to religious observations. Nowadays the city is best-known as perhaps the foremost trading centre on the south coast of the Helvengio, and its position at the mouth of the Gairase allows it to dominate trade all the way up to Razira and further south.

Finally I turn back to my road and soon arrive in Atlaniphis. This is a "modern" city, and is chiefly important as a fort guarding the crossing of the river to Yall. Thiss. and Razira. (The fortifications of this city were much improved over the next thirty years, and it played a vital role during the Continental War, witnessing three battles and several sieges between the Atlanteans and Basquecs. It fell to the Rabarrans in the end, thanks to the neglect of the Tyrants.)

A brief history of Atlantean costume

The description below of Atlantean dress and its history is taken from a popular guide-book written by the curator of the Museum of Costume around 760 to 765. Museums had existed in the Empire since the first one was set up in Cennatlantis in 566 by Meison I. This was largely a collection of artifacts glorifying the Emperors of the Second Empire, and was not open to the general public. One or two small towns set up similar exhibitions soon after, and under the Republic these, and additional, museums were thrown open to the population at large. Again, though, these establishments were very tendentious, and were full of propaganda extolling the Republic. They were closed down after the triumph of the Imperialists, but after 660, the latter reopened a big national museum in Cennatlantis. However the future of museums was really laid by smaller towns at the end of the seventh century. Many of these places opened what were really local history centres, filled with documents and objects relating to the history of the communities, and allowed entry by all local people. These centres were initially funded by the local councils, but after 720, private museums appeared, with higher entrance charges. At the same time, the State set up a much grander museum of all Atlantean history in Cennatlantis in the 730s.

After 750, the notion of museums really took off, and every town vied with each other to establish museums of local interest. Many of these were privately owned, and museums of costume, that is, of displays of preserved dress from historical times, started to appear. If costumes of older periods were no longer extant, drawings were used, and occasionally specially made copies. But it was in Atlantis that one man had the idea of opening a really national history of costume, stocking it with examples of dress, real and copies, on dummies, and with explanatory guides. This was Iairos Nixalen, and parts of his brief guide to the Atlantean museum are reproduced below. It will be noted that by and large, only male dress is dealt with; this changed to include women in the later years of the Fifth Empire. Later on, too, this, and similar museums, developed further, keeping up-to-date with modern costume, and using live actors to walk around wearing costume of the past.

We know next to nothing of the costume of our distant ancestors, before the Empire of Atlantis was founded, and can guess at what they wore, only by the comments of writers of the First Empire. For this reason, we have made no attempt to reproduce the dress of this time in our museum, other than by drawings. These show you men with loose shirts and jackets with trousers tucked into boots. The dress of Atlanteans of the First Empire becomes gradually clearer as we move towards the full light of the Second Empire. Our reproductions of costume from the years between 200 and 300 are partly guesswork, but we now have also a few drawings to base them on. You will see that the loose shirts, usually of grey or white, are now placed within a belt, and covered with a shorter jacket and sometimes a cloak. Trousers are increasingly worn with gaiters, which seemed to have spread from the lower to the upper classes over the years. Hats, which were earlier only worn by workers engaged in outdoor work, are now worn more often by the more leisured classes as well. At all times Atlanteans had to wear a clear sign of the Class to which they belonged. By the middle of the third century, this was a broad strap, which stretched across the upper body, over the area of the heart, from top left to the right of the waist. Design and colour of the stripe represented the exact Class. Such marks were worn by all Classes and both sexes, from the age of 14 upwards. In the earlier third century, most men were clean-shaven, albeit with longer hair, although the upper classes and officers in the army often sported beards and long moustaches, as we can see from the surviving images from the Helvran War. By the time of the Family Wars and after, in the next century, facial hair had spread to all classes. This time, the lower classes often had straggly beards, while the elite had neat beards, moustaches and quite short hair. Gradually the fashion for beards died out, as the fourth century wore on, and by the time of the great Atlaniphon, most fashionable men were clean-shaven. Moustaches remained in fashion for a while in some cases, and both Atlaniphon I and II wore them.

After 300, jackets turned into jerkins, and trousers, or sometimes breeches, were gaitered up to the knees. This costume then developed into the standard wear of the First Empire in its greatest period, up until about 480. Men wore a woollen tunic, which extended some distance below the waist, over the top of trousers with gaiters or woollen socks, which reached about halfway up the leg towards the knee. The tunic was always worn under an elaborate belt, which became almost a symbol of Atlantis.

As the 400s passed, the tunic grew longer and longer, half-way down the thighs, while gaiters and shoes were replaced by longer gaiters and boots. A cloak would be worn in cold weather. Hats were rare in the earlier part of the century, but became more common later, being oval and domed. Colours of tunics were pale, usually white, cream or yellow, while trousers and cloak were of a darker hue, normally green or blue. Straps representing the six Classes continued to be worn, though after Class distinctions of position were officially abolished in 422, these straps gradually became more and more decorative.

The classical military costume of this period consisted of a tallish oval hat, made of stiff material; a thick tunic, belted, which extended half-way down the leg towards the knees, and was of the standard Second Empire colour, yellow or orange. A cloak was worn, usually dark in colour, while the legs had tight trousers with shoes, or later, boots. Haversacks were worn, with the crossbow over one shoulder, and the quiver of arrows at the waist. Leather breast armour was worn above the waist, with a notable orange boss placed over the heart. Later on in the 500s, infantry wore more armour to protect itself against the stronger firepower it now had to face. This took the form of metal breast armour, and similar protection for the arms, groin and upper legs.

Later on in the Second Empire, as the age deteriorated from a golden to a silver one, men's costume and appearance changed, also for the worse, in my opinion. By 500, influenced by the unconventionality of the new Romantic Movement, it became fashionable to grow the hair longer, and to sport beards. At the same time, dress became more elaborate and colourful, as our museum examples show. The tunic, which previously had been either white, beige or a light yellow (the symbolic colour of the Second Empire), became virtually a coat, knee-length or longer, in a variety of mostly dark colours – usually red or green -, and with some decorations. It fastened with buttons; the traditional cloak was unfortunately no longer worn. The Atlantean belt remained, but was worn underneath after the mid-500s. The Class stripe also continued to be worn; though its wearing was still enforced by law, it could be of any shape or style, and could be of more than one colour. Beneath the coat was a thin, short shirt, often brightly coloured. Legs were covered in tight trousers, often blue or black; and shoes in due course superseded boots again. Hats were now always worn.

At the end of the Second Empire, as Romanticism waned, and the Country became more militarised, a plainer, less colourful and more military style became popular. This involved plain, thigh-length coats, and leather top-boots over trousers. Beards went out of fashion, and were initially replaced by moustaches, which matched shorter hairstyles. Military dress developed along the same lines, and it can be difficult to tell civilians and soldiers apart in the early Imperialist period before and around 600.

ATLANTEAN OF REPUBLICAN PERIOD, c595

The Revolution marked a sea-change in costume, at first more obviously in the dress of the Republicans. As a reaction against aristocracy and privilege, Republicans favoured styles of dress which, originally, were more like those worn by the common man. This meant simpler and looser dress, and most notably an open neck, as worn hitherto by working men: the upper classes had always worn a high-necked shirt. Baggy shirts were worn over baggy trousers, with no "upper-class style" tailoring, and no belt, above all. The trousers were initially worn straight down to the shoes, without boots or gaiters; later, however, boots were worn over them in the army, and this spread back to civilian use. Hats were also abandoned as being too closely associated with the old Empire. Red or pink was a favourite colour of the Revolutionaries, and Republican soldiers were distinguished by their bright red shirts and loose, informal clothing. Hair was loose and long, with sideboards, but not usually with any other facial hair.

This style of dress was ridiculed by the Imperialists, but in fact their own costume gradually moved towards the same style. They too adopted a partially open neck after 600, but kept to a more tightly tailored and longer topcoat. Both they and the Republicans abandoned all body armour. Beneath the coat, they wore the traditional tunic with belt, and trousers tucked into high top-boots. Hats too became optional for a while. Hair became shaggier for a while, though after about 610, a short, military style came into favour. Moustaches continued to be worn until about 620, then the clean-shaven look came into fashion, which was to prevail right through until the end of the Third Empire. The most significant change for the Imperialists after 615 was the gradual adoption of breeches, rather than trousers. This was due to military influence, and also, in the first instance, the practice of the country Squires who were now taking over the Army, and would shortly take over the Empire. With the introduction of breeches, the traditional showy Atlantean belt became merely functional, to hold up the breeches. Imperialist military uniform remained very similar to civilian dress at this time, being essentially dark brown, with much leather.

After the fall of the Republic, a style of dress came into being, which lasted throughout the third Empire, and which, to us, seems to befit it exactly. It is still a recent period, and we have many examples in the museum – indeed many of us have grandparents who have never abandoned this mode of dress! There was a considerable difference between the costume worn by Squires, and that of the lower Classes. However, certain rules were laid down by Ruthopheax, which all Classes had to obey. He insisted that red, the colour of the Republicans, should never again be worn. Also, the dress of the new elite of landowning Squires, specifically breeches and stockings or gaiters, should be worn in lieu of trousers or tight-fitting hose. Men of the Squire Classes were generally clean-shaven, with medium-length hair, and always wore large, flat hats. They wore a dark-brown or green coat –virtually a jacket after the 720s -, over a white or faun shirt with a brightly coloured cravat, and sometimes a waistcoat. The cravat had superseded the open neck by the 640s. The shirt was usually heavily decorated or embroidered, while the waistcoat, if worn, became a pullover after the 730s. Breeches were always worn, above the knee, with stockings and shoes, though riders and soldiers usually wore boots instead. The lower classes wore somewhat simplified versions of this costume...

The costume of the Army was particularly striking at this time, developing as a result of deliberate decisions by Ruthopheax, who wanted to distinguish the Atlantean Army from that of all other nations. While essentially similar to that of upper-class civilians – tailored coat over shirt and neckerchief, plus breeches and shoes or boots, the colours were variations of white, gold and brown. The exact pattern and ornamentation varied amongst the units of the army, and obviously the officers had the most elaborate uniforms. Generally speaking, jackets were white or beige, embroidered with gold patterns, shirts were white or cream with more gold or blue decoration for officers, breeches were dark – brown, or, later, blue or grey -, and stockings were faun or dark grey.

Towards the end of this period, that is to say, after about 710 or 720, civilian dress became simpler and less elaborate, while at the same time, the colour-range worn became much greater. The prevalence of brown and green, symbolic of the Third Empire, gave way to grey, blue, green and even red. In the Army, a growing awareness of the need for camouflage against the new muskets and rifles coming into use, led to the abandonment of the colourful and bright uniforms of earlier times, in favour of more practical, if duller hues, predominantly blue and grey. This change took place in several stages, firstly amongst the Frontier Armies, and later for the Security Forces. Officers were the last to lose their elaborate white, gold and brown dress, at the start of the Great Continental War...

As we reach our own time, there has been another costume revolution, which coincided with the fall of the Third Empire. Breeches, gaiters, hats and cravats have all been unceremoniously ousted. Instead, the dress of the lower Classes, which was already coming into more general use after the 730s, has been adopted by the whole of society, partly as an expression of revolt against the Third Empire elite, which was overthrown in 750. The old-fashioned fitted coat has gone as part of everyday wear; it has been replaced in cold weather only by a long, loose coat. For normal wear, trousers are now universally worn, with shoes, in place of the upper-class breeches and long socks. On top, the showy waistcoat of olden days has remained, but now in one colour, and usually worn open, over a shirt buttoned up to the neck. Very recently, the woollen pullover, which had come into fashion before the Continental War for all except the highest Classes, seems to be also rising in popularity. Hair has become longer, but most people are still clean-shaven.

The Army has remained in the duller colours of blue and grey, which were adopted before the War. Needless to say, the coat, breeches and socks, which were worn before and during the first part of the War, have vanished completely. Already after 745-746, the coat was shortened to a tighter-fitting, waist-length sort of tunic, while tighter trousers in thick socks were issued in place of the breeches and socks of the first years of the War. Medium-length boots were worn on the feet. As early as 732, a tighter, bonnet-like cap was issued in place of the larger hats of earlier years. What the future holds for fashion is difficult to foresee, but I think dress will become increasingly free, colourful and outrageous...

The author obviously finishes his chronicle in the 760s, but his predictions for the future were quite accurate. Costume for the rest of the century did become more outrageous, and it actually became fashionable after the 780s for men to wear women's dresses, and vice versa occasionally. Hair became longer, and a vogue for facial hair, such as sideboards, moustaches and beards developed after the 780s.

In the Army, uniforms remained similar to those of the latter stages of the Great Continental War, albeit with trousers rather than gaiters or socks, ankle-high boots instead of mid-calf-length ones, and shorter jackets. Also leather helmets were tentatively replaced by metal helmets of a sort not seen since the First Empire, as a result of experiences fighting Rabarran artillery in the 790s. Chest-armour was also reintroduced at this time.

The Tyrants hated the extreme civilian costumes of this era, and favoured military-style dress – their adherents, civilian and military, wore black one-piece overalls, emblazoned with the Tyrants' adopted thunderbolt insignia, and with boots and close-fitting hats (steel helmets and body-armour in the Frontier Army). The general population also adopted overall-style dress, with tight trousers. Fierce moustaches with longish hair became the order of the day.

For the duration of the Fifth Empire, fashion reverted at first to "traditional" baggy shirts, belts and loose trousers, with jackets and sometimes thigh-length coats. However, the differences between this era and the Second Empire were very marked, because of the use of a greater variety of materials, subtler and mixed colours, and all sorts of small tailoring effects. Moreover, for the first time, most women wore a similar outfit to men. Later, from the 850s onwards, as the grip of conformism lessened, costume became completely eclectic, and people wore styles from every era of past Atlantean history, according to the whim of fashion at that moment. At times, earlier styles of other nations were tried out, altered here and there to suit contemporary taste. Once the Final Wars had begun, after 870, costume sobered down, and became more like the styles of the 830s and 840s, or, as time passed, facsimiles of the military dress worn by the Army.

Fashion in men's hair varied, but was initially medium-long with sideboards. Later most were clean-shaven, though later on a fashion for straggly beards arose, both amongst ascetic philosophers and religious people, as well as the hedonists of the 860s and the Emperor Gailonex himself, in his later years. This mostly died out again in the Final Wars. The Emperor and Court, which during the Fourth Empire, had dressed very plainly, adopted much more formal and ceremonial dress after the 830s, based on the styles of the First and Second Empires. The favourite colour was mauve, which became the "standard" colour of the Fifth Empire. This was not a traditional Atlantean colour, in any way – green and yellow were -, but was borrowed from the ceremonial costumes of the Helvrans and some Chalcran states of the First Empire period.

The Army reverted to a modified Fourth Empire uniform, retaining metal helmets and body-armour at first, though most of the latter was done away with after the experience of the great Northern War, which showed that it had little effect. Colour changed to a dull green as camouflage.

The immolation of the Third Empire

There follows a contemporary description of the dramatic end of the rulers and regime of the Third Empire. This is taken from the memoirs of Sualopho (spelt "Sualofo" after the Spelling Reform in 760) Thildoyon himself. He was the leader of the rebels at this time, and soon after became the first Emperor of the new Fourth Empire of Atlantis. He wrote the memoirs in the late 750s, and they dealt with the period in the 740s, up to the time he became Emperor in 750. There is clearly a belated attempt at self-justification here, as Thildoyon was as shocked as many other people at the apocalyptic conclusion to the fighting in Cennatlantis).

Most of the fighting on the part of the rebels took place on October 11th-12th, and was carried out by my rebel army. Buentel still obviously wanted to negotiate with the tyrants now hemmed in their palaces and mansions – but my rebels and I would have no more of that. We wanted to rid the Empire of this class-ridden and despotic regime once and for all. We fought the Imperial army for two whole days in the streets of the capital, and in an endless series of bloody battles, we either killed them or forced them back to the centre of the city. Neither side was in the mood to take many prisoners. We had to winkle the enemy out of every building, and charge and overrun endless barricades. Finally, we had reached the central government area, which was virtually surrounded by us to the west and south, and Buentel's army to the east.

Thus by October 13th we had trapped before us nearly the whole administration of the Third Empire - Emperor and Imperial Officers of State included. All were now cowering in Atlanicerex's old Imperial Palace, defended by the remnants of Riuden's army. This Palace had been used as the main centre of government throughout the War, and the Emperor had taken up his residence here, abandoning his peacetime country estates, which my rebels had not long before liberated. Although we had killed so many of Riuden's troops, there still remained a number of die-hards, and they were holed up behind walls, which were immensely strong – too strong for us to storm without terrible casualties. But I was able to suggest a way round to my generals. The grounds of the Palace were large, and we were able to infiltrate men into parts of these grounds, bypassing the strongly defended walls. Thereby we were able to attack the defenders from inside.

Meanwhile the Emperor and two hundred of his supporters had by now retreated to the old council chamber. [This was a large room, built, unusually for its era, largely of wood]. We eventually forced the remains of the enemy army back inside this room as well, and so completely surrounded them. They were obviously now totally at our mercy, and although some of the more enthusiastic of my men were all for charging in on them, I felt that it behoved me as the forthcoming founder of a new Imperial line and dynasty to offer these miserable slaves of a corrupt and despotic regime – yes, even the so-called Emperor, Riuden, himself, who was after all, only a stopgap Emperor -, the chance to surrender. Their emissary indignantly rejected this offer. I considered conferring with Buentel, but decided that the decision should lie in my hands, as the new Emperor – and besides, my men would obviously brook no further delay at this hour of decision. They hurled flaming torches and incendiary bombshells at the Palace, which soon caught fire, and flames roared up into the sky. From walls surrounding the Palace, some of my men, as well as myself, were able to see inside the building through the large windows in the walls, and later through the roof, when it had caught fire and was collapsing. There we saw a sight, which will live with me, and most of the other onlookers, I am sure, for the rest of my life. The trapped inhabitants of the Palace, disdaining surrender or flight, and clearly realising that their deaths were now certain, calmly sat down, and awaited their imminent immolation. I could see in there, with my own eyes, at least two hundred people, including all the Officers of State, many administrators, some soldiers, and in the midst of them all, on his throne, the Emperor Riuden himself. They just sat there, silently and patiently, awaiting the dreadful fate, which was about to befall them all. Soon the whole building went up in flames. Some soldiers now tried to escape, and were forced back into the fire, but all agree, myself not least, that not one of the Squires moved from his seat, as the flames consumed the building and all its inhabitants. This was surely the finest hour of the Third Empire, and goes some small way to redeem the crimes committed by its minions since the accession of the first Emperor of that regime. As far as we know, only three injured people survived from this funeral pyre, and presumably escaped into hiding.

" Thaisonix thaisan tehen raiphaxa rota sayan".

"The Squires have robbed power from the people". (Sualopho Thildoyon, 750)

This terrible event virtually ended the brief civil war. Lingon, after a couple of days' hesitation, realised he had lost, abandoned his army, and fled to seek and find sanctuary in Rabarrieh. All other opposition rapidly collapsed, and within days, the Third Empire was declared over, and Thildoyon took the throne of the Fourth Empire. But in the eyes of many workers, democrats and disaffected republicans, he was there on sufferance until he had proved his worth in their eyes.

The overthrow of the Fourth Empire, by Suenno Ramestel.

November 14th was the anniversary of the coronation of the Emperor Sualofo Thildoyon in 750 – the beginning of the Fourth Empire, the tragic end of which we were about to witness. As was customary, a celebratory military display had been organised on a parade-ground on the outskirts of Cennatlantis, which would involve several units of the Army, as well as other people, all to be watched by crowds of onlookers. I was with Ciblon and the Emperor, and various members of the Government and royal Family on a low dais in front of a parade ground. Rathayan planned to use this occasion to massacre as many members of the government, royalty and commoners, men and women, as he could, using units which he knew were loyal to him and the Party. Other loyalists would seize control of Cennatlantis at the same time, and he and his Party would simultaneously take control of the Government.

Now Suenno Ciblon had heard rumours of such a plot, and suspected that the anniversary celebrations would be the occasion on which it would be put into action. He quietly warned the Emperor, as usual to no avail, so then made sure a loyal bodyguard stood near him. He then positioned himself in a relatively secure place, and ordered me not to attend the ceremony at all, under a pretext. Ciblon suspected many of the troops now massed about Cennatlantis were in fact loyal to the Brotherhood, but had ascertained the loyalty to the Emperor of some other units, with which he could try to fight back against a coup..... And so the terrible deed took place. In the middle of the military display, a unit of the troops, led by Rathayan, suddenly veered towards the dignitaries' stand, and opened fire on them with their rifles. As Ciblon told me, he instantly ordered a small group of loyal troops there to fire back, and this temporarily surprised Rathayan's forces. However, they soon regained control, and ruthlessly shot down as many people as they could. Many Ministers and members of the Government were wounded or killed, and the Emperor was able to escape with only minor wounds due to the self-sacrifice of his loyal bodyguards. Both Emperor Sualofo and Ciblon escaped.

I joined Ciblon in the centre of the city, where he was trying with some success to rally supporters against Rathayan. For the rest of the day, there ensued fierce fighting between the rebels and our loyal troops for the control of the government buildings in the city. The rebels fought with great cruelty, and many were the innocent or unarmed victims who they slaughtered in cold blood. The Emperor himself had taken refuge in the New Palace [the Imperial Palace and Court built after 750 to replace the older one in Cennatlantis destroyed in the fighting which overthrew the Third Empire. It was a few miles outside Cennatlantis itself, but much closer than the main Third Empire Palace, which was about 15 miles away, and now used as a museum]. The following morning the Palace was surrounded by rebels, who called on the Emperor and his supporters to surrender. They refused, and the Palace was then bombarded by cannon. The defenders could do little to protect themselves, and one of the first to be killed was the Emperor himself, who was crushed to death by falling masonry. Soon after, many others were killed or wounded in the same way, and in the afternoon, the remainder surrendered. Immediately afterwards, they were all, including several members of the Royal Family, shot down.

The full weight of Rathayan's army was now concentrated on Cennatlantis itself, and Ciblon and I, with some supporters, realised that we had to move out to find support for our cause elsewhere. We fled by devious ways to Atlantis, many times only narrowly escaping capture. We were finding it increasingly difficult to rally support, as we discovered how widely Rathayan had made sure of the loyalty of armies throughout the Empire. Many on frontiers were uncontaminated by Brotherhood infiltration, but they were unwilling to intervene to support a frankly not very popular Emperor. As soon as they heard of his death, and the promises of Rathayan that he would treat the Army well, and raise its pay, they all decided to accept the change of government as a "fait accompli"....Ciblon found that Atlantis too was swarming with Brotherhood members. He attempted to rally supporters outside the old Council buildings there, but opposition forced him quickly to move again outside the city to the Algrunx hills to the south.

Here ha and I and some others rallied perhaps a couple of thousand supporters, about half of which belonged to the army.

These loyalists cheered Ciblon and proposed him as the new Emperor, but Ciblon modestly refused. Later that day (November 25th), we saw masses of rebel troops approaching. Knowing he was sure to be defeated, Ciblon resolved to defend himself to the death. However, he told me to flee at once to Phonaria, in order to keep up the memory of the old Atlantis now being overthrown, and the chance of resistance against the rebels in the future. I tearfully asked to remain with him in the battle-line, but Ciblon was adamant that I should leave at once, with a small escort. And so I did, making a tortuous route to Atlantean Phonaria, and later into exile in the west of the island, in Noumandix territory. I have kept my promise to Ciblon by writing this history of the Fourth Empire, and its overthrow by the barbarians who are now running and ruining our dear Empire.... Ciblon meanwhile, as I heard from a survivor, was true to his word, and remained on the battlefield, fighting to the death. Most of his party was killed, many, as seems to be typical of these barbaric times, slaughtered in cold blood. Some were captured, and have been cruelly imprisoned ever since. Is there no limit to the depths to which this Tyrant can stoop?

[Ramestel was to become a victim of this very cruelty that he is here decrying – in fact, a far greater cruelty than that inflicted on Ciblon’s followers. He remained in Phonaria writing until 816, and then most unwisely decided to risk returning to Yciel Atlantis. He thought that the new ruler of the Empire, Borbar Measel, would have forgotten about him, or that he would be able to hide in Yciel Atlantis, on the borders of the Empire. But his descriptions of the end of the Fourth Empire, and his denunciations of the crimes of the Brotherhood Party in his books, had made him a marked figure. Within a few days of arriving in Atlantean territory, he was seized by Borbar’s secret police, imprisoned and tortured for days. Then, as a refinement of cruelty, he was put on public display with some other political "deviants", and following Borbar’s recent practice, was tortured to death in an arena in front of thousands of citizens. The only mitigation of his suffering was that the form and length of his torture was mild compared with what would be meted out in years to come. All that happened to him was that he was stripped naked, lashed, had his toenails pulled out, his fingers chopped off, his tongue pulled out, one eye gouged out, a fire set alight under his feet: he was then suspended by the arms just above the fire, which was gradually allowed to burn up higher and set him on fire. He died after some four hours of this.]

The terrible age of the Tyrants began.

Ruthopheax as seen by his contemporaries

Ruthopheax is quite an elusive figure for the historian to pin down. Above all he was a master of projecting himself to the world at large exactly as he wanted to appear. He manufactured his own image, and Atlanteans of the Third Empire and afterwards believed this image was the real man. Much remains hidden about what actually went on in the 630s and 640s, and Ruthopheax was happy that it should be so. However we know now, and some Atlanteans of the Fourth Empire and later (i.e. after 790) came to learn, that there was another, far darker side to Ruthopheax as politician and Emperor. The extracts from Atlantean historians given below will show the differences between the two images, as well as describe the atmosphere of the period around 629, when the Imperialists finally overthrew the last Republicans.

The first passage was written by Ruthopheax's official chronicler in the later 630s, and was later included in the standard lives of the Emperor. It paints a heroic and unblemished picture of the Emperor, who appears far-sighted and detached, and glosses over the actions he took against the defeated Republicans.

Louron thus managed to be the first commander to reach the outskirts of the great city of Atlantis itself. High walls surrounded the town, manned by the last forces left to the Republican usurpers. Louron had no doubts about how to deal with this seeming obstacle, and, as he had done so often before, lined up all his artillery. In a matter of only two days, a great breach had been blown in the wall, and he was able to launch his soldiers through it on the third day. Thus he gained entrance inside the city walls, but his army still had a hard fight ahead of it, to force its way down to the sea and the centre of the city.

The enemy did indeed resist furiously at first, and at this point the Army came up again against the devilish inventions of the Republican inventor, Bueccan. This inventor of steam-powered engines misguidedly gave his services to the Republicans, and from his home town of Tilrase had overseen the construction of many such engines, which could carry soldiers and arms rapidly and securely about the battlefield and against our soldiers. These had caused some dismay and casualties at first, but our fearless men soon got used to them and learned how to deal with them. Now in Atlantis the remaining engines were thrown against us, commanded again by Bueccan, who had fled to Atlantis when our Army took Tilrase. But the engines all either broke down or roamed aimlessly around until our men were able to shoot their drivers. Bueccan himself was captured, and Louron decided that it would be best to set an example and ordered his execution - and also of other Republicans who were believed to have driven these machines. (This passage was omitted from histories published after 650, as Ruthopheax wanted to erase the knowledge of such inventions from everyone's memory.) Louron quite rightly believed these machines, and all such inventions, to be devilish and unsuitable for the Empire he was to found a year or so later.

In due course our soldiers defeated the enemy, and approached the centre of the city. Unfortunately the delay had given the Republican leaders time to prepare their escape, and they, abandoning their army and citizens, crept away on to boats and off to the "Atlano Mandengio" (island of Atlantis).

As an example of the original Atlantean, I give the following sentence in Atlantean before continuing with the translation :
 Scatisan scilondur rouhun, Louron can urgathe runan ar silil til aggix, zuen cianan enuyu daithehettu thisaggeyu eathe thehexa mentan til ruheso dituilluyan cerexayu Carel III.

At that time, Louron himself, riding his horse, went up the hill inside the walls, on which the first city temple had been built back in the reign of the unfortunate Emperor Carel III. Here too had been the great statue to Atlaniphon II, put up by Emperor Atlanicerex. The temple was a ruin, and the statue had vanished, having been destroyed by the Republicans. Our leader, his cloak billowing behind him, sat motionless on his horse on top of the hill, silhouetted against the horizon by the setting sun. He gazed around him, looking mournfully at the temple ruins, and then at the city which lay at his feet, and finally at the ships fleeing across the waters, carrying the cowardly Republican leaders. He beckoned to two of his staff to join him, and spoke to them, as I have been informed:

"This is truly the greatest day of my life. Within a few hours, or a day at most, the city of Atlantis will be ours, and the hateful blight of Republicanism will be eradicated from the Empire. I am humbled by the honour that General Treckol has granted me to be able to capture this last refuge of the enemy. I want to help him to rebuild our Empire under its old values. But above all we must purge and cleanse places like this of all the taints of that pernicious Republicanism, which they have adopted for the past 40 years."

As Louron prophesied, the last enemy soldiers surrendered within a day or two. Due to the treachery of the navy, we were unable to intercept the Republican leaders, who escaped finally to Yciël Atlantis. Louron later found out those Republican leaders who had remained in hiding in Atlantis, put them on trial and saw that they received suitable sentences. After that, he left the city, and went to join his commander, General Treckol in the rear.

The second extract was written in secret and never published. It was found as a manuscript by an historian around 785, and later similar narratives were uncovered. These seem to show that Louron, even before he was Emperor, and also throughout the 630s and 640s, acted with extreme brutality and cruelty towards anyone who was a Republican, or who even had the misfortune to have lived in a Republican city before 628.

Louron was furious that the Republican leaders had mostly escaped his vengeance in Atlantis by fleeing away across the seas. He cursed the navy for its treachery, then, even before the fighting in the city had finished, ordered every person remaining who had had any sort of authority under the old regime to be dragged forth and made ready to stand trial.

It proved difficult to find these people, and more difficult to ascertain who had been active in the former government, and who were just ordinary citizens. Louron, though, was growing ever more angry as he toured the ancient city and saw the deprivations which the Republicans had carried out there - the Imperial Palace partly destroyed, and partly turned into an arsenal, nearly all the statues of Emperors destroyed, the temples turned into offices, the nobles' houses given to ordinary citizens, etc. He showed these things to his army, deliberately to build up its hatred against the Republicans.

He ordered the leaders to be executed forthwith, now, without any trial, and in public, in the same place and same way as the Republicans had in the past executed our leaders, above all Emperor Crehonorex. They were not just beheaded, though, but savagely beaten and burned to death tied to stakes. Others were also executed, many just ordinary soldiers, who happened to have been taken prisoner.

Then Louron announced that he intended to purge this city by evicting up to a quarter of its inhabitants. This he did, forcing them out into the countryside, scattering them about, and leaving them to make their own shelters. When General Treckol heard about this, he was angered, and ordered Louron to stop any further reprisals. Louron reluctantly obeyed for the time, but after the assassination of Treckol, which some claimed Louron himself was behind, he resumed all these activities again. Indeed matters grew much worse for the inhabitants of the towns of the old Republic, for Louron now inflicted on all the large towns in this area, the same punishments he had already carried out on Atlantis city. One of his favourite sayings was: "Cities are the source of all evils. Good comes only from the country, whose representative in the Squire." Worse still - he established a secret army within an army, and whenever he evicted citizens from these towns, which he did from at intervals over and over again, rather than just settling them elsewhere in the countryside, thousands were taken off and secretly killed...

The campaign of 590-591, involving the siege of Cennatlantis, and its attempted reliefs by the Imperialists.

THE MILITARY WRITINGS OF FULGO MEISTAOS

Below we include a sizeable extract from the military narrative by Fulgo Meistaos concerning the siege of Cennatlantis and its defence by the brilliant Republican general, Russalonni Bourbronna, against repeated attempts at relief by the Imperialists. Meistaos lived under the Third Empire, specifically writing around 720 to 735. He provides a narrative of this part of the Republican-Imperialist wars largely as a basis for commentating on tactics and strategy, and demonstrating the bases of Atlantean military strategy throughout the ages. His aim was to provide the military leaders of the Third Empire with a useful strategic guide, culled from the experience of centuries of Atlantean theory and practice. He saw Bourbronna as a brilliant exemplar of good Atlantean strategy, and his Imperialist enemies, defeated repeatedly, as traditional Atlantean military strategists, who failed to keep up-to-date with the innovations of the Republican armies. Ironically, precisely the same thing was to happen to the Third Empire Army in the face of the attacks by Gosscault after 743. Meistaos himself was a civilian at this stage, and more interested in the past than the present and future. Nevertheless, he wrote a number of minatory pamphlets and books in the 730s regarding the threat posed to Atlantis by Basquecieh, which were largely ignored. He died in 744, in despair at the seemingly invincible march of enemy armies into Atlantean territory.
